Mr. McCLINTIC. I believe I have a little more time.

Mr. DYER. Then will the gentleman use his? I have only one speech on this side.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, all has been said in support of this measure except to say that I observed personally the necessity for such legislation as this during our visit to China last summer. We met as fine a crowd of Americans in China and in the Orient as you would care to meet anywhere. They were representative men from representative American concerns doing a wonderful business, but the opportunity is now open to us to extend our trade far beyond anything we have done in the past.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, unless we can spread that minute, I do not know whether I can read the paragraph or not. It says:

Hundreds of Chinese young men who have been educated in our colleges and universities and engineering schools are anxious to cooperate with Americans in the development of China, using American materials, but they are debarred by our failure to enact legislation providing the machinery for cooperation. In short we have educated these young men in our ways of doing business, but when it comes to actually doing the business we shortsightedly permit them to go to the British and Japanese.

That is the whole story, gentlemen. Unless we put our business enterprise in China upon a footing of equal advantage with that of England and Japan, we can do no business in that country, and this bill intends to bring about that equality there. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, in the five minutes I think I will have time enough to say all I have to say.

As a rule, I have been very strongly opposed to the policy of granting Federal charters. When this matter came up I considered it pretty carefully. I felt that there was real necessity for giving our people in China a chance to meet competition on equal footing with their competitors, and that to do that it would be necessary to draft a law something along the line of this bill. A charter under some State law will not do the business. There are several reasons why.

As has been adverted to, the Chinese are friendly to this country. But they know but very little about our States. What our people need in dealing with the Chinese is something that has on it the American stamp, and that as to taxation will place them on an equality with other people trading in China; and it is of the utmost importance when we invest our people with the power to do business in China we do it under restrictions of such a character that we may preserve the good will of the Chinese. That can not be done under State laws. They are not adapted to business in a country such as China, where there are practically no laws to control them.

Mr. WINGO. I read this provision:

No corporation shall maintain any office, including its principal and home and branch offices, if any, at any place other than in China.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not have time to yield.

Mr. WINGO. That is a remarkable provision.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That, as I understand, is a provision that is copied from the English law. These corporations will not function in the United States. We intend to make them practically domestic corporations of China, for the purpose of aiding our trade and commerce there. We considered that feature very carefully.

I want to call to your attention that we have in this bill a large number of very important restrictions upon the activities of these corporations. We put them under supervision that we could not put corporations created by a State law. We give to the Secretary of Commerce power, if they interfere with trade or cause dissatisfaction with the Chinese in carrying on such trade, to revoke the charters and to investigate these corporations from time to time on complaint or on the Secretary's own motion.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it not a fact that this legislation is particularly urgent now by reason of an order issued by the British Government in October of 1919 that prevents Americans from continuing business under the British ordinance?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes. Up to within a recent date we have been able to operate under English law.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. How will this exemption clause in the bill affect the revenues of the Government, so far as corporation tax and surplus-profit tax are concerned?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think it will seriously affect it. The Judiciary Committee did not undertake to decide that question. We left it to the Ways and Means Committee. I have always insisted that the Judiciary Committee ought not to determine questions of taxation. Now, it does not exempt from taxation to the extent, perhaps, that some people may imagine, but only as far as the corporation tax is concerned; but to get that exemption one-third of the net profit must be declared as a dividend each year, and that dividend pays a tax if it goes to an American citizen the same as if derived from any other corporation.

Mr. DEWALT. Then the gentleman thinks it would not materially affect the revenue of the Government in regard to that taxation?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not believe it would to any great extent. But if we are going to carry on business in China, we must give our people the same opportunity as the English and other foreign people have. They are exempted from corporation taxes, but are not exempt from income taxes upon dividends derived from their corporations when the income reaches the hands of the stockholders.

Mr. STEELE. And is it not true that the tax features of this bill have been gone over by the Ways and Means Committee and that this meets with their approval?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the gentleman from Missouri to make some effort to get an extension of time.

Mr. DYER. It is impossible to do so under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. WINGO. By unanimous consent we can extend it. Here is a proposition that is remarkable, and the only justification for it is that England has tried it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WINGO. It has some legislation in it that this House has repeatedly turned down in regard to banking and currency.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate be extended for 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In the first place part of the time was used out of order. They did not even confine themselves to the bill.

Mr. WINGO. I did not speak on the bill at all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not talking about the gentleman from Arkansas. I am talking about the man who has only one thing on his mind.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman must give him credit for that.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will state that there are a number of other matters that are to come up, and I feel constrained to object to any extension of time. This bill and the report and all have been sent to every Member of the House, and an endeavor has been made to acquaint them fully with it. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question was taken.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 114, noes 15.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. As many as are in favor of suspending the rules and passing the bill will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 262, nays 35, not voting 131, as follows:

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. Two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules are suspended, and the bill is passed.

NEW YORK STATE BARGE CANAL.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table S. J. Res. 161 and suspend the rules and pass the same with the amendments which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 161) to exempt the New York State Barge Canal from the provisions of section 201 of H. R. 10453.

Resolved, etc., That at the end of 30 days after the passage of this resolution the authority conferred upon the Secretary of War under section 201 of the transportation act, 1920, to operate for commercial purposes boats, barges, tugs, or other transportation facilities upon the New York State Barge Canal shall cease, and thereafter there shall be no such operation by the Secretary of War or any other agency of the United States. The Secretary of War shall as soon as is practicable dispose of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities purchased or constructed for use upon the said canal, and, pending final disposition, the Secretary of War may lease the same: Provided, That all the money obtained from the sale or lease of these boats, barges, and tugs shall be available until expended by the inland and coastwise waterways service of the War Department in the inauguration and development of other inland, canal, and coastwise waterways in accordance with the expressed desire of Congress in section 500 of the transportation act, 1920: Provided further, That not to exceed 25 per cent of the boats, barges, and tugs built or purchased for the United States, herein authorized to be sold, may be retained by the United States for the operation of other inland, canal, or coastwise routes of the United States until such equipment can be replaced by other equipment to be purchased from funds received from the sale prescribed above.

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to exempt the New York State Barge Canal from the provisions of section 201 of the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I demand a second, but I want the point of order settled first. The bill has been reported with amendments, which are indicated on the face of the bill as reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The Clerk stopped reading with the word "same," in line 6, page 2, and did not read the words of the bill from that point on, ending with the word "final," in line 13, page 2. He omitted all the intervening words. I suppose the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] proposes to move to pass the bill with the committee amendments and with the additional amendment, to wit, striking out all after the word "same," in line 6, page 2, down to and including the word "final," in line 13, page 2.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to pass the bill as it has been read.

Mr. SIMS. But the Clerk did not read the amendments.

The SPEAKER. He did not have to read them. He read the bill as the gentleman from New York moves to pass it.

Mr. PARKER. The motion I made was that the bill be passed with the amendments indicated as the bill was sent to the desk.

Mr. SIMS. But there was no indication of an amendment, as far as I could hear, touching the matter stricken out that I have just mentioned. He did not indicate the amendment striking out all after the word "same," in line 6, down to and including the word "final," in line 13, which were not called to our attention.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman's attention was called to it, because it was not read. It was omitted.

Mr. SIMS. But the Clerk has no right, arbitrarily, to read in or read out anything. The committee has the right to do that and the gentleman has the right to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York was recognized to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which was read, and that is the bill which is before the House.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Has a member of a committee authority to move to suspend the rules and pass a bill other than as he is authorized by the committee?

The SPEAKER. He certainly has.

Mr. SIMS. I know of no parliamentary rule by which a member of the committee without action by the committee can simply have a bill read in part, by way of amendment or having that effect. I make that point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I should say that Speaker CLARK at least 40 times stated to the House when a Member was recognized to move to suspend the rules that he could send up any amendment he wanted to, and that the Clerk would read the bill as amended.

Mr. SIMS. That is it. The point is the Clerk should read the amendments, so as to show what is stricken out.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not at all. The Clerk reads it as it will be if amended. That is the universal practice on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SIMS. I am heartily in favor of the amendment. I am not captious about it, but I did not want to have any question about it being so amended, because it has got to go back to another body.

Mr. WINGO. Regular order!

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can move to suspend the rules and pass a bill without its ever having been printed at all or considered by any committee.

Mr. SIMS. I know; but this bill has got to go back to another body, and there ought to be a definite appearance or statement of what the amendments are that are included in the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is a definite appearance of what the amendments are.

Mr. WINGO. I infer that they are too definite for the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. I demand a second.

Mr. PARKER. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has 20 minutes.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, please notify me when I have used 10 minutes.

This resolution now before the House is of the utmost importance to the people of New York State, or perhaps I should say that they they think it is, which is just the same thing.

Under the Federal control act which was passed to give the Director General control of the transportation of the country during the war there was included the water transportation on inland waters. When the transportation act of 1920 was passed, the Esch-Cummins bill, control of this inland water transportation was transferred to a bureau in the War Department.

There are three different systems that are being developed by the Federal Government. One is the Mississippi River, another is the Black Warrior River, and the third is the barge canal system of New York State. The conditions are not at all analogous on these various waterways. On the Mississippi River and on the Black Warrior River the channel is maintained by the Federal Government at Federal expense. The buoys are set at Federal expense, the lights are maintained at Federal expense. On the New York Barge Canal we have an artificial waterway, built entirely by New York State taxation, maintained entirely at the expense of the taxpayers of the State of New York.

We ask no favors, we simply believe that we should be allowed to develop these waterways in the way we think is for the best interests of the people of this country.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. Most of us have the bill as printed, but we were unable to get the wording of the bill read by the Clerk. Will the gentleman indicate what change is made between the printed bill that we have and the bill the Clerk read? The gentleman can do it in his own time.

Mr. PARKER. I will be very glad to do it; I will do it when I finish my statement. This was submitted in a referendum. We in New York spent $200,000,000 in building the barge canal system, which is free to everybody in this country. The State of New York could not derive one dollar direct benefit from the expenditure. We do not expect to. It costs incidentally $2,000,000 a year to maintain this canal system.

I do not stand here claiming that we are altruistic, but we do expect that the freight that comes over the canal and comes down the Great Lakes will go to the port of New York and that port will be maintained as the supreme port of export in this country. That is where we expect to get our benefit. You gentlemen whose products go over the canal, if it is to be any advantage to the State must go through to the port of New York, and you get the low rates.

When these activities of the director general were turned over to the War Department, the boats that were built were operated last year with a deficit to the Federal Government of almost $200,000. We claim that the only hope of getting development of commerce on this great canal system, in any way that will be a practical benefit to us, by stimulating business in Buffalo and New York, will be to have it developed by private interests and let them take over the operation of our canal. There is very little opposition to that part of the resolution. The opposition comes to the disposition of the equipment.

I wish you would give close attention to the description I am going to give of the equipment. The Government has spent, in round numbers, $3,800,000 for equipment on the New York Canal. It has spent about $6,500,000 on equipment for the Mississippi River. It has spent $1,500,000 on the Black Warrior River. Now, we do not interfere or object in the slightest degree to the Government activities on the Mississippi and the Black Warrior Rivers. The gentlemen down there, representing their constituents, apparently want those boats on those rivers and we are willing that they should have them.

There are two types of boat built by the Government. One a barge with power in it, with part cargo and part power, and which tows behind it a loaded barge, and then there is the barge that is loaded. Those are the only two kinds of boats the Government has built.

The figures I am quoting come from the War Department. The type of boat that is used on the Erie Barge Canal is 150 feet long and 20 feet wide, with a loaded draft of 9½ feet, and with 400 horsepower. On the Mississippi River the boats are 250 feet long, 40 feet wide, with a loaded draft of 6½ feet, but with a horsepower of 1,800. On the Black Warrior River is the same type of boat, 280 feet long and 49 feet wide, 7 feet draft loaded, and 900 horsepower.

Why the difference? It is perfectly obvious to us the canal system is dead water with no current. The Mississippi River is shoal and the current runs swiftly and the boats can not proceed up the river unless they have a very much higher horsepower than the boats on the canal system. The same is true of the Warrior River. The barges are practically of the same size and dimensions as the power barges.

Gen. Hines, before our committee when this question was discussed, made the statement, which my friend is going to use in a moment, that this equipment can be used on these waters. Of course it can; anything can be used that can float; but it could not be used economically. Take a boat 20 feet wide, with a load of 9½ feet, and you are going to sink her down 6 feet. What will happen? The displacement will be 3 feet, and when you put her down the other 3 feet she is not loaded to half her capacity. We want the Government to sell the equipment, the same as it has sold other war equipments.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. How many of these boats are there?

Mr. PARKER. There are 20 self-propelled barges and 21 concrete barges and 51 steel barges.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What are they supposed to be worth, roughly?

Mr. PARKER. I have stated that; I will give it again. The expenditure of the Government under war prices on the Erie Canal System was $3,800,000. The expenditure on the Mississippi was $6,500,000 and on the Black Warrior $1,500,000.

Mr. CRISP. To whom is it proposed to sell the equipment?

Mr. PARKER. We very much want it sold to private individuals, as it will be. One-quarter of the equipment is to be used between Baltimore and New Bern, N. C., where they believe they can use a little equipment advantageously. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, Federal operation on the New York Barge Canal began in September, 1918, and has continued ever since. At the time the Government commenced operation the new barge canal was not entirely completed. There were no large, well-organized lines operating thereon. The Government chartered what equipment there was then available and proceeded at once to organize a regular service. The equipment thus secured was inadequate and mechanically inefficient.

Realizing this fact, the Government, through the agency of the Railway Administration, investigated the special peculiarities of the New York canal and caused to be designed and constructed a fleet of cargo barges and self-propelled barges for use on the canal. This fleet had to be created from the design straight through to the driving of the last rivet by the Government. As a result of this action on the part of the Government there are to-day on the New York Barge Canal 20 self-propelled barges and 72 new cargo barges. Due to the fact that the Government was compelled to create this fleet, it was not until late in 1919 that the fleet of cargo barges made its effect felt, and it was not until 1920 that any of the self-propelled barges were actually put into service. Even to-day one of the self-propelled barges is yet to be delivered.

Bearing these facts in mind, I call attention to the following table, which gives briefly a statement of the performance of the Government fleet on the barge canal during 1919 and 1920:

Tonnage, revenue, expenses, and deficits, New York canal section, inland and coastwise waterway service.

	Tonnage.	Revenue.	Expenses.	Deficit.	Operating cost.
1919.					Per cent.
January		$3,479.20	$20,803.24	$17,324.04	597
February		3,776.43	17,172.52	13,396.09	454
March		[1] 16,541.36	[2] 1,546.13	14,995.23
April		2,549.41	12,808.44	10,259.03	502

[1] Deduction due to adjustment of demurrage charges, 1918, which were settled in December, 1920.
[2] Adjustment on account of overcharge for fuel, 1918, which was a credit to "expenses" in this month.
[3] Profit.

An inspection of these figures will show that up to October, 1920, there was still a total annual deficit in the operation of the canal. This, however, should not be surprising in view of the conditions under which the Government has been operating. It will be noted that the figures are continually improving. The tonnage is increasing and the cost of operation is decreasing.

It is doubtful whether any private enterprise could have accomplished what the Government has done in the way of developing a regular service on the barge canal in the face of the difficulties which this enterprise has had to meet. It is pioneer work from start to finish; the good will of the general public has to be secured, and at the same time numberless problems of varied character have to be worked out with the rail carriers—carriers traditionally opposed to successful operation of inland waterway services.

It has been said that the Erie Canal has been a highway for inland water traffic for the past century. Such, to a certain extent, has been true, but the service which was found satisfactory 25 or 50 years ago will not meet present conditions. The day of the itinerant bargeman, owning and operating his own barges at rates established for the particular occasion, is past. Such service will not develop inland waterways nor hold traffic on waterways previously teeming with boats. The service of the future must approximate as nearly as possible the service of any other great trunk-line transportation company, either railway or steamship.

It was with this end in view that the Government established its barge line on the New York Canal, and it has been with this end constantly in view that operation has continued. As above outlined, it is not believed that any transportation company could have organized a barge line such as the one organized by the Federal Government on the New York Canal and have operated it under the adverse conditions that the Federal Government has operated while building up business and overcoming the other numerous obstacles. This work is not complete. It could hardly be expected that a commercial concern would be willing to take over its operation when as yet it still shows an annual deficit. I feel confident, however, that another year of operation with all the new equipment in active service, with the benefit of the experience of the past two years in heavy barge line operation, will enable Government operation to show conclusively that a real barge transportation service on the New York Canal is practicable and profitable.

Then it will be time to consider the means by which this service can be transferred from Federal to private control. I feel certain that any hasty steps taken now toward the discontinuance of Federal service on the New York Barge Line will merely lead to a dissipation of the magnificent Government fleet. The Federal Government will find itself in a position where, after expending vast sums of money in the creation of unexcelled barge-line equipment and operating for two years with increasing success, it discontinues this operation before the public in general can reap the benefit of the Government's efforts.

In considering this problem the people of the State of New York can not be considered as alone vitally interested in this canal. True, the canal is the property of the State of New York. The traffic on this canal, however, is only in a small part the traffic of that State. Equally, if not even more, interested in the success or failure of real operation on the New York Barge Canal are the producers of the great Northwest. Before taking any action of as far-reaching significance as is contemplated, the wishes of the people of the upper Mississippi Valley and Great Lakes region should be given weighty consideration.

This resolution unamended makes it mandatory on the Secretary of War, within 30 days after its passage, or as soon thereafter as practicable, to dispose of all boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities purchased for use upon said canal; and as it passed the Senate gives to proposed purchasers who intend to use the same upon said canal the first opportunity to buy the property ordered to be disposed of by the Secretary of War, and provides for a method of arbitration if a proposed purchaser and the Secretary of War are unable to agree on the price to be paid. No discretion whatever is left with the Secretary of War as to the terms of sale. He must accept the bid offered or resort to the method of arbitration provided as to the bid offered; but in the meantime the Secretary of War may lease the property for which the unaccepted bid was made for use upon the canal; that is, upon condition of use upon the canal.

This is a departure from the usual method of disposing of Government property and is unfair and unjust to the United States. If these tugs, barges, and other property are to be sold, it should be done at public auction to the highest and best bidder, regardless of whether the highest and best bidder may or may not intend to operate the property so purchased, and the Secretary of War should be authorized to accept or reject all bids that may be made for all or any part of the property sold and be authorized to readvertise and resell the property until an acceptable bid or bids are received as may be necessary in the judgment of the Secretary to protect the public interest by securing a just and fair price for each and every piece or parcel of said property.

I do not regard it as being wise or in the public interest or in the interest of the people of New York State to sell said equipment at this time. I believe it is manifestly in the interest of the people of New York, and also to the best interest of the people who are adjacent to the Great Lakes, that the Government should retain this equipment during the shipping season on said canal for the year 1921.

In the hearings on this resolution expressions were loosely made that would leave the impression that the Government was actually in exclusive possession and control of the canal, and was monopolizing the use and operation of same to the detriment and damage of the people and State of New York, and to the exclusion of private owners of canal equipment. Such an impression is without the slightest foundation in fact. The Government operates its own barges and tugs on the canal, just as any private owner of such equipment can and does operate same, and enjoys no special privilege or benefit of any kind. The rates are prescribed for Government owned and operated barges and tugs by the identical same authority that prescribes rates for privately owned and operated craft. No tolls are collected for use of the barge canal from either the Government or private owners.

The Government has lost money in its operations on the canal, as shown above, but its losses are growing less all the time. It was necessary for the pioneer work to be done at an initial loss, whether done by the Government or by private ownership and operation.

Inasmuch as the cost of construction of this magnificent fleet and its operation so far has been borne by the public taxpayer, I earnestly insist that if the property is to be sold, it should be done in such manner and on such terms and conditions as will enable the Government to realize the highest and best prices possible for same, to the end that the Government may be reimbursed as fully as possible for the losses sustained by it in this great undertaking. This can not be done under the terms and conditions of this resolution even as amended by the committee.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a bill that should cause any feeling and I assure you there is none on my part. Neither the Black Warrior nor the Mississippi serve my section of the country, and undoubtedly the barge canal does not. But I am still a citizen of the United States and still a Member of the House and a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that reported this bill. I had nothing to move me except the public interest.

As before stated the Railroad Administration during the war, under the war control act, did not take over the barge canal, did not get in the way of anybody else using it. The barge canal had hardly been completed at that time. The Railway Administration leased some equipment and made contracts for the construction of additional equipment. Some of the new equipment was the fine new steel barges, the fine and expensive self-propelled barges. The Government paid out in all about four and a half million dollars for equipment. The new barges were put on the canal as before stated to help the whole country, as well as the people of New York. The Government did not crowd out any other facilities. There are about 700 canal boats all told, as I understand it. When we passed the transportation act instead of repealing that part of the war control act, we put it under the War Department—the Black Warrior, the Mississippi, the barge canal, and other inland waterways—and the War Department took charge of the equipment as fast as it was completed, but it was not all completed at that time.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. No.

Mr. CLEARY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. No.

Mr. CLEARY. Just a friendly inquiry.

Mr. SIMS. I know it is all friendly.

Mr. CLEARY. I want the truth to come out. The delegation of us came down to see Mr. McAdoo early in the game, when we found that he was making rates it was impossible for individual boats to reach, and he told us the reason he made those rates was because he wanted to make the railroads profitable, he did not want to allow us to carry by water as cheaply.

Mr. SIMS. Yes. While he had charge under war control. We had guaranteed the railroads a certain net return, whether it was made or not, and he made higher rates on the Government boats used on the canal than had before prevailed so that it would not take too much traffic from the railroads to which the Government had to pay certain rental regardless of whether they did business or not, but the equipment did not get in anybody's way, for much of it did not exist.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I see the resolution provides that in the sale of these boats, if they do not agree upon a price, the Secretary of War shall select one arbitrator——

Mr. SIMS. That has been stricken out.

Mr. BLACK. I thought that was an unwise provision.

Mr. SIMS. That has been stricken out—by neglect, not by any statement on the floor, except that it was not read.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to make the statement that that was done in committee. The gentleman will remember that.

Mr. SIMS. No; this part of it, the printed matter shows. I do not care to quibble about what is in the resolution.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I notice that the money derived from the sale of these boats is reappropriated and is to be expended in the development of inland and coastwise waters.

Mr. SIMS. I shall come to that after a moment.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. No; I must proceed now until I make my preliminary statement—well, I will yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. MacGREGOR. I merely wanted to find out who slipped the Erie Canal into this transportation act? It was not in it when it passed the House. It got in somewhere along the line.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know who "slipped it in," but it was a burden to the United States Treasury to the extent of $4,500,000, and now comes this Senate joint resolution, brought up now under a motion to suspend the rules. How does the resolution begin? Does this resolution start out like a resolution or a bill that is intended to protect the public rights as well as private capital and its rights? No. This is the way it reads:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That at the end of 30 days after the passage of this resolution the authority conferred upon the Secretary of War under section 201 of the transportation act, 1920, to operate for commercial purposes boats, barges, tugs, or other transportation facilities upon the New York State Barge Canal shall cease, and thereafter there shall be no such operation by the Secretary of War or any other agency of the United States.

Why does it start out by providing for an embargo on the use of this equipment after 30 days that was paid for by the Government out of the taxes of the people and then provides for a disposition of it afterwards? How does the resolution read, even as amended? The Secretary of War is authorized to "dispose" of the boats, barges, and so forth. The resolution makes no provision as to how this property shall be sold. It is by inference only, and not otherwise, that the property is to be sold but not how; whether by competitive bidding, by public sale, with power in the Secretary of War to accept satisfactory bids and reject unsatisfactory bids and readvertise the property and resell it? He is compelled to "dispose" of it, with no power on earth to reject bids.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman knows why that is fixed in that way. It is done because we want to dispose of the boats.

Mr. SIMS. You want it sold without power in the Government, through the Secretary of War, to protect itself against any kind of a grabbing combination of bidders. Why do you want to pass this resolution now? It passed the Senate last May.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Not for a moment. The hearings were completed on this resolution in May of last year, and the gentleman had all of the time between that time until Congress adjourned to have this resolution considered by the House. You could have brought the resolution up and passed it in the ordinary way. We have been here since the first Monday in December last, and you could have brought this resolution up and passed it in the ordinary way, open to amendment offered on the floor of the House. But no, you come in the last days of this Congress with a motion to suspend the rules and pass this resolution, with such amendments as are in it, by reason of leaving the language of the bill out, which clearly shows its purpose.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to one question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. Did not the gentleman hold up the reporting of this bill by a no quorum call and delay it for a week?

Mr. SIMS. Not that I have any recollection of. If I did, I do not remember it. When? At the last session?

Mr. PARKER. I mean right within the last three weeks.

Mr. SIMS. In this Congress?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. The bill was not reported until a few days ago.

Mr. PARKER. I mean in the committee.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, the gentleman is doing something now which the Speaker once made me take my seat for doing, without a point of order, and that is telling what the committee did in executive session.

Mr. PARKER. Oh, I asked a question.

Mr. SIMS. It would be just as well to tell the balance of it.

Mr. PARKER. Oh, I asked a question; I did not make the statement.

Mr. SIMS. I think the gentleman is mistaken; I think it was on the Winslow bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Let me get through with my preliminary statement and I will answer questions if I have time. Now, why should I be prevented or you from offering amendments to provide that this property shall be sold as all other Government property is usually sold, to the highest and best bidder? Give the Secretary of War the right to accept or reject and readvertise and resell it. But you see the resolution starts by prohibiting the use of these barges after 30 days where they are of most use to the people and will not let them earn anything during the time the "disposal" takes place. Why do you want to do that? The value of this equipment consists in its use, consists in its earnings. Stop the use and earnings while the Government has to pay interest on the investment, and lose the value of its use by operating them until something is done in the way of sale or lease. Now, does that look like dealing fairly with the taxpayers of this country? Investigation after investigation, charge after charge, has been made on this floor that the administration has sold Government property at sacrificial prices. Is Congress going to approve such a course, such a proceeding by ordering the use of these vessels stopped? If you want to dispose of vessels owned by the Shipping Board, would you pass a resolution to stop operating those vessels until the disposition of them is made? If you do you would do great damage not only to the vessels but cause a great loss to the taxpayer and everybody else who has any property interest affected.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to know for information whether the fact railroads are granted water-competition rate has anything to do with this loss of money on these ship canals?

Mr. SIMS. The reason they lost was that it was a primary undertaking and business had to be built up and established.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But the gentleman is not answering my question.

Mr. SIMS. What is the question. I did not catch it.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. On the first page of this joint resolution it seems that at the end of 30 days the Government can no longer use its own vessels.

Mr. SIMS. Can not operate them at all; I just stated that fact.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will not that leave the Government like a man with a horse eating his head off for the vessel to stand there idle and force their sale for a song?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and at any price at which they might bid 75 per cent of these vessels must be sold, and it does not say 75 per cent of the tonnage or the number of barges, and so forth, to be sold. Are you going to sell these fine, expensive steel barges and self-propelled barges under such conditions as these before the Government has hardly got them paid for? The language is nebulous and uncertain. This is the last bill on earth that we ought to pass under a suspension of the rules. What will happen? It must go back to the Senate and go to conference, and in conference, if the Senate is still in favor of its bad bill—the bill is somewhat improved by the amendments offered, but if the Senate will not agree to these amendments then in the last days of this session it will be said that the people of New York are suffering to have these vessels sold, and they will bring in a conference report with possibly not one of these amendments in it and they will move to agree to the conference report, which only requires a majority vote with a quorum present to adopt it. Why not provide for the sale of this property like any other Government property, to the highest and best bidder, with discretion in the Government officers to reject all bids if not satisfactory and readvertise and resell, and let the vessels continue to be operated until they are finally disposed of? Now, if you are fair-minded men, you will think of the poor taxpayer, when it takes twice the amount of his labor, twice the amount of his products, to pay the same amount of taxes that it did when these barges were acquired or constructed. Why should we do this if not to get these boats out of competition with the New York Central Railroad?

Mr. PARKER. Oh, no.

Mr. SIMS. That is the effect it will have. But when you stop operation in 30 days, do not tell me anybody but the New York Central Railroad will be benefited by it.

Mr. PARKER. The canal has been frozen up for two months, and will be for two months more.

Mr. SIMS. Then why be in such a break-neck hurry to pass this bill if you can not use the canal for two months? Why not give the next Congress an opportunity to act, without a motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. CLEARY. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the question?

Mr. SIMS. I want the other gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] to answer the question; he is in charge of the bill. Now, I have no prejudice in this matter. Let us do in this case just what we always have done in a disposal of public property, make such provisions of sale as will have the effect of getting the best price, because the taxpayer loses by the amount we fail to get out of this sale.

Mr. CLEARY. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes of time?

Mr. SIMS. Not to favor the bill, of course.

Mr. CLEARY. There are so many things to explain.

Mr. SIMS. There is great need of explanation, as the gentleman from New York has said, more than I ever saw with any other bill in my life of the same length. The way to explain the bill is to look at the effect of it. The effect is to stop these vessels from operating in 30 days and then dispose of them at leisure.

The gentleman from New York made a statement, but it does not explain the situation fully, about the Black Warrior River and the Mississippi River. The Mississippi from St. Louis to New Orleans has 14 feet depth of water nearly all the year. He did not explain that these small boats can be used in a tow and moved by a tug, and especially in doing business from landing to landing. The Black Warrior is a shallow stream, and the broader the vessel there the better. Four and one-half or five millions of dollars' worth of vessels are to be sold under this resolution, with no discretion, no right, in the Secretary of War to refuse any bid.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, this bill as it passed the Senate was subject to some objections, in that it did not protect the Government. In my judgment, the bill as amended removes these objections and ought to be passed.

Substantially this may be said about the subject of this legislation: Under section 500 of the railroad control act the President was authorized to build and operate barges upon inland waterways of the country. Barges and tugs were constructed for operation on the Erie Canal, as well as other inland waters. That activity was transferred in the transportation act of 1920 to the War Department. The people of the State of New York now wish the War Department to discontinue operation of boats on the canal. I think their wishes ought to be respected if the Government can be protected in doing so, and in my judgment this bill does protect the Government. The bill as passed by the Senate was unsatisfactory in that it gave the New York canal people a first opportunity to purchase these boats. This throws their purchase open to the public everywhere, and if the Secretary of War and the purchasers can not agree it provides that the price may be fixed by arbitration.

Mr. DEWALT. That is stricken out.

Mr. SMALL. That is stricken out, but it protects the Government to the extent that it gives an open field for the purchase of these boats. Only three-fourths of the boats may be sold, and the others operated wherever the War Department may deem desirable. I think the bill as a whole protects the Government and meets the wishes of the people of New York, and their wishes ought to be respected. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I fully concur in the opinion expressed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] that the bill, as now amended, protects the interests of the Government and should pass. Unquestionably, it is not the policy of the Government to continue indefinitely the operation of boats on the inland waterways. The State of New York, speaking through the Representatives of that State, is opposed to the Government longer operating them on the canal, and this simply provides that after 30 days these boats shall be sold, and if they can not be sold to advantage the Government may lease them. And it provides that one-fourth of them can be retained by the Government for use on other streams. The proof shows that these boats were not designed either for the Mississippi or the Black Warrior Rivers. There was a naval architect who specially designed the boats for the Mississippi, giving to them a 600 horsepower; likewise, the boats for the Warrior, with lighter draft than those constructed for the New York State Barge Canal. It is my information that these boats can not be economically used on either of these streams, and I think it is to the advantage of the Government to dispose of the boats, since the State of New York desires they should be no longer used on the canal owned by the State. I hope the resolution as amended will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, when this resolution was before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce last May for consideration I appeared before that committee and voiced my own opposition to the resolution and registered the protest of the various commercial exchanges of the city of New Orleans, the State of Louisiana, and the Mississippi Valley generally. I stated at the time I had no objection to the primary object of the resolution, which was to return the New York Barge Canal to the control of the people of the State of New York, who had built that canal at tremendous expense. My objection was leveled at certain details in regard to the disposal of the equipment on the canal, which had been constructed by the Government at the expense of the taxpayers throughout the whole country. The two amendments that have been brought in here from the committee, and which I understand from the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] are expressly included in his motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, take away the objection I had. I hope this measure will pass the House. After all, the people of New York built that canal. It was all right for the Government to take it over during the time of emergency and exigency, but the emergency and exigency have passed away. The people of New York want the canal back, and the legislature of that State, as I recall, has memorialized the Congress to return it. And I think that Congress ought to heed their wishes, believing that the interests of the Government are properly safeguarded through the amendments that have been submitted by the committee.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] says that this bill is defective in two respects. He says, first, that this bill does not prescribe notice. The question of notice is intrusted to the Secretary of War, and he is invested with discretion as to how to sell and when to sell; and if he can not sell, then he is given the right to lease, so that you dispose of that question in that way.

Next, he says that during the time we are trying to sell the barges they are tied up and can not be used. The Secretary of War can not operate them, but he can not operate them anyway on account of weather conditions from now until May; and if he is unable to sell them by that time, he has the absolute right to lease. So there can be no objection on either ground submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The State of New York has built the canal at an expense of $200,000,000. There should be 5,000 boats on that canal. As a matter of fact there are on it only 90 modern barges. You can not get private capital to invest in and build barges when the Government runs its barges at a loss, and it has run them at a loss for two years of over $100,000 each year. The instant that the Government ceases to operate barges upon the canal, that instant private capital is ready to place upon the canal the number of barges needed there to carry the grain and the other traffic from the West.

And what becomes of the money? The money that is resultant from the sale of these boats is to be used for your operations upon the Mississippi and upon the Black Warrior. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee use his remaining one minute?

Mr. SIMS. Is there only one more speech on that side?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for one minute.

Mr. SIMS. I again call attention to the fact that the Government never took over the canal for one hour. The testimony that was given by the gentleman from New York, Mr. Walsh, shows that there are about 700 canal boats of all kinds.

Mr. DEMPSEY. There is not a single barge designed for use on a canal of 12 feet. They are old-fashioned boats, intended to be run on a shallow canal.

Mr. SIMS. But they can be used in the canal even if not originally designed for such use.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for one minute.

Mr ESCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill is an improvement on the Senate bill. It provides that three-fourths of the boats shall be disposed of, and one-fourth to be placed elsewhere by the War Department. We believe, in view of the operations in 1919, with a deficit of $166,000, and in view of the deficit in 1920, when it was $128,000, with three of the lean months of the year not yet accounted for, that it is a wise thing for the Government to dispose of this property and turn it over to private interests. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The question is whether the House will suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, may we have the amendments that were reported with this bill read?

The SPEAKER. The amendments were not reported separately. Does the gentleman wish the whole bill to be reported again?

Mr. BRIGGS. I would like to have the amendments again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill as reported will be again reported.

The bill with the amendments incorporated therein was again read.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a correction on line 1, page 2. The Clerk made a mistake in reading, because the words "as soon" were not stricken out. I ask unanimous consent that he may read that section again.

The SPEAKER. That is the way it was read originally. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War shall, as soon as practicable, dispose of boats, barges, tugs, etc.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative——

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The question was again taken.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 147.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I intended to call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum of the House is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. As many as are in favor of suspending the rules and passing the resolution will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

APPLICATIONS FOR LETTERS PATENT.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 15662) to extend temporarily the time for filing applications for letters patent, for taking actions in the United States Patent Office with respect thereto, for the reviving and reinstatement of applications for letters patent, and for other purposes, which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the rights of priority provided by section 4887 of the Revised Statutes, for the filing of applications for patent for inventions and designs, which rights had not expired on the 1st day of August, 1914, or which rights have arisen since the 1st day of August, 1914, shall be, and the same are hereby, extended until the expiration of a period of six months from the passage of this act in favor of the citizens of the United States or citizens or subjects of all countries which have extended, or which now extend, or which within said period of six months shall extend substantially reciprocal privileges to citizens of the United States, and such extension shall apply to applications upon which patents have been granted, as well as to applications now pending or filed within the period herein: Provided, That such extension shall in no way furnish a basis of claim against the Government of the United States: Provided further, That such extension shall in no way affect the right of any citizen of the United States, who, before the passage of this act, was bona fide in possession of any rights in patents or applications for patent conflicting with rights in patents granted or validated by reason of such extension, to exercise such rights by itself or himself personally, or by such agents, or licensees, as derived their rights from it, or him, before the passage of this act, and such persons shall not be amenable to any action for infringement of any patent granted or validated by reason of such extension.

A patent shall not be refused on an application coming within the provisions of this act, nor shall a patent granted on such application be held invalid by reason of the invention having been patented or described in any printed publication or in public use or on sale in the United States prior to the filing of the application, unless such patent or publication or such public use or sale was prior to the filing of the foreign application upon which the right of priority is based.

SEC. 2. That the time now fixed by law for the payment of any fee or for the taking of any action with respect to an application for patent, which time had not expired on August 1, 1914, or which commenced after August 1, 1914, is hereby extended until the expiration of one year from the passage of this act, without the payment of extension fees or other penalty in favor of the citizens or subjects of countries which have extended, now extend, or shall extend during a period of one year from the passage of this act substantially reciprocal privileges to citizens of the United States, provided that no extension herein shall confer such privileges on the citizens or subjects of a foreign country for a longer term than the term during which such privileges are conferred by such foreign country on the citizens of the United States, but nothing in this act shall give any right to reopen interference proceedings where final hearing before the examiner of interferences has taken place.

SEC. 3. That no patent granted or validated by reason of the extensions provided for in sections 1 and 2 of this act shall abridge or otherwise affect the right of any citizen of the United States, or his agent or agents, or his successor in business, to continue any manufacture, use, or sale commenced before the passage of this act by such citizen, nor shall the continued manufacture, use, or sale by such citizen, or the use or sale of the devices resulting from such manufacture or use, constitute an infringement.

SEC. 4. That all applications for patent filed since August 1, 1914, and prior to June 15, 1920, which were executed by an agent of the applicant, and in which a petition, specification, and oath, signed by the inventor, or his executor or administrator, had been filed or shall have been filed within a period of one year from the passage of this act, and the patents granted on such applications, shall have the same force and effect as if the papers signed by the inventor, or his executor or administrator, had been filed on the date on which the papers signed by the agent were filed.

SEC. 5. That all applications for patent filed since August 1, 1914, in which the oath was executed before or authenticated by a consular officer, or other representative qualified to administer oaths, of a Government acting in the interest of the Government of the United States, shall have the same force and effect as if said oath had been executed by the applicant before a consular officer of the United States.

SEC. 6. That where an invention was made by a person while serving abroad, during the war, with the forces of the United States, civil or military, the inventor thereof shall be entitled, in interference and other proceedings arising in connection with such invention, to the same rights of priority with respect of such invention as if the same had been made in the United States, and where an application became abandoned or forfeited, during the time the applicant was serving with the forces of the United States, by reason of his failure to take action or pay a fee within the time now required by law, such action may be taken, or the fee paid, within six months from the passage of this act.

SEC. 7. That no claim shall be made or action brought in respect of the use since August 1, 1914, up to the passage of this act, by the Government of the United States, or by any persons acting on behalf of, or under contract with, or with the assent of the Government of the United States or of Governments or their representatives associated with the United States, under any patent rights owned in whole or in part since August 1, 1914, by an alien enemy, nor in respect of the use of any process during such period, or the sale, offering for sale, or use, at any time, of any products, articles, or apparatus whatsoever manufactured during such period to which such patent rights applied.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall affect any act done by virtue of the special measures taken during the war under legislative, executive, or administrative authority of the United States in regard to the rights of an enemy, or ally of an enemy, as defined by the trading with the enemy act of October 6, 1917, in patents for inventions and designs.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. GARD and Mr. CALDWELL rose.

The SPEAKER. Is any gentleman asking for recognition opposed to the bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I am on the Committee on Patents. I do not oppose the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he ought to recognize a member of the committee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands a second.

Mr. NOLAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL] has 20 minutes.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H. R. 15662, is a committee substitute for a bill which was recommended by the Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Newton, which was introduced in April of last year, H. R. 13681. As the title states, this bill is to extend temporarily the time for filing applications for letters patent, for taking actions in the United States Patent Office with respect thereto, for the reviving and reinstatement of applications for letters patent, and for other purposes.

Briefly, this bill is designed to meet a situation that results from nonratification of the peace treaty. Hearings were held on this measure, at which a large number of inventors and representatives of great industrial establishments in this country appeared and stated that unless a measure of this kind was passed prior to March 31 of this year inventors of this country and industrial establishments would lose rights that lapsed due to a condition that existed during the war, from August, 1914, to the present date. If the measure is passed it will give inventors whose rights have lapsed an opportunity prior to March 31 to take advantage of the Berne convention and revive those patent rights, providing other countries coming under the provisions of it give inventors in this country reciprocal rights. The statement was made by the then Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Newton, and the former Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Whitehead, that there are four or five Americans who have rights that are lapsed to one of those of foreign countries.

Early in this Congress somewhat similar legislation was enacted in relation to copyrights. This is considered very important, because if this Congress should adjourn and no legislation be enacted prior to March 31 of this year it would be impossible, except through special treaties or special agreement with each individual country, to take advantage of this situation and get for the inventors of our Nation the rights that are granted to the signatories of the Berne convention. Briefly, that is the purpose of this legislation. It is very important that it should be enacted into law, and that is the reason why we are asking the House to suspend the rules and pass this bill.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the chairman of the committee [Mr. NOLAN] that this bill is a matter of very great importance to American inventors and business men.

Those of you who are familiar with patents know that a very important section of our patent law is what is called the right of priority. It is equally as important for Americans as it is for foreigners, because if an inventor wants to patent an article in the various countries of the world he has got to have a chance to get all his applications filed all around the world before he takes out his American patent, or else he is apt to invalidate his own American patent. That is called the right of priority, and, in brief, it is that when you file a patent in a foreign country you have a year within which to perfect your American patent, and that year is called the year of priority.

When the war came on it was impossible to get in touch with the patent offices, not alone of those nations which were at war but almost all the nations of the world. In fact, it disrupted all the patent systems of all civilized nations.

The object of this bill and of the Berne convention is practically to remove the disabilities to which inventors were subjected in consequence of the war. It is very much more important for Americans than it is for other people that this legislation be passed, for the reason that American inventors are more active than those of any other country. They take out patents all around the world, and if we do not extend this privilege to the nationals of other countries we shall not get it extended to our nationals.

I think this is a bill concerning which there can not be two opinions. All the officials of the Patent Office, all the manufacturers who have appeared before the committee, were in favor of it. You will find if you look at the bill that it safeguards all the rights that have been taken by the United States in foreign patents, all the rights of the citizens that have acquired interest in foreign patents, so that the bill is one solely for the protection and not of any danger to any American. I shall be glad to answer any questions; but I think that, so far as the argument goes, there is nothing to be said against the bill, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this bill is a very meritorious measure and very urgent, in the opinion of the Patent Committee. We held hearings, and about a dozen different gentlemen, including the Commissioner of Patents, the former commissioner, and the chairman of the committee on laws of the American Patent Bar Association, appeared before the committee and urged the passage of the bill. No opposition developed. The committee unanimously reported out the bill, and no opposition has developed since that time.

The bill reads as if it is in the interest of foreign inventors, and yet the purpose of the bill is to protect the interests of American inventors and manufacturers. In order to do that, however, it is necessary for the Congress to enact this bill granting these rights in order that we may obtain reciprocal rights from foreign countries. As explained by the chairman of the committee, this situation has grown out of war conditions during which foreign inventors in many instances did not take out patents on their own inventions in the United States, and innumerable American inventors failed to take out patents in foreign countries within the time limit. Furthermore, many foreign countries have an annual or biennial or quadrennial license system, and license fees have to be paid in order to keep the patents alive. Many American inventors and manufacturers did not keep alive their inventions in foreign countries. Since the war some of the foreign countries, notably Great Britain, for a time extended protection to the American inventors upon the belief that reciprocal rights would be granted, but as such a long time has elapsed without the United States granting reciprocal rights, practically all the countries have ceased granting extensions. The result is that thousands of American patents are in a precarious condition so far as protection in foreign countries is concerned. This legislation is vitally important and urgent, for the reason that the Berne convention meets March 31, and it is important for us to pass this legislation prior to that time in order to acquire these rights for America. If we do not do it before Congress adjourns it will be too late.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. TILSON. If this bill is passed now, will the inventors of America benefit immediately under the Berne convention?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In some particulars they will; but most of the foreign countries have already made provision to grant like protection to American patents in consideration of reciprocal rights.

Mr. TILSON. This is to complete the reciprocity?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. This completes the reciprocity. A reading of the bill will show that the American rights are not granted except upon reciprocal rights granted by foreign countries.

I wish to call your attention to the further fact that this bill expressly provides that if an American manufacturer has been in actual possession and manufacture of a foreign invention for the period of a year or more, they are still protected, not only for the past use of the invention but in the future use thereof, because they have acquired possessive rights, and this bill does not take them away.

Mr. MILLER. In what way does the Berne convention change the status of the American inventor in foreign patent rights other than in those countries with which we are at war?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The Berne convention is composed of nearly all the European countries as well as other countries in the world. They operate very largely through this convention, and it grants reciprocal rights to those nations that enact legislation of a like character with regard to patents. We can get the right in any of these foreign countries for our inventors as soon as we grant them like rights.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. This bill simply carries out the provisions of the Versailles treaty?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that treaty had been ratified, it would not have been necessary for Congress to take up the time in passing this bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The situation would have been very much simplified.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that this is ratifying the peace treaty.

Mr. BARKLEY. By piecemeal?

Mr. NOLAN. No; in a more perfect form.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MERRITT. Is it not true that under administrative acts some countries—Great Britain, for instance—have granted our inventors rights upon the theory that we would enact this legislation, and if we do not they will take those rights away, so that men who think they have certain rights in Great Britain now will not have them?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is true. I wish to further call the attention of the House to section 6 of the bill, which protects inventions which may have been made by members of the United States forces while in foreign service, during the war, and did not have the opportunity to take out or follow up their inventions within the time allowed by the present law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman is referring to section 6?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. To what war does section 6 refer?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It refers to the World War.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Other sections of the act speak of August 1, 1914, and so forth, and section 7 speaks about alien enemies, and so on?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. So that we may infer that it is the recent war that is intended?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is the only place in the bill where the word "war" is mentioned, and it would seem to me, to make it entirely clear, there should be words of designation of the recent World War.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Perhaps that criticism is well taken, but I think section 7 and section 8, as well as the preceding sections, show that what is intended is the World War. In that connection I call attention to the fact that sections 7 and 8 expressly protect the Government of the United States against any claims or suits which might grow out of the use by the Government during the war of any foreign inventions or patents.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, if no one desires to oppose the bill, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4897) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivisions (2) and (3) of subsection (b) of section 9 of an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended, be, and hereby are, amended so as to read as follows:

"(2) A woman who, at the time of her marriage, was a subject or citizen of a nation which has remained neutral in the war, or of a nation which was associated with the United States in the prosecution of said war, and who, prior to April 6, 1917, intermarried with a subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary and that the money or other property concerned was not acquired by such woman, either directly or indirectly, from any subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary subsequent to January 1, 1917.

"(3) A woman who, at the time of her marriage, was a citizen of the United States and who, prior to April 6, 1917, intermarried with a subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary, and that the money or other property concerned was not acquired by such woman, either directly or indirectly, from any subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary subsequent to January 1, 1917."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio to 20 minutes.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, this bill is intended to correct certain errors which have been found to exist in the amendment to the trading-with-the-enemy act, which was passed in June of last year. It has to do with the return of property belonging to American women who married enemy aliens. The amendment of June 5, 1920, provided as follows:

A woman who at the time of her marriage was a citizen of the United States (said citizenship having been acquired by birth in the United States), and who prior to April 6, 1917, intermarried with a subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary, and that the money or other property concerned was not acquired by such woman either directly or indirectly from any subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary.

It was found, as testified to by Mr. Garvan, the Alien Property Custodian, and concurred in by the Attorney General, as will be seen by letters in the report, that this worked a hardship. The Attorney General says:

A case was presented under this amendment in which the evidence disclosed the fact that the claimant was born an American citizen in Paris, and this department following the act felt that such claim was not covered by the above provisions, and the claim was accordingly disallowed. This feature was the only part of the evidence, which was incomplete.

The custodian, while recognizing that such a claimant did not come within the act, believed that such a case was one which Congress would have included had it been presented prior to the enactment of the amendment, and accordingly submitted to you the amendment which was introduced by you on December 16, 1920.

It now appears that there are certain other claims whose general nature is almost identical with those above referred to which arise by a slightly different set of facts, as the following: A claim has been filed by a woman who was born in Canada and married an American citizen. Her husband died leaving her considerable property, and she subsequently married a German citizen. All of this occurred prior to our entry into the war.

Now, notwithstanding the fact that had she remained in Canada and married a German, or had she been born in the United States and married a German she would have been eligible as a claimant, yet as she was born in Canada and changed her citizenship by marriage to an American citizen, and then marrying a German, she was neither a British subject at the time of her marriage as is required by subdivision 2 of subsection b of section 9, nor was she an American citizen whose American citizenship was acquired at the time of birth, and accordingly she would not be eligible as a claimant under the provisions of subdivisions 2 and 3 or of the amended subdivision 3 (as amended by your bill of December 16, 1920).

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The only change in the law, as I understand it, by the bill before the House is that it brings within the purview of the law women who are American citizens, whereas at the present time they are only recognized under the law if they are native-born citizens.

Mr. MERRITT. That is true. One case occurred where a daughter was born to diplomats in a foreign country. She afterwards married a German and was ruled out under the law as not being American born. This bill is favored by all of the Government officials, and it is simply an effort to correct an error in an amendment already passed and in favor of American citizens.

Mr. BARKLEY. This bill is indorsed by the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. MERRITT. Yes; and by the Attorney General.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, upon what subject?

Mr. FIELDS. To fill a vacancy on the Board of Managers for the National Soldiers' Home.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, there is a vacancy on the Board of Managers of the National Soldiers' Home. The Committee on Military Affairs has reported House joint resolution 465, which is now upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar, which provides for the appointment of Capt. W. S. Albright, of Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to fill the vacancy. Mr. Wadsworth, a member of the Board of Managers and a former Member of this House, was here a few days ago and stated to me that it was the desire of the board to make its annual inspection trip, in fact, that it should be making the inspection now, but they were awaiting the action of Congress in filling this vacancy, because it was desirable that the new member be with the board in making its annual inspection. In view of the necessity for early action in filling this vacancy, it is my desire to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill, in the hope that a second will not be demanded. If a second is demanded, because of other business before the House, I shall withdraw my motion; but I sincerely hope that a second will not be demanded. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 465.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. FIELDS. It is a unanimous report. He is a Spanish-American War veteran, a captain.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 465) for the appointment of one member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Resolved, etc., That W. S. Albright, of Kansas, be, and he is hereby, appointed a member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States, to fill the unexpired term of George Black, deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

A second was not demanded.

The question was taken; and, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the House joint resolution was passed.

ERECTION OF MEMORIALS, ETC., ARLINGTON MEMORIAL AMPHITHEATER.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 8032.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will state it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the motion of the gentleman to pass the original House bill or the House bill with amendments incorporated in the copy which the gentleman sent to the Clerk's desk?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not giving attention.

Mr. GOULD. There is a slight change in an amendment made. I gave the proper copy to the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

Mr. GOULD. In conformity with the copy which I sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8032) to provide for the erection of memorials and the entombment of bodies in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater, in Arlington National Cemetery, Va.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, which shall submit annually to the President, who shall transmit the same to Congress by the first Monday in December, recommendations as to what, if any, inscriptions, tablets, busts, or other memorials shall be erected, and what, if any, bodies of deceased members of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps shall be entombed during the next ensuing year within the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va.: Provided, That no memorial shall be placed and no body shall be interred in the grounds about the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater within a distance of 250 feet from the said memorial.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War shall be the chairman of the said commission and the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia shall be its executive and disbursing officer.

SEC. 3. That no inscription, tablet, bust, or other memorial shall be erected nor shall any body be entombed within the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater unless specifically authorized in each case by act of the Congress.

SEC. 4. That no inscription, tablet, bust, or other memorial as herein provided for shall be erected to commemorate any person who shall not have rendered conspicuously distinguished service in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, nor shall the body of any such person be entombed in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater; nor shall any such memorial be erected or any body be entombed therein within 10 years after the date of the death of the person so to be commemorated.

SEC. 5. That the character, design, and location of any such inscriptions, tablets, busts, or other memorials when authorized as herein provided shall be subject to the approval of the commission herein created, which shall in each case obtain the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOULD. I will.

Mr. GARD. I do not desire to take any time. I made the reservation in order to inquire as to the amendments made. The only amendment I can find from having heard the bill read was that in lines 5 and 6, page 3, the words "unless specifically otherwise provided by act of Congress in individual cases" were left out.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Speaker, on page 3 those lines were left out according to the objection made.

Mr. GARD. That is the only change made from the bill as it was before presented?

Mr. GOULD. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARD. What is the object of leaving out this phraseology?

Mr. GOULD. It prevents repetition that is already covered in an earlier part of the bill.

Mr. GARD. I do not see where the phrase is covered.

Mr. GOULD. It is already in section 3.

Mr. GARD. Is it the idea of section 3 as it is now controls notwithstanding the provision in section 4 that there shall be no burial or entombment within 10 years after death, that notwithstanding section 3 provides an exception?

Mr. GOULD. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARD. I do not desire to use any time.

The question was taken; and, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair recognize me to move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not recognize any gentleman unless the Chair knows about the matter in advance.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is Senate bill——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not recognize the gentleman unless he consults the Chair in advance.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this is unanimous-consent day, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The Chair thinks no quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted for printing, under the rule, the conference report and accompanying statement on the bill (H. R. 15962) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

TERMS OF FEDERAL COURT AT NORWALK, CONN.

The Clerk reported the bill (S. 4682) to amend section 74 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 74 of the Judicial Code, as amended, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 74. The State of Connecticut shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the District of Connecticut. Terms of the district court shall be held at New Haven on the fourth Tuesdays in February and September, at Hartford on the fourth Tuesday in May and the first Tuesday in December, and at Norwalk on the fourth Tuesday in April: Provided, however, That suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for the holdings of said court and for the use of the officers of said court at Norwalk free of expense to the Government of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask for information from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who reported the bill.

I observe that the report does not bear evidence of this bill having been referred to the Attorney General of the United States nor to any other Cabinet officer. It seems to have been the policy of the gentleman from Massachusetts, when bills have been under consideration, to inquire whether or not reports have been received from the department of the Government concerned in the legislation, and I notice that in this report there is no reference to any reply from the Attorney General with respect to this legislation.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. It is a Senate bill, which originated in the Senate. When information is presented to the Senate committee and a bill comes over to the House, the Committee on the Judiciary does not usually go through the motions of asking the Attorney General of the United States if he had changed his mind since he informed the Senate that he had no objection to the enactment of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I have no doubt that the Committee on the Judiciary acted wisely in reporting this bill, but it seems to me the custom he insists upon with reference to bills reported by other Members ought to have been carried out.

Mr. WALSH. I have never insisted on that custom with respect to Senate bills.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. A few days ago we had a bill under consideration in the House, reported upon favorably by the Secretary of the Interior, and the gentleman from Massachusetts objected to its consideration because the Member making the report did not have a report from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce. Why not be consistent?

Mr. WALSH. It was the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] who raised that question.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma demands the regular order, which is, Is there objection?

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I want to make an inquiry. I notice in the latter part of the bill there is a proviso to the effect that suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for the holdings of said court and for the use of the officers of said court at Norfolk free of expense to the Government of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. It is not Norfolk at all.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is Norwalk. I am curious to know, if the Federal Government is not to pay the expenses of holding its own court, who is to pay the expenses?

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will read the language, he will see that is not what it says.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is the language.

Mr. MERRITT. If the gentleman will allow me to answer the inquiry, this bill was passed in the Senate at the request of Judge Thomas, the district judge of Connecticut. The city of Norwalk will pay all the expenses, so there will be no extra expense at all to the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Why does the city of Norwalk want to pay the expense of holding a Federal court? Is the court to be held there for the benefit of the city of Norwalk or for the benefit of the public service?

Mr. MERRITT. For the benefit of the citizens of the United States who live in that county.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it not unusual for a city to pay the expenses of a Federal court?

Mr. MERRITT. They do not pay the expenses of the court. All they do is to furnish the room. It is just simply for the convenience of the judge and the litigants in that district. There is no objection to it at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 74 of the Judicial Code, as amended, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 74. The State of Connecticut shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Connecticut. Terms of the district court shall be held at New Haven on the fourth Tuesdays in February and September, at Hartford on the fourth Tuesday in May and the first Tuesday in December, and at Norwalk on the fourth Tuesday in April: Provided, however, That suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for the holdings of said court and for the use of the officers of said court at Norwalk free of expense to the Government of the United States."

Mr. WALSH. In order to make it perfectly clear to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH], I will say that this follows the usual practice, that when additional sittings of courts are provided to be held in cities in which there is no Federal court building it is required that the particular district or city where the extra sitting is held shall furnish to the court accommodations for the holding of the sessions of court without expense to the United States. In some States—I do not say that it is so in the great Commonwealth so ably represented by the gentleman from Idaho—they provide that they get a new public building when they get an extra sitting of the court, but we have eliminated any such possibility in this case by providing that the city of Norwalk shall furnish these accommodations for the sitting of this court in one of the city buildings there.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I presume it will be necessary to have some additional employees in the city of Norwalk to take care of the business of the court. Will the city pay the salaries of those employees?

Mr. WALSH. We will let the city of Norwalk worry about that.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is certainly unusual for a municipality to defray the expenses of a United States court.

Mr. WALSH. No; this is the usual way.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERRITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES DEPOSITARIES IN PANAMA AND INSULAR POSSESSIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4436) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I should like to have it reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of the act approved December 24, 1919, known as the Edge Act, amending the Federal reserve act, be amended by adding at the end a proviso, so that the paragraph as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 25. (a) Corporations to be organized for the purpose of engaging in international or foreign banking or other international or foreign financial operations, or in banking or other financial operations in a dependency or insular possession of the United States, either directly or through the agency, ownership, or control of local institutions in foreign countries, or in such dependencies or insular possessions as provided by this section, and to act when required by the Secretary of the Treasury as fiscal agents of the United States, may be formed by any number of natural persons, not less in any case than five: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to deny the right of the Secretary of the Treasury to use any corporation organized under this section as depositaries in Panama and the Panama Canal Zone, or in the Philippine Islands and other insular possessions and dependencies of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire what the difference is between the section as it is proposed to amend it and the original section?

Mr. McFADDEN. This bill is identical with H. R. 14021, reported to the House last May. It refers to the Government depositaries in Panama, the Panama Canal Zone, and the insular possessions of the United States, and it simply permits the Treasury Department to use the Edge corporations, which are incorporated under the laws of the United States, rather than to utilize corporations organized under State laws, as the Treasury Department is now doing.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. For depositaries?

Mr. McFADDEN. For depositaries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TO AMEND SECTION 5146 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11307) to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the qualifications of directors of the National Banking Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, the bill as I read it seems to me to be very local in its nature and application. I would ask the chairman of the committee what is the reason for the extension of this 25-mile limit in the first instance, and also I shall ask him in a moment about some of the provisions in the bill as it is now framed?

Mr. McFADDEN. The bill does provide for taking care of certain cities, such as St. Louis and East St. Louis, but it would apply to New York and Jersey City, St. Paul and Minneapolis, Philadelphia and Camden, and cities and towns located on the border or State line.

Mr. GARD. If located on the State line, why not follow that law and have the directors reside in the State?

Mr. McFADDEN. If the gentleman will read the report, the last section covers that very clearly. It reads as follows:

This section of the national banking act as it stands at present requires that at least three-fourths of the directors of a national bank must have lived for at least one year within the State, Territory, or District in which the bank is located and must continue in residence therein during their continuance in office. A number of cities, however, are located on or near State lines, and it sometimes happens that a manufacturing or business center may be in one State and the residence center belonging to the same city in another—as at East St. Louis and St. Louis. There seems no good reason why residence within 50 miles of the bank in these days of good roads and motor cars should not be allowed. The bank must in any event choose directors from among the business men of the town where located in order to obtain a quorum at its meetings, and the distance they travel to and from business is not material nor is the fact whether they live on one side or another of a State line.

Mr. GARD. That is what I had in mind. It simply is a matter that appertains to St. Louis and East St. Louis, as far as the report is concerned. Is it necessary to amend the act for one city?

Mr. WINGO. Let me say to the gentleman that in Texarkana in my district the State line is nothing but a street. Kansas City, Kans., is the same; and take the city of Fort Smith, and Oklahoma is just across the river. There are a good many cities besides St. Louis and East St. Louis that this will apply to. St. Louis and East St. Louis are typical of the larger cities like St. Paul and Minneapolis. There are many small cities throughout the Nation where it is necessary to permit this provision sought to be put in here. It is not a local bill, although it applies to St. Louis and East St. Louis.

Mr. GARD. It is a general bill, but its application, so far as the report is concerned, is to St. Louis and East St. Louis.

Now, on page 2, line 2, the language is that they must be residents of such State or within 50 miles of the territory of location of the association during their continuance in office. On page 1 a different expression is used—it says, "Within 50 miles of the location of the office of the association." Is there any difference between these two methods of expression?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think it was intended to make any distinction in that particular. The idea was to permit directors to serve who live within 50 miles of the bank.

Mr. GARD. It is a different expression about the same thing, but I have no desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. PHELAN. In one case it uses a verb, to reside, and in the other case it uses a noun, resident.

Mr. WINGO. The latter expression refers to the territory described in the first.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5146. Every director must, during his whole term of service, be a citizen of the United States, and at least three-fourths of the directors must have resided in the State, Territory, or District in which the association is located, or within 25 miles of the location of the office of the association, for at least one year immediately preceding their election, and must be residents of such State or within a 25-mile territory of the location of the association during their continuance in office. Every director must own in his own right at least 10 shares of the capital stock of the association of which he is a director, unless the capital of the bank shall not exceed $25,000, in which case he must own in his own right at least five shares of such capital stock. Any director who ceases to be the owner of the required number of shares of the stock, or who becomes in any other manner disqualified, shall thereby vacate his place.

With the following committee amendments:

Amend in lines 9 and 12, page 1, by striking out the words "twenty-five" in each line and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the amendment. I would like to ask the chairman what good reason there is for extending this limit from 25 miles, as provided in the bill passed by the Senate, to 50 miles, as now proposed. It occurs to me that there is a very substantial reason for requiring the board of directors of the bank to live in the community where the bank is located. The purpose of this bill, as I understand it, is to modify the law so that where a bank is located on the border of States three-fourths will not be required to live within the limits of the particular State where the bank is located.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will yield, in the neighborhood of Chicago there are a number of suburban towns more than 25 miles away. The men that live there have business in Chicago. Why should they not be permitted to be directors?

Mr. BLACK. They would be if they lived within the State lines.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It happens that some might live outside; they might live in Indiana.

Mr. BLACK. I think there is a very good reason why the directors should be familiar with local conditions. For us to extend this provision providing a 50-mile limit, it occurs to me, is going too far.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that the committee felt that there was no trouble in that respect because of the improved methods of travel nowadays in these days of automobiles. Men who live within 50 miles of a bank are perfectly familiar with the affairs of the institution.

Mr. BLACK. I do not know whether that be true or not. Of course, they could get to a directors' meeting, but that is not the point. The point is that a director ought to be familiar with the local conditions in the district where the bank transacts business, and it occurs to me that we are about to do something that might not be wise from a sound financial standpoint.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. A great many men doing business in New York City, for example, live across the line in New Jersey. There are many men living in places in New Jersey 25 or 30 miles from New York City who are really business men of the city of New York. Will the gentleman contend that they are not more familiar with the affairs of New York City than somebody living in Buffalo, for example, which is in the same State as New York City?

Mr. BLACK. My contention is that 25 miles is, perhaps, as far as we should go. There is no doubt in the world that a great many bank failures are due to the carelessness and lax supervision of directors. I think it is a very wise provision to require that a director of a bank shall keep in close personal touch with the bank, and if a great many of them would be more vigilant in that respect we would not have so many defaulting bank officials.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. KING. I might say to the gentleman that up along the Mississippi River similar conditions exist. For instance, take the town of Burlington, Iowa. There is a large city of 45,000 or 50,000 inhabitants, yet across the river, up on the hills of Illinois, many of those business men live, and they go over there every day. The same is true of Davenport and Rock Island. It requires a 50-mile limit to include them.

Mr. BLACK. Would not the 25-mile limit include places of that kind?

Mr. KING. I do not think it would at that point. There are a number of other places similarly situated. It is a local community just the same. They all do business together. The gentleman is thinking of those great, magnificent prairies in the State of Texas.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to direct attention to the fact that we might go too far in widening the limits proposed in the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McFADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. McFADDEN, the bill H. R. 14021, a similar bill, was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a short memorial from the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon offering on behalf of the people of that State quantities of food for the hungry people of the East and Near East and suggesting a method of transportation of food and supplies where needed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to print a memorial from the State of Oregon in reference to the furnishing of food to the people of the Near East. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AMENDING SECTION 9 OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11918) to amend section 9 of the Federal reserve act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, which makes trust companies and State banks depositories of Government funds, and unless some very good reason can be shown why they are made so I will have to object. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that this bill only provides that the State banks shall be designated to be depositories when such banks are members of the Federal Reserve System. Inasmuch as national banks have that privilege, it has been thought by the committee and by the Secretary of the Treasury and by many banks throughout the country that the State banks should have that same privilege, inasmuch as they are under the supervision of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. HUSTED. Well, I think that only national banks should be depositories of Government funds, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

AMENDING SECTION 10 OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14386) to amend section 10 of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill, if I understand it correctly, appropriates a million dollars to build a building here in Washington?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, we have about 40 acres of buildings down here more than we need, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

AMENDING SECTION 11 OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill S. 4683, an act to amend section 11 (m) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and March 3, 1919.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 (m) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and March 3, 1919, be further amended by striking out the words "December 31, 1920," at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "December 31, 1921."

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 2, strike out all of lines 3 to 8, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 11 of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended, be further amended by striking out the whole of subsection (m) and by substituting therefor a subsection to read as follows:

"'(m) Upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members, the Federal Reserve Board shall have power to permit Federal reserve banks to discount for any member bank notes, drafts, or bills of exchange bearing the signature or indorsement of any one borrower in excess of the amount permitted by section 9 and section 13 of this act, but in no case to exceed 20 per cent of the member bank's capital and surplus: Provided, however, That all such notes, drafts, or bills of exchange discounted for any member bank in excess of the amount permitted under such sections shall be secured by not less than a like face amount of bonds or notes of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, for which the borrower shall in good faith prior to January 1, 1921, have paid or agreed to pay not less than the full face amount thereof, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States: Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection (m) shall not be operative after October 31, 1921.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the bill in its present form seems to be one sent over from the Senate with a rather immaterial amendment, changing December 31, 1920, to December 31, 1921, and this amendment of the House committee is an entire change.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman in that connection, we consulted with the Federal Reserve Board and the counsel for the Federal Reserve Board, and this amendment as put into this bill is drawn by the counsel for the Federal Reserve Board, and was intended simply to cover the extension of loans under the provisions of the act. The Senate bill provided only that the terms of the bill should be extended for a year.

Mr. GARD. And this had the approval of the counsel of the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. McFADDEN. It did.

Mr. GARD. And the Treasury Department?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; it has.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, still further reserving the right to object, as I understand the situation this bill will permit banks rediscounting above the 10 per cent loan limit where the paper is secured by Liberty bonds or other obligations of the United States which they have purchased at their par value. In other words, it enables them to rediscount their own Liberty bonds which they bought during the Liberty loan campaign?

Mr. McFADDEN. That is the idea.

Mr. BLACK. And not to enable them to purchase bonds on the open market and other bonds that may have been purchased?

Mr. McFADDEN. It safeguards that. This bill is to stop any possible speculation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill and the amendments were again reported.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized on the amendment. I want to take a few minutes to explain to the House what is done by this amendment. I think the RECORD ought to show it in connection with the bill. Under section 11 of the Federal reserve act, as amended September 7, 1916, and March 3, 1919, we authorized, for a period ending with the year 1920, the Federal Reserve Board to permit the Federal reserve banks to exceed the 10 per cent limit on the rediscount of paper that was secured by Government obligation. Of course, we all know why we did that. We had hoped that by the last of 1920 they would be sufficiently absorbed by the customers of the bank so that we could get back to the 10 per cent limitation. Now, the Senate amendment, as it comes over, simply extended this provision for the year 1921. It was the opinion of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House that we ought not to extend this privilege to those who had been speculating in Liberty bonds, but to the bona fide holder of Liberty bonds who had found it impossible to pay their installments, where for any reason they had not been able to pay for them and pay their installments, and where for any reason they had not been able to liquidate that indebtedness, the bank would be permitted to take care of them, and yet we did not want to put a premium on speculating in bonds, or let those who had bought them for speculative purposes choke the portfolios of the Federal reserve banks. So we put in an amendment that simply means this, that this privilege is only granted upon the vote of five members of the Federal Reserve Board, and it shall not exceed in any case 20 per cent—the regular limitation is 10 per cent—and it shall only apply where the borrower in good faith had bought them prior to January 1, 1921. And we further provide that that provision shall expire and not be operative after October 31 of this year. In other words, we are extending the privilege to the bona fide holders of Liberty loan bonds that had rediscount privileges at the Federal reserve banks, to carry them up to such time as they will be able to liquidate that paper and take it from the Federal reserve banks. That was the idea.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McFADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LLOYD E. GANDY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13040) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to Lloyd E. Gandy, of Spokane, Wash., his heirs and assigns, the right to overflow certain lands on the Fort George Wright Military Reservation, at Spokane, Wash., on such terms as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I note in the reading of the report on this bill, first, that there is some question about the overflow of this land and its effect upon the Spokane River. I read from the report on page 4, in which it says:

The sewage of the city of Spokane empties into the Spokane River at several points above the Fort Wright Reservation. Owing to the swift current the pollution of the stream is so low that property owners have no cause for objection. In case a dam is constructed below the reservation the water will become much deeper and the flow much less rapid. Inclosed is statement on the conditions that will follow, by Maj. Harry C. Ford, Medical Corps, post surgeon.

There is another vital objection which I note. In the last line on page 2 and the three lines on page 3 provision is made as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to condemn, at the expense of the grantee herein, and, so far as may be found expedient, any land advantageous or desirable for target-range purposes.

In other words, we have the proposition here affording the Secretary of War unquestionable authority to condemn land at the request of the grantee, Gandy, in this case; in other words, to authorize the power of Federal condemnation for private purposes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman will notice, the Secretary of War recommended that that provision be stricken out, and I assume there would be no objection to it. That was put in because some of the Army officers thought that it ought to be put in there.

Now, in regard to the pollution of the stream, it seems there is no objection at all by the people of Spokane along that line. Judge WEBSTER, who has this bill, is sick, and he investigated the matter. The bill was sent to the subcommittee, of which I am chairman, a year ago, and I asked him to thoroughly investigate it when he went out there. He did so, and when he came back he reported that there was no possible objection by the people of Spokane. In fact, all the people of Spokane are anxious for this water-power development.

Mr. GARD. I think the bill ought to go over in the absence of Mr. WEBSTER.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DEPOSIT MONEY ORDERS IN THE CANAL ZONE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14739) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act extending certain privileges of canal employees to other officials on the Canal Zone and authorizing the President to make rules and regulations affecting health, sanitation, quarantine, taxation, public roads, self-propelled vehicles, and police powers on the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, including provision as to certain fees, money orders, and interest deposits," approved August 21, 1916.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PATENT RIGHTS OF HOMESTEADERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3225) for the relief of bona fide settlers, who intermarry after having complied with the homestead law for one year.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Reserving the right to object, I do this for the purpose of asking the majority leader how much longer he intends to run? I ask this question because I promised to notify some Members.

Mr. MONDELL. For 5 or 10 minutes, if there is no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I promised to notify certain Members who have bills on the calendar in case it looked as if we would soon get through.

Mr. MONDELL. It is the intention to run just a little longer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act providing that the marriage of a homestead entryman to a homestead entrywoman shall not impair the right of either to a patent, after compliance with the law a year, to apply to existing entries," approved April 6, 1914 (38 Stats., p. 312), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following: Provided further, That in the administration of this act the terms 'entryman' and 'entrywoman' shall be construed to include bona fide settlers who have complied with the homestead law for at least one year next preceding such marriage."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BENHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF SUFFERING POPULATIONS OF THE WORLD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. Con. Res. 71) to designate a day on which our people may be urged to contribute to the need of the suffering populations of the world stricken by war, famine, and pestilence. The title of the resolution was read.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DISCHARGES FROM THE ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, AND COAST GUARD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 428) to repeal section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1920.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

NATIONAL FORESTS IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11118) authorizing the consolidation of lands in the national forests in the State of South Dakota.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. If the gentlemen will withhold for a moment, the Chair will submit some personal requests.

To Mr. EAGAN, for one day, on account of business; and

To Mr. CROWTHER, for four days, on account of business.

NATIONAL FORESTS IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I want to withdraw the point of no quorum, and ask unanimous consent that the pending bill, H. R. 11118, be passed over without prejudice until Mr. GANDY can get here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill indicated be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LLOYD E. GANDY.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in behalf of Mr. WEBSTER, that the bill H. R. 13040 be retained on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 13040 be retained on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. The customary rule is that they shall go to the foot of the calendar, but I have no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is here. I hope that will be his rule now.

Mr. WALSH. It might just as well be at the foot of the calendar as elsewhere.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, February 22, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a standing order of the Senate that upon the 22d day of February of each year, immediately following the reading of the Journal, Washington's Farewell Address shall be read to the Senate. This happens to be a recess and not an adjournment, and the reading of the Journal is not in order, but unless there is objection thereto the Chair will recognize the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to read the Farewell Address of the first President of the United States. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WADSWORTH read the address, as follows:

To the people of the United States.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest; no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and, every day, the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently, want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism,—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans, by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation, and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquillity at home; your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But, as it is easy to foresee that, from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed; it is of infinite moment, that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can, in any event, be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth, or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess, are the work of joint counsels, and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest.—Here, every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The north, in an unrestrained intercourse with the south, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter, great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise, and precious materials of manufacturing industry.—The south, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the north, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expanded. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the north, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength, to which itself is unequally adapted. The east, in a like intercourse with the west, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The west derives from the east supplies requisite to its growth and comfort—and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions, to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the west can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength; or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined cannot fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts, greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations; and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union, an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalship alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues, would stimulate and embitter.—Hence likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments, which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is, that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its hands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations,—northern and southern—Atlantic and western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations: they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head: they have seen, in the negotiation by the executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the general government and in the Atlantic states, unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain and that with Spain, which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances, in all times, have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a constitution of government, better calculated than your former, for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.—But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power, and the right of the people to establish government, presuppose the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency.—They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system; and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments, as of other human institutions:—that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country:—that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion: and remember, especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular references to the founding them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and, sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind, (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils, and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchial cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume.

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern: some of them in our country and under our own eyes.—To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the constitution designates.—But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil, any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundations of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should co-operate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object (which is always a choice of difficulties,) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice towards all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another, disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions, to the favored nation, of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils!—Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, (I conjure you to believe me fellow citizens,) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove, that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith:—Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, of a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon, to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view, that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations, but if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far, in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have, at least, believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe, my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both houses of congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound, in duty and interest, to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without any thing more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity towards other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me, a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress, without interruption, to that degree of strength, and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration, I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors and dangers.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented two joint memorials of the Legislature of Oregon, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Senate joint memorial No. 10, introduced by Senator Ritner and Representative Bean.

To the honorable Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled:

Whereas the starving and destitute condition of untold millions of people in China and the equally deplorable plight of many other millions of men, women, and children in the nations of the Near East, have been brought to the notice of the friendly people of America; and

Whereas philanthropic men and women, working through various relief organizations, have undertaken to secure from the bounty and plenty of America money and food to save the hungry and succor the dying in the stricken and distressed countries of the Near and Far East; and have already obtained money and supplies, or the promise of them; and

Whereas the United States Government is operating, under the direction of its Shipping Board, a great fleet of merchant vessels to various parts of the world, and among them is a line of steamers maintaining regular service on the route from Portland to the ports of north China and return; and

Whereas it is reported that under the Government regulations the Shipping Board is powerless to assign free space in any of its vessels for the transport of food and other supplies to the impoverished, needy, and helpless millions of China or the Near East; and

Whereas the prosperous and liberal people of Oregon are ready to donate for dispatch to China or the Near East a fair share of their great stores of grain, flour, salmon, fruit, and other goods: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we appeal to Congress for immediate emergency legislation which will permit the employment of its vessels in the great and necessary service of furnishing transportation of supplies to China or the Near East, either through the dispatch of fully laden vessels direct to the ports of China or the Near East, or the assignment of free space on the vessels of established lines; and be it further

Resolved, That we especially urge the Oregon delegation in Congress to procure the enactment of such legislation.

Adopted by the senate February 8, 1921.

House joint memorial 11.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate concurring), respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is a long strip of country along the southwestern coast of Oregon that has no adequate shipping facilities and the country is greatly retarded by lack thereof; and

Whereas the people of Port Orford, Curry County, Oreg., have organized a port district and have built a wharf at Port Orford at a cost of $40,000; and

Whereas by a small expenditure of money a breakwater of approximately 500 feet in length could be built from a point near the present wharf to a point of rock in the ocean that would allow the largest vessels afloat to land at the wharf at all seasons of the year; and

Whereas there is a great demand for Port Orford cedar, and southwestern Oregon is the only part of the world where said cedar grows, and there is at present no proper shipping facilities for this and other products in said vicinity: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, memorialized to take the necessary steps to have a survey made of the port of Port Orford with the view of making said breakwater or jetty.

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Oregon be directed to transmit by mail a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oregon in Congress.

Adopted by the senate February 10, 1921.

ROY W. RITNER,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house February 2, 1921.

LOUIS E. BEAN,
Speaker of the House.

[Indorsed: House joint memorial No. 11. Introduced by Mr. Peirce. W. F. Drager, chief clerk. Filed Feb. 11, 1921. Sam A. Kozer, secretary of state.]

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Memorial 1 of the Joint Assembly of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Oregon.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialist, the Joint Assembly of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, respectfully represents that—

Whereas it is fitting and proper that the United States of America should commemorate the restoration of peace after the mighty conflict of the World's War and the triumph of democracy, which marks the beginning of what promises to be the greatest era of industrial activity and development that the world has ever known; and

Whereas it is essential to our national peace, strength, and unity that a strong line of defense be built along the western coast of the United States, to serve as a bulwark against intrusion or invasion from the west and the most effective line of defense is a highly developed, thickly populated section, supported by industries and agricultural lands; and

Whereas Oregon has vast undeveloped natural resources, consisting of timber, irrigable lands, water power, minerals, scenic beauty, and other attractions, which should be known to all the world and invitations extended to all to participate in their development and enjoyment; and

Whereas vast undeveloped water power of the streams of Oregon constitute a national asset, which should be developed and utilized for the national good, and the Columbia River and its tributaries, constituting one of the largest units of undeveloped power in the world to-day, should be called to the attention of our Nation and to those who may be interested in their development; and

Whereas through hydroelectric-power development and the resulting manufacturing and industrial expansion, the great markets of the Orient may be opened to the products of the United States; and

Whereas the discovery of the electromagnet in 1825 has opened the way to many new uses for electrical power and has made it one of the most important factors in industrial manufacturing and agricultural development; and

Whereas the desired results may best be accomplished through an exposition held on the Pacific coast at which all States and foreign nations may participate: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the joint assembly of the senate and house of representatives, That the Congress of the United States be, and the same is hereby, memorialized to invite foreign nations to participate in the Atlantic-Pacific Highways and Electrical Exposition to be held in the city of Portland, State of Oregon, in the year 1925; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the Senate and Speaker of House of Representatives of the United States of America.

Adopted by the senate, February 11, 1921.

ROY W. RITNER,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house, February 12, 1921.

LOUIS E. BEAN,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Sam A. Kozer, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house joint memorial No. 8 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Thirty-first Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon and filed in the office of the secretary of state February 11, 1921, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

House joint memorial 8.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Oregon, in regular session assembled, respectfully represent that—

Whereas your honorable body has under consideration a bill compelling every manufacturer or handler or seller of woolen fabrics and woolen garments to place thereon a tag plainly stating the exact percentage of virgin wool and also how much and what other materials enter into such cloth; and

Whereas such a law will be of inestimable value to both those who wear clothing and also to producers of wool and mohair; and

Whereas Oregon is interested both as a producer and as a user of woolen goods: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact such legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be directed to transmit by mail a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oregon.

Adopted by the senate February 10, 1921.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of St. Joseph's Council No. 1325, Knights of Columbus, of Hays, and St. Agnes Branch, No. 978, Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association, of Leavenworth, both in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution of Nimmons Local No. 3616, Farmers' Union, of Nimmons, Ark., favoring legislation to prevent gambling in grain products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution of the Kansas State League of Local Building and Loan Associations, of Topeka, Kans., favoring an amendment to the income tax law, providing that incomes not exceeding $500 in any one case derived by a member from his investment of savings in shares of a domestic building and loan association or cooperative bank, shall be exempted from the operation of the law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of North Dakota, which will be printed in the RECORD under the rule. It provides for setting aside the most wonderful and picturesque section of country in the world for a national park, namely, the Bad Lands, including the Petrified Forest.

The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

Concurrent resolution introduced by Mr. Carl B. Olsen, of Billings County.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, the Seventeenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, beg leave to represent to your honorable bodies:

First. That there is in the western part of this State, lying within the boundaries of Billings County, near the town of Medora, a wonderful petrified forest, consisting of thousands of petrified stumps ranging in size up to 8 and 10 feet high and as much as 14 feet in diameter. This prehistoric forest, appearing in a certain stratum of soil, is apparently in its original position. A large number of the stumps being erect while others are prostrate, due to the action of the elements in wearing away the soil on which this forest grew, while others appear as huge mushrooms on pedestals of firmer soil. That there is to be found among these petrified stumps the fossil leaves of these once giant trees. These fossils or petrified trees are found in the greatest profusion on four sections of land.

Second. That the surrounding country is a wonderful and picturesque section of Bad Lands along the Little Missouri River, being a distinct type of country, very interesting and alluring to tourists and sightseers, and of great scientific value.

Third. That there are groves of pines and quaking aspens which are found almost nowhere else within the State of North Dakota. Cedars, ash, cottonwood, boxelders, cherries, plums, and berry trees abound in the hills and in the draws and canyons and along the Little Missouri River.

Fourth. That our late President, Theodore Roosevelt, loved this country and made it his home and that his cattle ranged over every section of this country while he was engaged in the stock business in Billings County, N. Dak.

Fifth. That this is the natural home of deer, elk, antelope, and buffalo, and that there is now a considerable number of deer living on this tract of land. Bald and golden eagles are plentiful.

Sixth. That the above-mentioned features and points of interest, including Roosevelt's range, are all contained in 33 sections of land, including 21,945.04 acres, being sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 17, 18, 19, 20, township 140, range 101; sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 23, and 24, township 140, range 102; sections 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, township 141, range 101; and sections 26, 27, 34, 35, 36, township 141, range 102, all west of the fifth principal meridian. Less than 5 per cent of this land is susceptible to cultivation.

Seventh. That, even though the southern border of this proposed park is but one-half mile from the town of Medora, which is located on the Northern Pacific Railroad and the Red Trail or National Park Highway, it is nearly all inaccessible under the more convenient modes of travel and a large part is only accessible with saddle horses. Due to this fact the scenic and scientific wonders of this region are almost wholly unknown except locally.

Eighth. That there are artesian wells and natural fresh-water springs at various points on this tract, which make possible the most delightful and ideal camping grounds.

Now, therefore, we, the Seventeenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, believing that this wonderful fossil forest and this beautiful and fantastic section of Bad Lands, with its grotesque formation and its wonderfully colored buttes should be made accessible to scientists and sightseers and preserved inviolate for future generations, do hereby most respectfully petition your honorable bodies to take steps for the purchase of the above-described tract of land, and as much more as your honorable bodies may deem fit, and the establishment of a national park and game preserve. And we further respectfully request that the same shall be called Roosevelt Park as a lasting memorial to our beloved late President; and be it Resolved, by the Seventeenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be and are hereby authorized and instructed to use all honorable means to induce the Congress of the United States to make the proposed Roosevelt Park a reality in the near future, under the care and supervision of the Federal Government. Also that the secretary of state of North Dakota be, and is hereby, requested and instructed to transmit a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, and to each House of Congress, to each of our national Senators and Representatives, and also a copy of this memorial, together with a blue print of this proposed park, to the chairman of the National Park Commission.

This is to certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution originated in the House of Representatives of the Seventeenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, the Senate concurring therein, and was adopted.

L. L. TINCHELL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
H. LOOWSON,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.
H. REEFOOD,
President of the Senate.
W. J. PRATER,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a resolution adopted by the Knights of Columbus of the city of Grand Forks, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution.

Whereas at a meeting of the Grand Forks Council, held at Grand Forks on the 14th day of February, 1921, a thorough discussion of the Smith-Towner bill was had by the members present; and

Whereas the said members unanimously voted to oppose the said bill for the following reasons:

1. Because it involves the menace of a Federal educational bureaucracy.

2. Because it destroys the constitutional principle by which rights reserved to the States or to the people are inviolate; in particular the educational independence of the States.

3. Because education, which is fundamentally local, it centralizes at the National Capital at Washington, thus subverting the whole traditional policy of the country.

4. Because centralized and "bureaucratized" education tends to become "ossified" education; involves the schools in the national curse of red tape, creates another army of Government employees, and substitutes the Federal official for the local superintendent.

5. Because it decreases educational efficiency and would throttle educational freedom.

6. Because it will add hundreds of millions of dollars to the country's already staggering financial burden for a wholly unnecessary, useless, and wasteful national department.

7. Because it is in reality taxing the North to educate the South.

8. Because it would work grave injustice to the schools and teachers of Massachusetts and all educationally progressive States.

9. Because notable educational authorities, with no personal interests to be served by the bill, see in it a menace to American education.

10. Because it is not an American ideal, but a foreign importation, wholly inconsistent with American ideals of freedom and liberty: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Grand Forks Council, for the reasons above stated, is unalterably opposed to the said bill and requests you as their Representative in Congress to use your influence in opposing its passage.

Dated February 14.

M. NORMAN,
Grand Knight.
EDWARD A. KETTER,
Recording Secretary.

Mr. KEYES presented a resolution of executive officers of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New Hampshire, of Concord, N. H., protesting against privileges to erect any monuments, statues, or portrait tablets within a radius of 200 feet of the National Memorial Arch at the intersection of Clay Street in the city of Vicksburg, Miss., which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. WARREN presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, W. E. Chaplin, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of enrolled senate joint memorial No. 3, of the Sixteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original senate joint memorial No. 5, has been carefully compared with the original filed in this office, and is a full, true, and correct transcript of the same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 16th day of February, A. D. 1921.

[SEAL.] W. E. CHAPLIN,
Secretary of State.
By H. M. SYMONS, Deputy.

Enrolled joint memorial 3, Senate, Sixteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming.

Memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States requesting of Congress prompt action on H. R. 15873 for extension of Federal aid for highway construction:

Whereas the Federal Government has heretofore and during the past years extended Federal aid to the several States of the Union for the purpose of constructing permanent highways; and

Whereas by reason of such Federal aid many of the States have begun the construction of permanent State and interstate highways, which have been completed in part and the completion of which will necessitate further Federal aid; and

Whereas heretofore, on the 25th day of January, 1921, the Roads Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States did unanimously recommend an authorization for the appropriation of $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, also the appropriation of $3,000,000 for the national forest roads and trails, which said recommendation is known as H. R. 15873, by the terms of which bill further Federal aid will be extended to the States of the Union for further permanent road construction and completion of roads under construction under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Wyoming did heretofore pass and adopt a law assenting to and agreeing to conform to the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," together with all acts and legislation amendatory thereto or supplementary thereto, or which shall grant or authorize aid for the construction, improvement, maintenance, or repair of public roads or highways: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Wyoming (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to take favorable and prompt action and to pass H. R. 15873 as unanimously recommended by the Roads Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to Senator FRANCIS E. WARREN, Senator JOHN B. KENDRICK, and Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, Representative in Congress for the State of Wyoming.

W. W. DALEY,
President of the Senate.
L. R. EWART,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution of the board of directors of the Savannah Cotton Exchange, of Savannah, Ga., protesting against transferring the Hydrographic Office from the Navy Department to the Department of Commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PHIPPS presented a resolution of the Legislature of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

House joint resolution, by George R. Smith and George A. Pughe.

To the honorable COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE:

Whereas under date of January 20, 1921, the honorable Commissioner of Internal Revenue issued a ruling relative to the taxability of adulterated butter under section 4 of the act of 1902, thereby placing a tax of 10 cents per pound upon butter which is manufactured from cream which is high in acid and which has been neutralized with chemicals before churning; and

Whereas such ruling applies to approximately 80 per cent of the butter manufactured in Colorado and 75 per cent of the butter manufactured in the United States; and

Whereas the use of lime water for the purpose of neutralizing cream which is high in acid has been a recognized practice for many years' standing that has been carried on with the full knowledge of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the various State and Federal authorities, and is in no way harmful or deleterious, and has in no degree ever been used as fraud or deception on any person or the public; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-third General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the Senate concurring therein), That we are opposed to this excessive tax, and the new interpretation of the old established law which seriously interferes with the operation of a great industry in the State of Colorado, and which has been built up under the prevalent interpretation that such practice and custom were not in conflict with the act of 1902, and which new interpretation will destroy the present wide market which the farmers and manufacturers have heretofore enjoyed; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington, D. C.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution of Sandusky City Lodge, No. 14, of the Licensed Tugmen's Protective Association, of Sandusky, Ohio, favoring legislation placing a protective tariff on fish, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Idaho Mining Association, of Boise, Idaho, favoring legislation for the protection of the gold-mining industry, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

He also presented a resolution of the Idaho Mining Association, of Boise, Idaho, favoring a repeal of the 640-acre enlarged homestead grazing law, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the Idaho Mining Association, of Boise, Idaho, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 4571, to amend the United States mining laws, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

He also presented a resolution of the Idaho Mining Association, of Boise, Idaho, favoring a reduction in freight rates on ores, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

OIL CONCESSIONS IN COSTA RICA.

Mr. BORAH. I offer a resolution and ask that it be read. If it leads to any debate I will not ask for its consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 460) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the Senate such data and information as he may have relating to the acquisition of what is known as the Amory oil concession to certain subjects of Great Britain in Costa Rica, the time and manner of the acquisition of such concession, its extent, and the present status of the controversy between the Governments of Great Britain and Costa Rica relative to the same, including particularly a copy of a letter—if such is in the possession of our Government—written by a British subject to a certain Dr. Urribo in Costa Rica, purporting to give certain facts relative to the acquisition of said concession; also such data and information as may be available touching another oil concession known as the Pinto-Freulich concession, the time and manner of its acquisition, its extent, and its present status.

Secondly, such data and information as may be available relative to the visit of Mr. Bennett, British minister to Costa Rica lately made, and the note which he dispatched to the Costa Rican Government demanding an adjustment of the Amory oil concession and certain other claims of British subjects.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I hope the resolution will be agreed to.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

NATIONAL LOANS TO BELGIUM (S. DOC. NO. 413).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith call your attention to an agreement with Belgium made by the British and French premiers and myself, which is embodied in the following letter:

JUNE 16, 1919.

M. HYMANS,
Ministre des Affaires Etrangeres, Hotel Lotti, Paris.

SIR: The Reparation Clauses of the draft Treaty of Peace with Germany obligate Germany to make reimbursement of all sums which Belgium has borrowed from the Allied and Associated Governments up to November 11, 1918, on account of the violation by Germany of the Treaty of 1839. As evidence of such an obligation Germany is to make a special issue of bonds to be delivered to the Reparation Commission.

Each of the undersigned will recommend to the appropriate governmental agency of his Government that upon the delivery to the Reparation Commission of such bonds his Government accept an amount thereof corresponding to the sums which Belgium has borrowed from his Government since the war and up to November 11, 1918, together with interest at 5 per cent unless already included in such sums, in satisfaction of Belgium's obligation on account of such loans, which obligation of Belgium's shall thereupon be canceled.

We are, dear Mr. Minister,
Very truly yours,

G. CLEMENCEAU.
WOODROW WILSON.
D. LLOYD-GEORGE.

In recommending to you that Congress take appropriate action with regard to this agreement, certain facts should be brought to your attention.

The neutrality of Belgium was guaranteed by the Treaty of London of 1839. In considering the reparation to be made by Germany it was agreed that the action of Germany in grossly violating this Treaty by an attack on Belgium, obligated the German Government under international law to repay to Belgium the costs of war. On this principle the Treaty of Versailles (Art. 232) provided that in accordance with Germany's pledges already given as to the complete restoration for Belgium, Germany should undertake, in addition to the compensation for material damage, to make reimbursement of all sums which Belgium had borrowed from the Allied and Associated Governments up to November 11, 1918, together with interest at 5 per cent per annum on such sums. This obligation was to be discharged by a special issue of bearer bonds to an equivalent amount payable in gold marks on May 1, 1926, or at the option of the German Government on the 1st of May in any year up to 1926.

For various reasons the undertaking defined in the above letter was not embodied in the Treaty. Belgium's obligations to the United States for advances made up to the date of the Armistice amounted to approximately $171,000,000, and to England and France they amounted, I am informed, to about £164,700,000. In view of the special circumstances in which Belgium became involved in the war and the attitude of this country toward Belgium, it was felt that the United States might well agree to make the same agreement respecting pre-Armistice loans to Belgium as England and France offered to do.

Advances made by the Treasury to the Belgian Government from the beginning of the war to the Armistice amounted to $171,780,000. This principal sum, however, includes advances of $490,400 made to enable the Belgians to pay the interest due November 15, 1917, and $1,571,468.42 to enable the payment of the interest due May 15, 1918. The interest on the advances has been paid up to April 15, 1919, the interest due from May 15, 1918, to that date having been paid out of the Treasury loans for which the United States holds Belgian obligations, which, however, were made after November 11, 1918, the date of the Armistice. This latter advance would not come within the terms of the agreement above mentioned. If, therefore, the United States accepts payment of Belgian obligations given before the Armistice by receiving a corresponding amount of German obligations, it would seem that it should receive German obligations amounting to $171,780,000 with interest from April 15, 1919.

Although it is understood that England and France will take their share of the German bonds when received by Belgium, I am informed that the Reparation Commission has not as yet finally determined the details of the issuance of the necessary bonds by the German Government. A recommendation at this time that suitable legislative action should be taken may appear somewhat premature, but in view of the approaching termination of my Administration I have brought this matter to your attention, hoping that suitable action may be taken at the appropriate time.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
22 February, 1921.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4897) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That subdivisions (2) and (3) of subsection (b) of section 9 of an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended, be, and hereby are, amended so as to read as follows:

"(2) A woman who, at the time of her marriage, was a subject or citizen of a nation which has remained neutral in the war, or of a nation which was associated with the United States in the prosecution of said war, and who, prior to April 6, 1917, intermarried with a subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary and that the money or other property concerned was not acquired by such woman, either directly or indirectly, from any subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary subsequent to January 1, 1917.

"(3) A woman who, at the time of her marriage, was a citizen of the United States and who, prior to April 6, 1917, intermarried with a subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary, and that the money or other property concerned was not acquired by such woman, either directly or indirectly, from any subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary subsequent to January 1, 1917."

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WILHELM ALEXANDERSON—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SPENCER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12634) for the relief of Wilhelm Alexanderson, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

SELDEN P. SPENCER,
HENRY W. KEYES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
G. W. EDMONDS,
E. C. LITTLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask that the report be agreed to.

The report was agreed to.

JOHN E. MOORE CO.—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SPENCER. I present one other conference report of the same type.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not object if it does not take any longer than the other report, but we have fixed an hour to vote to-day and there are several Senators who would like to have an opportunity to speak on the bill before the Senate. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has not finished his address, and I do not feel that it is fair to the Senate to allow business to intervene at this time which will at all interfere with the order.

Mr. SPENCER. I will say to the Senator that if it takes any time I will let it go over.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11572) for the relief of the John E. Moore Co. having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

SELDEN P. SPENCER,

H. R. 15901. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

PAYMENTS DUE RAILROAD COMPANIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15836) to amend the transportation act, 1920.

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. See Appendix.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which the Secretary will read.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Wisconsin moves, on page 2, after line 21, to insert:

(c) That no payment of money shall be made to any railroad company under this act except and until it shall be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, upon full investigation, and finding duly entered thereon, certifying (1) that such railroad company has not, since March 1, 1920, paid or contracted to pay unreasonable and extravagant prices for railway supplies, equipment, repairs, and renewals charged to its maintenance account, or (2) that it has not paid or agreed to pay unreasonable sums as salaries to its officers or directors, or (3) that it has not otherwise managed and conducted its business in a dishonest, inefficient, or uneconomical manner in violation of the terms of the transportation act of 1920.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I demand the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I have been unable to get a transfer, and not knowing how the junior Senator from West Virginia would vote on the pending question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], but I understand that if present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I feel privileged to vote and I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I understand, however, that he would vote as I shall vote, and I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I think he would vote as I am going to vote, but I shall take no chances. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. KIRBY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], but on this bill and all questions pertaining to it I am at liberty to vote. I will, therefore, allow my vote to stand.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], with whom I am paired, is not present. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS). I wish to announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is absent on official business. If present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

I desire also to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], and that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 47, as follows:

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. STANLEY. I move to strike out subsection (b) of the bill after the words "Section 209," in line 10, page 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, strike out lines 11 to 21, inclusive, which read as follows:

(b) In ascertaining the several amounts payable under either of such sections the commission is authorized, in the case of deferred debits and credits which can not at the time be definitely determined, to make, whenever in its judgment practicable, a reasonable estimate of the net effect of any such items and, when agreed to by the carrier or express company, to use such estimate as a definitely ascertained amount in certifying amounts payable under either of such sections, and such estimates so agreed to shall be prima facie but not conclusive evidence of their correctness in amount in final settlement.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, it is admitted that 90 per cent of all claims made by the railroads may be definitely ascertained at this time—all operating charges, all contracts about which there is no contention. In addition to that there are a number of claims pending in the nature of lis pendens. There are thousands of cases now unadjudicated in the courts—damage suits, questions on the interpretation of contracts, on the value of services performed, or the quality of materials furnished. These are not questions cognizable for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The great strength, the one thing upon which we depend in this hour of trial for the railroads, is the implicit faith of the country at large in the wisdom and the fairness and the justice and the incorruptibility of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission has all that it can do. It can not, if it would, transform itself into a court, and, Mr. President, it should not if it could. Those who are familiar with the history of the growth of the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over the conduct of railroads remember the old contention that the Interstate Commerce Commission should not exercise a purely judicial function.

Now, to illustrate: A has suffered damage by reason of some personal injury and has sued corporation B for so many thousand dollars. This bill provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall go into a voluminous record touching the quantum of personal injuries and shall find out how much A ought to recover, and then shall determine that amount, and, if the railroad agrees to it, it shall be prima facie evidence that a case in court has been justly settled.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has no process whatever; it is not equipped to try such cases; it is not equipped to pass on the delicate questions of law; it is not equipped to cross-examine witnesses and to pass upon complicated questions of fact. To impose upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the stupendous task of sitting as a court and passing upon thousands of suits now pending in various parts of the country is, to my mind, absurd.

In addition to that, Mr. President, there is nothing to be gained by it. Under subsection (a) of this bill, just at the minute the railroad can definitely determine what is due it, we shall have established a method by which it can be paid without delay. If A has a suit against the Baltimore & Ohio or the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and a judgment is rendered against them and the railroad agrees that that judgment is final, that judgment may be brought to the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission, so much money due, and it can issue a certificate, and that settles it. As fast as the courts now instituted for that purpose pass without additional expense upon cases now pending before them, their judgment will automatically be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and those cases will be settled. To allow the Interstate Commerce Commission to exercise a purely judicial function, to usurp the province of the courts—a power that has never before been intrusted to it—would establish a dangerous precedent.

In addition to the viciousness of the precedent, it would be a waste of the valuable time of the commission and would not materially relieve the courts. All that has to be done under section (a), for which I voted and of which I heartily approve, is to permit the unliquidated damages to be determined, the undecided cases to be decided, and automatically the claims may be adjusted. To convert the Interstate Commerce Commission into a guessing school, to have it make estimates of the amounts that are due the various railroads or the amounts that the railroads owe to various litigants, if the matter is to be judicially determined, will involve as much additional work as the commission is now performing. If those amounts are to be roughly guessed at it will mean injustice either to the people or to the carriers. The railroads are, or ought to be——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. STANLEY. I did not know there was a time limit. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for five minutes longer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senator from Kentucky is limited to 10 minutes.

Mr. STANLEY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary for me to offer any answer to the argument which has been made, and I am as anxious as anyone can be to dispose of the pending measure in order that the Agricultural appropriation bill may be considered, but I will say that paragraph (b) was suggested by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Senate committee included in its bill originally a provision to the effect that the Interstate Commerce Commission might negotiate an agreement with the railroads which should be conclusive. It went to the House, and the House changed "conclusive" to "prima facie," and your committee, knowing that if this bill is to become a law it must not be sent to conference and thus be subject to renewed discussion when the conference report comes to the two Houses, felt that it was the part of wisdom to agree to what the House had done.

This is the object of it—and I say this as applying to other suggestions that have been made on the subject: In the first place, the bill provides only for the certification of payment of amounts definitely determined as belonging to the railroads and appropriated therefor by Congress. That means that the Interstate Commerce Commission will offset every possible claim of the hundreds that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has mentioned by withholding a sufficient amount from the railroads to cover any possible emergency that might involve the Government in loss. The commission felt that if it were authorized to negotiate with the railroads, if it had the right to consider all of the proposed claims which might be pending or which were at all probable, it could thus secure a quick and final settlement—the very thing which the Senator from Wisconsin most desires.

This provision only gives the commission the right to negotiate with the railroads on their pending claims or any proposition for a claim and thus determine as to what amount should be paid in final settlement of all of these claims. This plan can not result in loss to the Government. It is possible it may result in gain.

Your committee believed, Mr. President, that it was a wise thing for us to do, and I repeat, unless there is great and fundamental objection to this kind of a proposition, those Senators who desire to terminate this measure at this session of Congress can not well afford to send it to conference and thus subject it to the debate which will occur in both Houses by the minority who are opposed to the pending legislation under any conditions. Therefore I ask, unless it is clearly shown to be necessary for good legislation, that no amendments shall be adopted at this time.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I desire to say merely a word or two. Your committee spent many days considering this subject. This provision of the bill, subdivision (b) was not suggested by the railroads, but was urged by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Mr. Commissioner Clark explained that there were damage suits for personal injuries and suits for overcharges of freight and for damage to freight pending or which might be pending in the courts. Of course the total amount would be small as compared with the total due to the railroads.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. KELLOGG. I will answer a question, but I have not much time.

Mr. STANLEY. I hope the interruption will not be taken out of the Senator's time. The Senator is a great lawyer and I wish to ask him this question: Has any act of Congress creating the Interstate Commerce Commission or enlarging its powers ever authorized it to exercise a purely judicial function and pass on the relative rights of the railroad and a litigant in a damage suit?

Mr. KELLOGG. I can not yield further, but I will answer that question. The original act taking over the railroads gave the President a greater power to settle with the railroads in regard to disputed claims than this bill gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission in settling such questions with the railroads.

Mr. STANLEY. That is not my question.

Mr. KELLOGG. I can not yield further to the Senator; I am sorry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota declines to yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Commissioner Clark explained that the total amount of the claims was small as compared with the total amount due the railroads; that the amount of these claims would not decrease the amount due the railroads but would only increase it, and it was in the interest of the public to give the commission power, instead of holding these small claims up through years, perhaps, of litigation, to make an adjustment, which they could make with absolute safety to the public. Of course they would not pay over any money to the railroads without reserving a sufficient sum to protect the Government against all possible claims. When we remembered that these claims would only increase the amount due the railroads instead of decreasing it, we felt as though it was in the interest of economy and in the interest of the public to permit this power to be reposed in the commission. It is not as great a power as we conferred upon the President and his Director General to settle with the railroads the disputed claims during the two years of Government operation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. STANLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senate for just a few minutes.

The question here, the principal question, is simply this: Assuming that there is a debt of $10,000,000 concededly due from the Government to a railroad company, and there is another debt of $100,000, which is disputed, and honestly disputed, should the Government refuse to pay any of the $10,000,000 until after the other $100,000 claim is settled?

Under the holding of a local court the Government was not obliged to and could not, so it was claimed, pay any part of it until the entire indebtedness was determined. The pending bill is simply for the purpose of enabling the Government to pay its debt as it is known and determined. As a result of the failure to pay these debts the railroads have not been able to pay their material men; they have not been able to pay for new equipment; they have not been able even to pay for their coal.

I have in my office a letter from one of the large coal companies of Cleveland in which they tell me that the New York Central Railroad Co., the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. owe them very large sums of money, and they are not able to get a dollar upon these claims. As a result they are very much embarrassed.

And now, if I may take a moment to answer some of the statements which were made here yesterday and perhaps to-day with regard to the enormous profits, and so forth, which the railroads have made under existing freight and passenger rates, I want to call the Senate's attention to a statement which I received this morning from the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It comes in answer to a telephonic message from me. The figures have been tabulated by Dr. Lorenz, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I expect to introduce into the RECORD this statement as it comes to me from the Interstate Commerce Commission, but before I do so I want to call the attention of the Senate briefly to just a few figures contained in the statement to indicate the earnings and the expenditures of the railroads.

In 1917 the operating revenues of all of the class I roads were $4,050,463,579.

In 1920 the operating revenues were $6,213,489,049.

In 1917 the operating expenses were $2,858,212,210.

In 1920 they were $5,810,970,021.

In 1917 the ratio of operating expenses to operating revenues was 70.57 per cent.

In 1920 the ratio of operating expenses to operating revenues was 93.53 per cent.

In other words, of their gross earnings there would be less than 7 per cent with which to pay taxes and interest on bonds and possible dividends.

If I may go further, figured on the basis of the traffic of 1917, the increase in operating revenues for the year 1920 over 1917 was $2,600,000,000; but let us look at the other side of the ledger.

The increase in wages alone for the year 1920 over 1917 was $2,156,417,594.

The increase in the cost of fuel to the railroad companies in 1920 over 1917 was $200,000,000.

The increase in taxes for 1920 over 1917 was $60,000,000.

So you see that nearly the entire increase in revenues was consumed by the increase in wages, the increase in coal, and the increase in taxes; and I have said nothing whatsoever about the increase in materials.

Mr. President, I do not care to take further time; but I think that if Senators want to know what the facts are they will be interested in having this communication read, and I therefore send it to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
February 21, 1921.

Memorandum regarding increases in revenues and expenses of steam roads since 1917.

The revenues and expenses as shown by the monthly reports of Class I roads, 1917 to 1920, are as follows:

Calendar year.	Operating revenues.	Operating expenses.	Net operating income.	Operating ratio.
1917	$4,050,463,579	$2,858,212,210	$974,778,937	70.57
1918	4,926,593,957	4,017,209,501	693,111,170	81.54
1919	5,184,230,244	4,419,988,750	515,793,287	85.26
1920	6,213,489,049	5,810,970,021	67,823,711	93.53

It will be seen that in spite of an increase of over $2,000,000,000 in operating revenues, the net return has been nearly eliminated because of an increase of about $3,000,000,000 in operating expenses. This is reflected by the increase in the operating ratio.

The volume of traffic in 1917 was slightly below that of 1918 and 1920, but somewhat greater than that of 1919. The principal source of the increased revenues is from the increase in rates. Certain increases granted by the commission in 1917 became operative for the full year 1918, but the general increase effective in June, 1918, of 25 per cent in freight rates, was reflected in the revenues of that year for only the last half of the year. In 1919 no general increases were made. In the calendar year 1917 Class I roads received an average revenue per ton mile of 7.15 mills, while in 1919 the corresponding figure was 9.73 mills, an increase of 2.58 mills per ton mile. Applied to the total freight traffic of 1917, namely, 394,465,400,493 ton miles, the increased freight charges per annum over the basis existing in 1917 amounted to approximately $1,017,720,000. In 1920 the increase in freight rates was made applicable late in August. While this increase has been estimated at 33⅓ per cent, the statistics do not indicate that the increase realized has been as great as that. Taking an increase over 1919 of 30 per cent for illustration, the increase would be 2.019 mills per ton mile, which when applied to the traffic of 1917 would produce approximately $1,151,440,000.

Passenger fares were also increased in June, 1918, and again in August, 1920. In 1917 the average revenue was 2.000 cents per passenger mile, as against 2.541 cents in 1919, an increase of 4.51 mills. Applied to the traffic of 1917, or 39,476,858,549 passenger miles, this amounts to approximately $178,000,000 annually. The increase allowed in 1920 was 20 per cent. Reports available at this time indicate that an average increase of 4.6 mills per passenger mile was realized. Applied to the 1917 traffic as above, the increased annual revenue amounts to $181,589,000. There has also been added a surcharge on Pullman travelers for the benefit of the railroads, amounting to perhaps $25,000,000 annually, and an increase in compensation for carrying the mail yielding about $45,000,000 annually.

The increases above mentioned total nearly $2,600,000,000 annually on the basis of the traffic of 1917.

On the side of expenses, wages are the principal source of increase. Increases were granted in 1918 and made retroactive to January 1 of that year. Further increases were granted from time to time by the Director General of Railroads, and there was an increase of about 22 per cent in July, 1920, granted by the United States Railroad Labor Board, the increase being made retroactive to May 1, 1920. According to statistics published by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the first six months of 1920, the pay roll of Class I roads without any of the increase granted by the Labor Board was $1,596,680,268, which, for 12 months would have been $3,193,360,536. The actual pay roll in 1917 was $1,739,482,142, an increase of $1,453,878,394. Twenty-two per cent of the $3,193,360,536, is $702,539,200. This added to the $1,453,878,394 gives a total increase in wages over the 1917 basis of $2,156,417,594.

It may further be assumed that the fuel consumed in 1917 would, at the prices paid by railroads in 1920, have cost $200,000,000 additional annually. Increased taxes account for about another $60,000,000. In addition there were increases on materials, the amount of which can not be given at this writing.

It should be said that all of the figures showing the results of increases in rates and costs are subject to revision, and are given at this time merely to illustrate roughly where the increased revenue came from and where it went. No statement can be made at this time as to the extent to which the roads were under or over maintained during 1920.

If the rates granted in August had been in effect during the whole year 1920, the roads would have made a better showing. What showing will be made in 1921 depends so much on the extent to which traffic revives and to what extent economies in expenditure can be effected that it is quite impossible to make a prediction. It may be noted, however, that in October, 1920, the best month under the new rates and fares and under the new wage schedules, the net railway operating revenue was $86,455,487.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments as in Committee of the Whole? If not, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S.

4683) to amend section 11 (m) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and March 3, 1919, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 11 of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended, be further amended by striking out the whole of subsection (m), and by substituting therefor a subsection to read as follows:

"(m) Upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members the Federal Reserve Board shall have power to permit Federal reserve banks to discount for any member bank notes, drafts, or bills of exchange bearing the signature or indorsement of any one borrower in excess of the amount permitted by section 9 and section 13 of this act, but in no case to exceed 20 per cent of the member bank's capital and surplus: Provided, however, That all such notes, drafts, or bills of exchange discounted for any member bank in excess of the amount permitted under such sections shall be secured by not less than a like face amount of bonds or notes of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, for which the borrower shall in good faith prior to January 1, 1921, have paid or agreed to pay not less than the full face amount thereof, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States: Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection (m) shall not be operative after October 31, 1921."

Mr. McLEAN. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as a member of the committee, I should like to know from the chairman of the committee what changes were made by the House.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the Senator that this bill merely extends the time for which the Federal reserve banks may discount eligible paper that is secured by Government bonds. In the Senate bill the time was extended to the 1st of January, 1922. This amendment extends it to the 31st of October next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

BERNARD M. BARUCH AND JOHN D. RYAN.

Mr. THOMAS resumed and concluded the speech begun by him earlier in the day. The entire speech is as follows:

Mr. President, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday contains a very bitter attack upon two prominent and reputable citizens of the United States, whose services to their country during the late war were conspicuous and invaluable. The details of this attack have been distributed all over the United States by the Associated Press, and the people of the country are by this time familiar with them. The substance or basis of this attack reveals nothing of a novel character, but consists of a repetition of charges made heretofore, and its alleged justification rests upon a newspaper criticism of the author of the attack, who has seen fit to resent and to denounce it by turning his own vocabulary of abuse upon these two gentlemen. I regret very much, Mr. President, that any Member of either House should take advantage of his high position and under its privileges to spread in the RECORD of congressional proceedings charges which, if true, should be exposed and their authors punished by the proper authority; charges which, if false, inflict cruel, unjust, unwarrantable, and incalculable pain and injury upon their victims.

I am morally certain that these charges can not be true, and but for the obvious rules of propriety, which limit criticisms of Members of either House by Members of the other, I should be constrained to speak more strongly concerning this subject than under the circumstances is possible; as strongly, indeed, Mr. President, as I do characterize it as a private citizen, beyond the confines of the Senate Chamber.

A few days ago the country was startled by the charge that Mr. Charles M. Schwab, who had been requested to assume and who had assumed charge of our shipping construction activities, had received for personal expenses the sum of $269,000 from the public funds, and that the voucher or the account had either strangely disappeared or could not be accounted for, or had been mysteriously manipulated. That furnished a 10-days' sensation to the press, and this man's good name was bandied from lip to lip in terms of disgust and contempt. In many instances he was denounced as a thief, and it is not surprising that upon his appearance before the committee to vindicate himself he lost control of his emotions and burst into tears as he mentioned the cruel reflection upon his good name and business reputation.

Mr. President, modern public opinion seems to have reversed the old presumption of innocence, and has placed the burden of proof upon every man charged with criminal misconduct, however malicious the charge or however irresponsible the maker of it, who must pass the rest of his life with a blasted reputation unless he is able to sustain the burden and vindicate himself beyond reasonable doubt. Even then he must listen to the whisperings of malice and of enemies to his dying day. I do not believe that a more sincere patriot exists in America than Charles M. Schwab, nor a man who did more for his country and made greater sacrifices during the war, the soldiers alone excepted, than this distinguished citizen of the great State of Pennsylvania. The committee of investigation unanimously exonerated him from the charge, Democrats and Republicans alike joining in this tribute to his integrity and his character, and the Nation has approved that vindication. If they have not, they should do it forthwith. The ignominy cast upon him was more than an affront. It was a moral and political crime.

Mr. Schwab is a Republican. I do not mean to say that his vindication was due to that circumstance, but it is a singular fact that Bernard M. Baruch and John D. Ryan, equal in their patriotism and integrity to Mr. Schwab, both of whom have also been investigated, have not been similarly acquitted, as they should be, affiliate with the Democratic organization. Can it be that the investigations of the conduct of the war which have microscopically examined everything of a semisuspicious character, whether of fact or of rumor, are too eager to discover mere political material to do justice to the good name of every man prominently concerned for his country during the world conflict and whose reputations are the most precious of all their possessions?

More than a year ago I placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the answer of Mr. John D. Ryan to the charges and insinuations then made against him, a fact which the public has long since forgotten, while the charges against his integrity are still active and in public circulation. I have known Mr. Ryan ever since he was a young man just starting out in the world to earn a living. He was then a citizen of my State engaged in the oil business and representing an independent oil concern. He was then clean and capable as he has been ever since. From that humble position through the sheer force of his abilities and his energy as a man and as a citizen he advanced from post to post until he has become one of the great business captains of his generation, and a shining mark for the envenomed shafts of malice and falsehood.

Mr. President, I have just been informed of an arrangement for the morning of which I was ignorant; hence I shall yield the floor in a moment. But I shall resume the subject before the session closes. Let me say before I take my seat that I know of no more patriotic class of citizens evolved by the war than the dollar-a-year men, men who left their own enterprises and their own businesses and flocked to the city of Washington, who freely gave their time, their experience, their intelligence to the welfare of the Nation, and with one or two exceptions so performed their duties as to demand the grateful appreciation of their countrymen. Before I take my seat I must also pay my tribute to the high character, the spotless integrity, and the disinterested patriotism of Mr. Baruch. I do not hesitate to say that he contributed individually as much as, if not more, than any single individual to the vigorous and successful prosecution of the war. In discharging the great responsibilities placed upon him he met all personal expenditures out of his own pocket. He is millions of dollars poorer with the close of the war than at its beginning, and he would disdain to make any claim against the Government for his disbursements. He is able because of the men who know and believe in him to bear with serene composure these monstrous charges against his integrity as a man and an administrator. No man enjoying the immunity of privilege should from his high position denounce the helpless citizen—who has neither recourse to the courts against him for the vindication of his character nor for damages to his reputation—unless he be justified by personal knowledge of the facts, and only then because required in the discharge of an inexorable public duty to do so.

This is especially true when the object of the charge is personally unknown to him who makes it. And that is here an expressly admitted fact. It is easy to loosen the floodgates of denunciation, to accuse others of crimes, of treason, and official misprision; yet wholly impossible to restrain their consequences albeit their victim be guiltless and wholly wronged. Yet all of us are prone to do this. Hardly a day passes that we do not denounce some nation or some official in terms of opprobrium which our sober reflection condemns. It is wrong, it is indefensible, it is cowardly, and in the case of nations it may prove dangerous.

Mr. President, the specific charge reiterated against Mr. Baruch yesterday is that his—

Baruch's reputation as a man of integrity in the business world, an efficient war administrator of honor, and a private citizen of distinguished position is not liable to suffer from the grotesque attack of WILLIAM E. MASON, Illinois Member at large of the House of Representatives and unequaled notoriety seeker in Congress. He first says that Mr. Baruch, as chairman of the War Industries Board, "stole $50,000,000 in copper alone," and then when called upon by Mr. Baruch to submit his evidence immediately to Congress and to the Attorney General of the United States refuses to do so now, but declares that he will amend his statement to read that "you and your associates stole $200,000,000 in copper alone."

It so happened, Mr. President, that in 1917 my attention was drawn to an agreement which had been entered into between Mr. Baruch, as chairman of the War Industries Board, and representatives of the copper industry of America, some time during the early summer of 1917, which fixed the price for Government consumption at 16¾ cents per pound, as against the then prevailing rate of over 26 cents per pound.

That arrangement, while beneficial to the Government, which had become the great consumer, threatened to close a number of small mining concerns which were making a small profit at the prevailing price, owing to the enormous increase in the cost of production. One of those mines was situated in the State of Utah, and, being requested by Mr. SMOOT, the senior Senator from that State, to accompany him, we interviewed Mr. Baruch, calling his attention to this drastic consequence of the fixation of that price for copper.

A few great companies would profit, not unduly, but profit considerably, under that arrangement, while a number of small concerns would necessarily go to the wall, and it was that condition, Mr. President, quite as much as any other, which resulted in a subsequent elevation of the price to a point under which the smaller producer could exist. The Senator from Utah, well posted regarding the industry, laid the facts and figures before the chairman, who reluctantly acknowledged their correctness. As a matter of course, he could not establish one price for the large and another price for the small producers.

I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the copper companies profited after the Government and its allies became practically the sole consumer of that metal.

The assertion, however, that the chairman of the War Industries Board was an owner of shares in any of these copper companies is wholly unfounded, for he divested himself of every interest the possession of which might conflict with the proper discharge of his duties in that great position, with the single exception of an interest in certain tungsten properties in the State of California, then regarded as of nominal value. This stock, however, earned large dividends during the year 1918, every dollar of which belonging to the chairman of the War Industries Board was by him turned over unconditionally to and impartially divided between those great semipublic organizations, like the Young Men's Christian Association, which were then ministering to the welfare and endeavoring to supply many of the needs of the American Expeditionary Force.

My recollection is that Mr. Ryan was identified with the Red Cross from the commencement of the war, and became actively identified with the Government, when, at the request of the President of the United States, he assumed control of aviation production. He also resigned his positions in those great business organizations with which he had long been identified, and in the upbuilding of which he had been largely conspicuous, to the end that he might devote his time unremittingly to the service of the Government. From that time on he, too, was disinterestedly engaged in doing his part toward the successful prosecution of the war.

During all that time many of those now hounding the administration were then engaged in obstructing the operation of the Government, were denouncing our war activities, and sometimes predicting its ultimate defeat.

Mr. President, what must be the effect of these malign reflections upon the public spirit of America, when, unhappily, we shall hereafter be engaged in other great conflicts involving the Nation's life, if men of genius and business ability and practical experience, who give their time to the service of their country, and serve it well, must encounter subsequent venomous denunciation, arraigned as criminals, investigated with microscopic avidity, and held up to the contempt, the indignation, and the hatred of mankind? I do not complain of fair, complete, impartial, and nonpolitical investigation. Such action is always helpful. But what possible inducement can be offered to the disinterested patriotism of the average citizen if, forsooth, he is to assume public activities in the public interest he must thereafter expect to be denounced as a scoundrel, branded as a criminal, and held up to the indignant contempt of the present and other generations? But one consequence can result from this malign practice. It must inspire the indifference of the men sorely needed in the hour of national travail not only to their own obligations, but to the country which they would but dare not serve.

Our allies do not treat their great men, either civilian or military, in that manner. On the contrary, for their great services they are rewarded by the grateful recognition of an appreciative country. I do not hesitate to say that if men like Schwab and Baruch and Ryan had been citizens of France or of Italy or of England, they would long ago have been knighted for their services and justly rewarded by a grateful people. At the close of the war Britain elevated Field Marshal Haig to the peerage.

Every honor, civic and military, was paid him. He received a stipend sufficiently large to make him comfortable for life. Thus France rewarded her great heroes Joffre and Foch, and she honored herself thereby. But when the gallant Pershing returned, flushed with victory, the pride of the entire Nation, the living embodiment of militant Americanism, the Congress of the United States met in joint session and permitted him to address them for half an hour. Has it ever done anything else? His promotion to the rank of General was grudgingly bestowed.

Such is the contrast between the reception and the treatment of our own great men and that of their compeers across the sea. Our civilians are flouted, suspected, accused, and libeled. Why, Mr. President, I can conceive of no more ignominious spectacle than the appearance before the assembled Senators and Representatives of the United States of the victorious General of our Armies, the hero of the greatest conflict known to history, and essaying the rôle of humble speaker to the Nation's Legislature, which up to this time have not even honored him with a sword or other material symbol in acknowledgment of his services and as a reward for the victories which he and the Army under him achieved.

Of course, corruption abounded during the war. That is true of every war in history and of every country engaged in war. It is an inescapable epidemic. I was reading a few nights ago some rather disgraceful chapters of the Civil War in Rhodes's history of the United States. He reveals a condition then prevailing more corrupt and more demoralizing than anything that has yet been revealed by a partisan investigating committee anxious to secure material aspersing the men then in charge of public affairs, military, naval, and political, during the war just ended. At that time a major general of the United States Army was involved. He used his high command to speculate in contraband goods. A Secretary of War was so involved that his resignation, if not demanded, was thankfully received. Contracts for materials were more shamelessly profiteered in than anything that has been revealed thus far in the recent war; but they have been forgotten. It is the immediate situation which inspires interest and arouses condemnation.

The main fact, which always survives inferior events in history, is the splendid result of that tremendous conflict. It vindicated the cause of the Union and changed us from a loose federation of States to a unified and splendid Republic. The time is not far distant when the outstanding fact that this administration fought and won the greatest war in history will overshadow every consideration, and the pestiferous insects infesting the country, stinging and goading the great figures of contemporary history, will have perished with the poisonous atmosphere that gave them birth. If they are remembered at all, they will be remembered as are a few traducers of the immortal Lincoln, whose history requires their occasional mention.

Mr. President, I have said all and perhaps more than is necessary. These men can not speak here for themselves. Albeit they can be traduced, vilified, and misrepresented with impunity, and the RECORD which embalms these charges should carry with it some remonstrance and some feeble words in appreciation of the services which they have rendered their country. It is their only recourse, as has been suggested by my friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I would be recreant not only to my sense of justice but to the high opinion and the warm friendship which I entertain for both these great Americans if I sat silent at a time when their good names and their reputations are being assailed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, as the name of a very distinguished citizen of my own State is coupled with the one who was the subject of the very eloquent address just concluded by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I feel impelled to say a word.

Mr. John D. Ryan is charged jointly with Mr. Baruch in this theft of "$50,000,000 in copper alone," as it is expressed. If Mr. John D. Ryan and his associate had had their way, I never would have been a Member of this body at all. They succeeded in keeping me out of it for two years. I am under no obligation to them whatever; but that fact does not deter me from saying that in my estimation Mr. Ryan, as well as Mr. Baruch, gave to it in the time of stress of the Government most valuable services in a spirit of the most exalted patriotism, for which they are entitled to better treatment than has been accorded them.

From the time he quit after more than a year's arduous labor down to this day Mr. Ryan, particularly, has been hounded and assailed with accusations touching his motives in entering the public service and his acts while he was devoting himself unstintedly to it. The plain truth is that, like many other men of great capacity and success in business, moved by patriotic considerations when the war broke out, Mr. Ryan came to Washington and placed his great talents as a business organizer at the disposal of the American Red Cross, becoming its business manager, a position which would scarcely be chosen by one seeking an opportunity to profit, legitimately or otherwise, by the calamity into which the Nation had been plunged. He occupied that position until he was invited, when the country was aghast at the apparent collapse of the effort to produce aircraft in quantity, to take charge of the business end of the Air Service. If the results in that branch did not meet expectations, it was through no fault of his. Just as soon as the armistice was signed he tendered his resignation as Assistant Secretary of War and returned to his private business, having, as he thought, done all the service that he could in the crisis which was before us. The most urgent invitation was extended him to remain in the public service. I speak knowingly with respect to the matter. Yet he declined to do so, and the reward that has come to him has been as detailed by the Senator from Colorado. Not a word of recognition or appreciation has come from any source, except as some Members of the Senate or House have been moved by the attacks made upon him to say a word in commendation of his faithful service and of his devotion to the cause of his country.

So far as accusation touching copper is concerned, the plain truth has been repeatedly exposed upon the floor of both Houses of Congress. Copper was commanding in the market 32 or 33 cents a pound at the time a price on that commodity was fixed. By the ordinary procedure that was then being observed in the adjustment of prices, in order that the Government should not be subject to unjust exactions, an arrangement was made by which copper was offered to the Government at 23 cents a pound, and upon that basis purchases were made. Purchases, of course, were made from the company with which Mr. Ryan had been associated, the greatest producer of copper in the United States, as well as from other companies; but it is conceded that he had absolutely nothing to do with fixing the price, and if he did have anything to do with it there is no one who can assert that the price under all conditions was not fair and reasonable. Yet these gentlemen are subjected to these continued and continuing attacks upon the floor of one House of Congress where immunity is enjoyed. It is time that those who really appreciate the services that were rendered by the great big business men of the country during the war to marshal the assets and call out the material resources of the country for its successful prosecution should have something said in their defense and in their praise as well.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I very heartily indorse all that the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has said about the treatment that has been accorded some of the great men, great leaders of industry, of the country who came to the aid of our country in its dark hour of distress during the World War, and the injustice that has been done them by accusations made in connection with the proceedings of some congressional committees and some words reported to have been spoken at times on the floor of the House of Representatives. I also agree very heartily with what the Senator from Colorado has said about the treatment that has been accorded by Congress to Gen. Pershing, who I am sure occupies a very warm spot in the hearts of true and loyal American citizens. I think it a very poor recompense for the great services that Gen. Pershing rendered and the high and responsible position that he occupied in the affairs of the world during that great conflict. I have felt a sense of shame about it ever since Gen. Pershing's return to this country, and I feel that it is treatment of which Congress should be ashamed. Gen. Pershing is entitled a great deal more honor and recognition than he has received at the hands of Congress.

I am sure that all the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] said about Mr. Baruch and Mr. Ryan is merited, and they merit much more than could be said of them. I know the tribute of the Senator from Colorado is merited, because I am acquainted with both of the gentlemen, Mr. Baruch and Mr. Ryan. I have no doubt that what the Senator from Colorado said about Mr. Schwab is merited, too, although I do not have the honor of his acquaintance. I agree also with the very just tribute which my able colleague [Mr. WALSH of Montana] has paid to the high standing and integrity of Mr. John D. Ryan, a resident of the State of Montana, whom I have long known, and the very able and distinguished services which he rendered his country most unselfishly in time of war at a great personal sacrifice to himself. Mr. Ryan is a gentleman of the highest standing; one whose integrity is beyond question with all who know him. I have never heard of it being questioned at any time or place or in any manner, except through indirection and implication in the proceedings of a congressional investigating committee that very apparently and evidently for political purposes went out of its way to cast reflections upon Mr. Ryan, which I am sure are keenly resented by all who know Mr. Ryan and his high standing, his great integrity, and his untarnished honor in all business and personal matters, and, in fact, in every phase of life. I have previously referred several times upon the floor of the Senate to this subject and expressed my opinion of this unjust treatment of Mr. Ryan, and I shall not have much more to say about it now. Indeed, Mr. Ryan's reputation is such that it does not need much defense, and none at all with those who know him. However, I am again impelled to express my condemnation of the unjust treatment he has received at the hands of some persons under the guise of official authority, and I shall ever be ready to do so when the subject may be mentioned at any time or place.

I think one of the most deplorable results of the late war has been the very evident disposition on the part of congressional committees in some instances to conduct investigations of war operations from a bitterly partisan standpoint and to make politics out of official investigations of the conduct of the war in its various branches. I think it is very blameworthy and exceedingly deplorable and I deeply regret it. I was glad to see that during the progress of the war there was very little politics displayed in either branch of Congress. I was glad to see that the Republican Senators and Representatives as a rule stood behind the President and behind all branches of the administration in the conduct of the war just as loyally and unselfishly as did Democratic Senators and Representatives; but, in my opinion, since the cessation of hostilities there has been a very plain disposition in some instances in investigation of the conduct of the war by congressional committees to inject politics into the investigation instead of trying to obtain facts and produce beneficial results. That was strikingly shown, I think, when a congressional committee which conducted a long and exhaustive investigation of some phases of the conduct of the war encountered in the course of its proceedings some charges of dishonesty against Mr. Charles M. Schwab, who, I believe, is a Republican. Mr. Schwab took the stand and simply denied the charges in toto and, I have no doubt, denied them truthfully. I am satisfied there was no foundation for them and that they were very grossly unjust to Mr. Schwab. The committee, however, as reported by newspaper accounts, without having any proof for or against, other than the charges and denial, immediately and on the spot accepted Mr. Schwab's denial and issued a statement with much publicity acquitting Mr. Schwab of all guilt and wrongdoing preferred in the charges. I have no doubt Mr. Schwab deserved the acquittal. However, equally wrongful charges of misconduct were made before a congressional investigating committee against Mr. Baruch and Mr. Ryan, both of whom are prominent Democrats, and both of whom denied in the most unequivocal manner those charges, just as Mr. Schwab denied the charges against him. In addition, Mr. Ryan, at least, I know brought much proof to corroborate his denial, but so far as I know to this day that committee has never, either officially or unofficially, denied or retracted any of the charges against Mr. Ryan or Mr. Baruch, nor have any members of that committee individually, so far as I know, other than the one member who is a Democrat, denied or repudiated any of the charges made against those gentlemen or either of them. One member, who is a Democrat, was vigorous in his denunciation of the charges against Mr. Ryan. It is a singular and significant proceeding and something that I do not relish at all. It shows partisanship, and I think it very unfair and unjust.

So far as I am concerned, I acquit all of those gentlemen of any wrongdoing. Reflections upon them are undeserved. I am sure they all rendered very valuable services to their country when their services were badly needed, and that they did so at great sacrifice to themselves. They deserve credit for what they did. They contributed very largely to the winning of the war. I believe that Mr. Ryan and Mr. Baruch are entitled to the same clearance of malevolent charges as was given to Mr. Schwab. Whether it is ever officially granted or not, I am sure they will have it in the hearts of those of their countrymen who know them and know their integrity, character, and worth and the services which they rendered to their country in time of war. Their records are such that political quibbling and accusations can not besmirch them.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry [Mr. GRONNA]. I have no disposition to delay this bill. On the contrary, I have reasons to urge its immediate passage. The able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], the chairman of the committee, has patiently waited for several days, indeed for four weeks, with this bill on the calendar, seeking an opportunity to have it considered. To-day his son graduates from the academic department of George Washington University. That young man entered the Great War as a private, but such skill, courage, and efficiency did he exhibit that he soon became a first lieutenant in the heavy artillery, which means, of course, that he has a profound knowledge of higher mathematics and the physical laws governing the hurling of projectiles. The chairman on the committee sits in this Chamber to-day when he should be elsewhere, for I think he owes it to his son to be present at the graduation, but the Senator deems his duty to the country to be paramount. In view of these circumstances, of course, no Senator should or would delay this bill a moment beyond what debate is actually necessary to give the reasons for the appropriations made herein. At the risk, however, of consuming 15 minutes of the time of the Senate, I will ask the chairman of the committee to recur to page 20 of the bill. I desire to propose an amendment to the committee amendment at that point.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, consent was given to take up committee amendments first, but I will say to the Senator I have no objection to the reconsideration of those amendments. I know the Senator is deeply interested in them.

Mr. ASHURST. I will be brief. I do not intend to go out on any unreturning parabola in the short speech that I am going to make supporting my amendment.

Mr. President, I propose the amendment which I send to the desk to the committee amendment. I will ask the Secretary to read the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment on page 20, line 5, was agreed to is reconsidered. The Secretary will now state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment reported by the committee.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 20, line 5, where the committee proposes to strike out "$51,860" and insert "$56,860," the Senator from Arizona proposes to insert in lieu thereof the figures "$66,860."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my amendment proposes to increase the appropriation by $10,000, making the total $66,860, which is the sum estimated by the Department of Agriculture. This is the item "for investigating the physiology of crop plants and for testing and breeding varieties thereof." The Department of Agriculture estimated for that work the sum of $66,860, whereas the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate has granted only $56,860.

This is an important item; it is the item which carries the money with which the Bureau of Plant Industry under the Department of Agriculture has conducted the remarkably interesting investigations of the mysteries of plant life.

It was from appropriations carried in such an item that the Department of Agriculture began the cultivation of the Deglet Noor date and the caprified Smyrna fig.

I read as follows from the estimates:

The date industry is fast becoming established in this country. At the present time nearly a quarter of a million dollars a year is being invested in new plantings. The industry is centered upon the culture of the Deglet Noor variety, a date of highest quality, which, however, deteriorates in storage, so that it is desirable that other varieties be established. Offshoots of an Egyptian variety, the Saidy, which improves in storage, and of the Hayany variety, a soft date suitable for home use in Arizona, have been secured and should be tested out. As the result of a bag method of ripening dates, the percentage of fancy dates of the Deglet Noor variety as grown in the Coachella Valley of California has been more than doubled and the number of pickings reduced from 12 to 2. In addition, the final curing of the fruit is greatly simplified, being accomplished by proper handling in a moist, warm chamber for only a few hours. With the new introduction of offshoots and the discovery of this bag-ripening method, it becomes essential to conduct demonstration gardens in the more promising localities in southern California, Arizona, and Texas. Of the increase requested, $10,000 will be necessary for adding proper facilities at the Indio date garden; $7,000 for conducting testing and demonstration gardens in the Imperial Valley of California and the Salt River Valley of Arizona, and for enlarging the capacity of the garden at Laredo, Tex., and $3,000 for experimental work in the warm valleys of Nevada and Utah in order to determine the possibilities of commercial date culture in such localities, and certain greenhouse experiments in connection with the working out of the most satisfactory methods for rooting date offshoots.

Mr. President, the Deglet Noor dates to-day will grow in alkali soil, which is deleterious, if not deadly, to most vegetation, and the date trees are able to withstand the terrific simoons, or desert sandstorms.

I have here a small box of these Deglet Noor dates [exhibiting]. When first produced in this country this date cost $2 a pound, but the investments have been so great that the cost of producing the dates has been reduced so that they may be sold at a price where they are within reach of people of moderate means. I ask consent to print in the RECORD at this point a statement as to these dates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement referred to is as follows:

DEGLET NOOR DATES M'ZAR VARIETY, FROM MECCA, CALIF.

Grown on very sandy soil at the Cooperative Date Garden, Mecca. Ripened by the Trabut-Drummond bag method, which increases percentage of fancy dates at Mecca from 30 per cent to 64 per cent, cuts the number of pickings from 12 to 2, shortens and simplifies final maturation in the curing room. This method will doubtless extend date culture throughout the Imperial, Yuma, Salt, and Gila River Valleys in California and Arizona, and the middle section of the Rio Grande Valley in Texas. This new discovery, together with the definite recognition of three distinct strains of Deglet Noor and the fruiting of at least four Deglet Noor seedlings of high quality and full Deglet Noor flavor, puts an entirely new face on the date industry in the Southwest and makes it perhaps the most promising fruit industry for the irrigated valleys of the Southwest having a subtropical desert climate.

Mr. ASHURST. In order that these dates may be sampled by various Senators, I will ask a page to pass them around from one Senator to another, so that Senators may ascertain for themselves how delicious they are.

Mr. President, I will take up the question of the caprified Smyrna fig.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that the dates of which he has invited Senators to partake are California dates?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. Dates are produced in Arizona, are they not?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, yes; and of the same quality; they are grown in large quantities in Arizona; but my modesty precludes me from passing around Arizona dates as specimens.

Mr. POMERENE. I will ask the Senator which are the better, the California or the Arizona dates?

Mr. ASHURST. The Arizona date is the better.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A number of similar experiments have also been made in Texas.

Mr. ASHURST. Similar experiments have been made in Laredo, Tex.; and $3,000 of this $10,000 increase asked for is for the purpose of proving that these dates may be grown in Laredo, Tex.

I now pass on to another very interesting subject, the caprified Smyrna figs. I have on my desk a box of Smyrna figs.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator allow an interruption?

Mr. ASHURST. With pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to know if the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] expects to exhibit some Arizona dates. I understand that the Senator from Arizona is exhibiting California dates, and I wanted to know if the Senator from California would return the courtesy, and on what day we might expect him to do so.

Mr. PHELAN rose.

Mr. ASHURST. Let him pass around California wine. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, I must proceed. I do not want to take too much time, but I wish to be heard for a moment on this question. Let me say again that this item is the appropriation under which was discovered the practicability of planting and cultivating in this country the Egyptian cotton, and for every dollar that the Government has appropriated for purposes carried in this item the income-tax returns, mark you, are each year twenty times the amount of the appropriation. In other words, for every $100,000 that was invested by the Government for such purposes the Government receives annually $2,000,000 in income taxes.

These Smyrna figs which I now exhibit are figs of the drying type, such as are grown about Smyrna, in Asia Minor, and also in California and somewhat in Arizona. This type of fig begets no fruit unless the flowers are pollinated by a minute wasp—the so-called fig insect—which carries the pollen from the caprifig to the cultivated Smyrna fig when in flower.

The insect was introduced into California by the Department of Agriculture in the spring of 1899, and caprifig orchards were established by the Bureau of Plant Industry in order to enable Smyrna fig growers to be sure of a supply of the indispensable fig wasp when their orchards came into bearing. The present production is about 500 cars a year and is rapidly growing. Thousands of acres of new plantings of Smyrna figs are being made every year.

These sample figs are of the Lob Ingir variety, sometimes called Calimyrna, and were grown at Fresno, Calif., cured in the best California process perfected by Mrs. Fred Hansen.

For several years the Department of Agriculture has been testing a number of crosses of varieties of citrus fruits, and has produced, for example, the Sampson Tangelo and the Thornton Tangelo, a fruit which is a cross between the orange tangerine and the grapefruit. This fruit has a pale, orange-colored juice and highly flavored pulp. It may be eaten out of hand like a tangerine, but is better when halved and eaten like a grapefruit. Moreover, there is no tendency to squirt its juice into a human eye when a spoon is inserted into its segments.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I realize, as do all the members of the committee, having had this item under very careful consideration, that it is a very important item, and a very wonderful showing has been made both in California and in Arizona. Will not the Senator reduce the amendment which he has offered from $10,000 to $5,000? So far as the committee are concerned, we will have no objection to allowing the $5,000 to go to conference.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that is kind on the part of the chairman, and, of course, I am glad to agree to that. I will ask leave, therefore, to modify my amendment so as to strike out "ten" and insert "five."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield for a minute.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I just want to ask the chairman of the committee what amount we allowed? As I see it, we increased the amount $5,000 over the House item.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. What is the amount that the representative of this interest asked for when he appeared before us?

Mr. GRONNA. The representative asked for $15,000 more. The committee gave him $5,000 more.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And now the Senator's proposition is to agree, as far as he may under the circumstances, to $5,000 additional?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; so as to increase the appropriation $10,000 above what the House allowed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this point to include in the RECORD a pamphlet by Mr. Walter T. Swingle, with respect to these fruits, and other memoranda and pamphlets on the subjects to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE FIG IN CALIFORNIA.

(By Walter T. Swingle, physiologist in charge of Plant Life History Investigations, United States Department of Agriculture.)

SOME POINTS IN THE HISTORY OF CAPRIFICATION AND IN THE LIFE HISTORY OF THE FIG.

As some of my hearers may not be familiar with the figs of the Smyrna type, I shall preface my remarks with a short account of this remarkable fruit tree.

OUTLINE OF THE LIFE HISTORY OF THE FIG.

The fig, like the cottonwood, the carob, the pistache, and some others, exists in two forms, male and female. The female trees alone bear fruit, and the male trees, or caprifigs, as they are called, produce pollen, which when carried to the flowers of the female trees cause the fruits to set and fertile seeds to develop.

From this point on, the complications begin that make the life history of the fig one of the most interesting chapters in natural history. The pollen is carried from the male flowers of the caprifig tree to the female flowers of the ordinary fig tree exclusively by a very small wasplike insect, the Blastophaga psenes. The fig tree is absolutely dependent on the visits of this insect for a crop of seeds, and in its turn the Blastophaga can live and breed only in the caprifigs. This mutual dependence, or symbiosis as naturalists call it, is one of the most striking cases known and dates back to somewhat remote geological epochs.

The caprifig tree bears fruits that at first sight much resemble ordinary figs, and which, though seldom edible, finally soften and fall off. If a caprifig be cut open before it ripens fully it will be seen to be full of grains that look much like seeds. These grains are minute galls, each one of which contains a fig insect. Finally, when the insects are ready to cut their way out of the galls, the mouth of the caprifig opens and a ring of male flowers, situated just below, begins to shed pollen abundantly. The female Blastophagas (which alone issue from the caprifigs) get coated with this pollen as they crawl out and carry it to the female flowers which line the young budding figs on the female trees. The dusting of the female flower with pollen causes the fruit to set and to bear fertile seeds.

Now, the caprifig tree in order to support the Blastophaga must bear a succession of caprifigs; in most fig-growing countries there are three generations of caprifigs, called, respectively, the winter, spring, and summer generations, often known by the Neapolitan names—mamme, profichi, and mammoni. Though it is a deciduous tree, the caprifig must carry a crop of nearly ripe but dormant caprifigs through the winter on its bare branches.

The true nature of the fig and caprifig trees as outlined above has been obscured by the fact that many varieties of the female or ordinary fig tree bear abundant crops without any pollination, and hence the Blastophaga is not needed in growing such varieties (which happen to be just the ones which alone are grown in central and northern Europe and in the New World). Ordinary figs are analogous to navel oranges, which, having no pollen, likewise produce fruit without being pollinated, and, like navel oranges, have no fertile seeds.

It was only when the culture of Smyrna figs was attempted in this State, a quarter of a century ago, that it was realized that something was wrong, and it was only 18 years ago that it was finally proved that figs of this class set no fruit unless pollinated.

In the orchards about Smyrna, in Greece, about Naples, in Algeria, in Portugal, and in many other localities in the Old World caprifigs containing Blastophagas ready to come out are suspended in the branches of the fig trees to facilitate the transfer of pollen by the insect. This operation is called caprification.

ANCIENT HISTORY OF CAPRIFICATION.

The operation of caprification dates back to remote antiquity. Already in the time of Herodotus, in the fifth century B. C., caprification was so well known as to be used as a self-evident example in explaining (falsely, as it happened in this case) the artificial pollination of the date palm as practiced in ancient Babylon.

Aristotle, in a little-known chapter of his History of Animals (bk. 5, ch. 26), written about 340 B. C., gives a short account of the process that could scarcely be improved to-day. He said:

"The fruits of the caprifig contain small animals called psenes. These are at first small grubs, and when their envelopes are broken, psenes, which fly, come out; they then enter the fruits of the fig tree and the punctures they make there prevent these fruits from falling before they are ripe. So the countrymen take the trouble to put branches of the caprifig in the ordinary fig trees, and also plant caprifigs near the common fig trees."

Theophrastus, a pupil of Aristotle, gave a still fuller account of the operation, and was the first writer to mention that some sort of figs set fruit without being caprified. All of the later Greek and Latin writers on natural history refer to caprification as a well-known horticultural process.

Recent studies of Solomon Reinach, the celebrated oriental scholar, go to show that caprification was very well known in the earliest Greek times before written history began. His researches led him to think that in the earliest times there was a sacred mystery play—a cult of the fig tree and of caprification analogous to the Eleusinean mystery play—in which the wheat head played the principal rôle. He thinks that the word sycophant, still a part of all modern languages, originated in these rites, and was, indeed, applied to the priest who at the critical moment during the ceremonies showed the fig branch (syco=fig, phanein=to show) just as the analogous priest, the hierophant, in the rites of Demeter, showed the wheat head. The cult of the fig he supposes to have degenerated in early times, so that the sycophant, once respected and feared, came to be a cheap charlatan; hence, the modern significance of the word. If Reinach's views are correct, the cult of the fig must have been of great antiquity for it to have become degenerated and almost forgotten before the classic Greek period.

Again, in ancient Rome, there are traces of important ceremonies that date back to the semimythical times of Romulus and Remus wherein caprifig branches were in a midsummer festival (about the time caprification would be practiced in that latitude). Now caprification is unknown in central Italy, and has doubtless been forgotten for many centuries about Rome (the great naturalist, Pliny, did not have any personal knowledge of caprification), yet at the very dawn of history we find signs that caprification was once practiced there.

Strabo, the great Greek geographer, attended school when a lad some 2,000 years ago near the present town of Aidin, the center of the Smyrna fig industry. Now, Strabo reports that in his day the figs of that region were highly esteemed and brought the highest price in the markets. This record goes to show that fig culture has been the principal industry in this region for two millennia, the oldest fruit industry of which we have any record, for the date orchards that were the admiration of Herodotus at Palmyra and Babylon perished ages ago.

These few examples suffice to show that in beginning the practice of caprification the fruit growers of California are reviving an operation older than the record history of mankind.

HISTORY OF CAPRIFICATION IN CALIFORNIA.

As noted above, it was not until the culture of Smyrna figs was attempted in California as a result of Mr. G. P. Rixford's introduction of cuttings, in 1880 and 1882, that it was realized that something was lacking, and not until Mr. George C. Roeding, in 1890, and Dr. Gustav Eisen and Mr. E. W. Maslin, in 1891 (Dr. Gustav Eisen informs me, since this lecture was delivered, that as early as 1874 his attention was called to the necessity for caprification for figs of the Smyrna type by Dr. John Bleasdale, a Catholic priest, who had been educated in Portugal, and who was familiar with caprification. Becoming convinced of the need of caprification, Dr. Eisen read a paper before the Fruit Growers' Convention as early as November, 1885, describing the operation. His views led him into a controversial correspondence with Dr. H. H. Behr, of the California Academy of Sciences, during the years 1881 to 1885. The artificial pollination of Smyrna figs was discussed as a means of proving the necessity for caprification, then strenuously denied by Behr and many others, including Mr. E. W. Maslin. Dr. Eisen "had no opportunity of trying direct pollination (from want of caprifig pollen) until 1891, in the last days of July." At his request, Mr. E. W. Maslin accompanied him to the orchard of James Shinn at Niles, Calif., where pollen from a "Bulletin" caprifig tree (introduced in 1880 or 1882 by Mr. G. P. Rixford) was transferred to young Smyrna figs, causing them to "come to perfection as large, ripe and luscious figs, in every way perfectly developed, with numerous perfect seeds." The experiments of Dr. Eisen at Niles were, therefore, the outcome of discussions begun many years before, first, artificially pollinated Smyrna figs that it was proved that caprification was absolutely necessary with this type of figs. This new California point of view was first published in convincing form by Dr. Gustav Eisen in a bulletin of the California Academy of Sciences issued January 11, 1896 (Eisen, Gustav, Biological Studies on Figs, Capri Figs and Caprification, in Bull. Cal. Acad. Sci. (2) 5: 897-1003, Jan. 11, 1896), which attracted wide attention both in this country and in Europe. It should be noted that after the elaborate investigations of Gasparrini made at

Naples from 1845 to 1865, which resulted in his denying the efficacy of caprification, botanists and educated men generally the world over had come to consider caprification to be merely a peasant's superstition analogous to the hanging of horseshoes in favorite fruit trees to make them fertile.

The result of Eisen's memoir was to change all this and convince the scientific world that caprification was after all no idle folly, but a vitally necessary operation in the culture of drying figs of the Smyrna type. As I shall show later on, the successful introduction of the Blastophaga into California was brought about largely through Dr. Eisen's memoir.

INTRODUCTION OF BLASTOPHAGA INTO CALIFORNIA.

The first introduction of the Blastophaga was made by H. E. Van Deman, then pomologist of the Department of Agriculture, who, in the spring of 1890, imported caprifig cuttings from Asia Minor, some of which had fruits attached from which issued the first fig insects ever seen in the New World. Some of these cuttings, and doubtless some of the Blastophagas, were sent to California.

The second introduction was made in the spring, and the third in the summer, of 1891 by Mr. James Shinn, of Niles, who received from a missionary resident in Smyrna caprifigs from which the insects issued after arrival. They failed to get established, though they were liberated in a large "Bulletin" caprifig growing on Mr. Shinn's place at Niles.

The fourth introduction was made in 1892 by Mr. George C. Roeding, of Fresno, who received from Mr. Thomas Hall, of Smyrna, in June and July, several shipments of caprifigs from which Blastophagas issued but failed to get established.

The fifth introduction was made in the early spring of 1895 by Mr. George C. Roeding, who received from Mr. Anthony C. Denotovitch, then traveling in Asia Minor, a package of caprifigs in good condition, from which, however, the insects never issued.

The sixth introduction was made in March and April, 1898, by me. I was studying caprification at Naples at the time, and sent a number of packages of caprifigs to the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., from where they were forwarded to Mr. George C. Roeding at Fresno. The earliest shipment reached Fresno on April 15, but though the Blastophagas came out, they failed again to establish themselves.

The seventh and last, the finally successful introduction, was made by me in March, 1899, when I sent from Algiers a number of packages of caprifigs, the first of which reached Mr. George C. Roeding on April 6, 1899. These insects entered the young caprifig buds on a number of trees bred there and established themselves permanently in California.

HISTORY OF THE FINAL AND SUCCESSFUL INTRODUCTION OF BLASTOPHAGA INTO CALIFORNIA.

(In this sketch I have not considered the introduction of the fig insect, which occurs in the wild figs of Mexico, as these insects can not live in the caprifig.)

As there has been some misunderstanding as to how my introductions came to be made, I thought the fruit growers of this State would perhaps be interested to know just how they happened.

I spent the spring of 1896 in Naples, and while there had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Prof. Paul Mayer, one of the foremost European students of caprification. I was busy with other work at that time, however, and did not attempt any detailed work on the fig.

However, in March of 1898 I was again in Naples, where I enjoyed the facilities of the International Zoological Station through the courtesy of the director, Prof. Anton Dohrn. In the meantime I had read Dr. Eisen's memoir on caprification, and happening to see the operation being carried out on a caprifig tree a day or two after my arrival, I decided to study anew the whole subject of caprification in a region where it was a standard horticultural practice. At that time I had never been in California, and all I knew about California conditions I learned from Eisen's paper. I was abroad on leave of absence, paying my own expenses, and undertook the work wholly on my own initiative and at my own expense. During the course of my work I never received any suggestions from California or from anywhere in America, for the simple reason that I did not myself know when I sailed, early in March, just what I would do at Naples, and after I went into the work there was not time for any letters to reach me, even if any had been sent. I had at that time not yet seen the now famous letter of the State board of trade, signed by Mr. E. W. Maslin, Mr. J. A. Filcher, and Mr. B. N. Rowley, and received no instructions from the Secretary of Agriculture or anyone else. I am forced to make this public disclaimer in view of the mistaken statements that have been published in this State as to the inception and conduct of my work.

While working at Naples I did have the benefit of the advice of Prof. Paul Mayer and of Count Solms Laubach, also a famous student of figs and caprification.

After looking into the matter for a few days I decided to try to send the Blastophaga to California in the firm winter generation caprifigs, which could be shipped in March, when the weather at Naples was still cool. My first shipment, containing caprifigs whose cut stems had been waxed and which were wrapped simply in tin foil and shipped by samples post, was sent to Washington and reshipped from there, reaching Mr. George C. Roeding in Fresno on April 15. Insects issued from the caprifigs, and as soon as I learned this I was sure I could succeed in establishing the Blastophagas by my method, for I had found, on studying the matter, that there was a great range in the time of ripening of the winter generation caprifigs, which could be had all the way from the oases of the Sahara Desert to Botzen, in southern Tyrol. I did not hope to strike the right season in California the first time, and as a matter of fact the winter generation caprifigs from Naples and Smyrna ripen too late in spring to reach California at the proper time.

In July, 1898, I entered the service of the newly established section of seed and plant introduction, of which Mr. David G. Fairchild was in charge.

My letter of instructions from Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson authorized me to continue my work on caprification, and accordingly, in March, 1899, I went to Algiers, where, with the amiable cooperation of Dr. L. Trabut, Government botanist of Algiera, I soon found abundant caprifig trees laden with the nearly ripe winter generation caprifigs. I shipped them in the same manner as the spring before, and my first shipment reached Washington, D. C., on March 31, when it was reshipped by Dr. L. O. Howard, reaching Mr. George C. Roeding on April 6. A caprifig tree at Fresno was covered with cheesecloth and the insects liberated inside the tree.

Little attention was paid to the tree after this until June 23, 1899, when Mr. John C. Jones in collecting pollen from caprifigs for the artificial fertilization of a few Smyrna figs found a caprifig containing male Blastophagas and still unopened galls containing female Blastophagas. Of course, the tented tree was now given immediate attention. Most of the insects had escaped, but a few caprifigs were found still full of Blastophagas, some more were found on an adjoining tree and a few in distant parts of the orchard, proving that some of the insects had escaped from the tent when liberated in April and had found other caprifig trees, in which they had bred.

The insects managed to get established in the summer generation caprifigs, and by November 10, when I visited the orchard, thousands of Blastophagas were present and were then entering and laying eggs in the young buds of the winter generation caprifigs. During the following year, 1900 (from the middle of March to the end of September, 1900, Mr. E. A. Schwarz, a most competent and conscientious entomologist and naturalist, stayed at Fresno studying the Blastophaga and caprification. These studies, published in part only in Dr. L. O. Howard's paper "Smyrna Fig Culture in the United States" (Yearbook, U. S. Department of Agriculture, 1900, pp. 79–106, pl. 1–8), are the most complete ever made on the life history of the fig insect, and have also cleared up many points in the natural history of the fig and caprifig), the Blastophagas were abundant enough to be of use in caprifying and producing the first crop of figs ever produced by the splendid Smyrna fig orchard which had been for many years kept up at a total loss—a standing monument to Mr. Roeding's faith in the ultimate success of the industry.

I might say that after making my first efforts to introduce the Blastophaga, in the spring of 1898, I received many suggestions, but neither the California growers nor the entomologists of Washington had any faith in my system, being of the opinion that a small tree covered with caprifigs should be dug up and shipped over. The trouble was, as I soon found, that it was impossible to find young and small caprifig trees bearing winter generation caprifigs. Only large trees bore them, and the expense of moving them would have been enormous.

Another drawback, not realized by its adherents, of this plan is that for reasons to be given later only rarely, if ever, can the Blastophaga breed the year around on a single tree, and the chances of its living in a tree weakened by a long voyage would be almost nil. The net result of sending over a large rooted tree bearing winter generation caprifigs would therefore have been merely to land the Blastophaga in this country. It would still have had to seek breeding places in other caprifig trees, so that, after all, nothing more would have been accomplished than by sending a half dozen caprifigs wrapped in tin foil by samples post at a cost of a few cents.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," and one good result of the lack of faith in my method of introducing the Blastophaga and subsequent neglect of the infected tree was that the principal parasite, or, rather, messmate of the fig insect, Philotrypesis ficaria, which in the Old World often takes up one-third or even one-half the space in the caprifigs (and which can not caprify the figs at all), failed to get established in this country, so California has the only simon-pure colony of Blastophaga in the world. It would be a calamity if any further introductions were made, as there would be grave risk of introducing Philotrypesis, which, if once here, could not be exterminated.

NEW POINTS IN THE LIFE HISTORY OF THE FIG AND CAPRIFIG.

In a lecture on caprification, delivered before the Marine Biological Association at Woods Hole, Mass., on August 14, 1899, and again in a paper published in October, 1899 ("The Dicœcism of the Fig in its Bearing upon Caprification," in Science, new series, vol. 10, pp. 570–574, No. 251, Oct. 20, 1899), I called attention to the fact that the Blastophagas that issue from the spring generation caprifigs (in June in most countries) enter the young budding figs of the female or fertile fig tree, though they can not breed or even lay their eggs there. However, if the female Blastophaga were intelligent enough to discriminate between the budding caprifigs in which she can deposit eggs and the ordinary fig buds in which she can not, then no figs would be caprified, no seeds would be formed, and soon the fig species would die out, and with it the Blastophagas, that can breed only in the caprifig.

EXPLANATION OF THE BREAK BETWEEN THE SPRING AND SUMMER GENERATIONS OF CAPRIFIGS.

Just here is to be found the explanation of the decided break that all observers have noticed between the ripening of the spring generation caprifigs (profichi) and the budding out of the young summer generation caprifigs (mammoni). This break is so pronounced that when I began studying caprification one very acute observer, who had spent several years studying horticulture in countries where caprification was practiced, assured me that I must seek some other host plant for the Blastophaga at this critical season, and suggested that it would be found breeding in some of the bushes that clothe the hills in the Mediterranean region. The ink-gall insect, somewhat related to the Blastophaga, does go from one species of oak to another in its home in Syria.

However, already in 1882 Dr. Paul Mayer had pointed out that the insects that issue from very late profichi or late varieties can enter the very first mammoni buds to push on the earliest varieties of caprifigs. (Mayer, Paul, Zur Naturgeschichte der Feigeninsecten (The Natural History of the Fig Insect) in Mittheilungen a. a. Zool. Station zu Neapel, 3 : 551–590, pls. 25, 26, Nov. 4, 1882.)

Countless thousands of Bastophagas do, however, come out of the spring generation caprifigs too early to enter even the earliest summer generation caprifigs (mammoni), though just in season to enter and pollinate the young buds on fertile fig trees. (It was a realization of this fact which caused me to rely entirely on winter generation caprifigs (mamme) in attempting to introduce the Blastophaga into this country. They arrive early in spring, and, if sent at the right time, find abundant spring generation caprifigs in receptive condition, whereas the spring generation caprifigs if shipped to California arrive just during the break between the spring and summer generation of caprifigs and stand a very small chance of finding a breeding place. Then, too, such spring generation caprifigs must be shipped during hot weather, whereas the winter generation caprifigs make the voyage in March. When I began to ship the winter generation caprifigs to California I found there was no adequate realization here of the great advantage of sending this generation rather than the more abundant and better known spring generation.)

BLASTOPHAGAS FORCED TO ENTER YOUNG FRUIT OF THE FERTILE FIG.

Natural selection has, therefore, brought about that even an intelligent Blastophaga would find no suitable caprifig to enter, but must finally in desperation crowd into an ordinary fig bud, propelled, doubtless, by a powerful instinct prompting it to deposit its eggs.

The break between the spring and summer generations of caprifig fruits has, therefore, the object of compelling the Blastophagas to enter and pollinate the young buds of the fertile fig tree, then pushing in the greatest abundance.

It must be remembered that in a state of nature wild fig trees of both sexes would grow intermixed and that the break between the spring and summer generations of caprifigs would in the absence of artificial caprification be a powerful aid in causing the fertile trees to be pollinated.

Now, in orchard culture of figs of the Smyrna type, where all caprification is performed artificially, the female Blastophagas have no choice but to enter the Smyrna fig buds. In commercial fig culture it would be an advantage to have caprifig trees that did not show any break between the spring and summer generations of insects, as it would be much easier to keep up a full supply of the Blastophaga.

NEW TYPE OF CAPRIFIG TREE ORIGINATED BY MR. E. W. MASLIN.

By a most curious coincidence, within a few days after I first thought out this point, in August, 1906, and communicated it to Prof. S. C. Mason, who was then studying caprification in California, he found just such a caprifig in the Maslin orchard, at Loomis, Placer County, Calif.

In 1885 Mr. E. W. Maslin planted the seeds of the best grade of Smyrna figs to be obtained in the market. Several hundred of these seedlings were set out in orchard form on his place at Loomis. This orchard was not a commercial success, and it was soon noticed that many of the trees were more like caprifigs than Smyrna figs. In the fall of 1899 I found several promising caprifigs there, and in the summer of 1906 Prof. Mason found a very curious variety, a sort of hermaphrodite tree, that had enough of the qualities of a caprifig to support the Blastophaga and enough of those of the fertile fig tree to produce an abundant crop of summer generation buds just as the spring generation caprifigs were ripening. It also bears numerous fertile seeds mingled with the insect-bearing galls.

By planting this variety among the other caprifigs the Blastophaga will be able to breed uninterruptedly throughout the year and not, as is now the case, almost completely die out in midsummer.

THE CAPRIFIG ORCHARD.

It is clear from what has preceded that Blastophagas has a very much better chance of breeding in a special caprifig orchard composed of a number of varieties. Some sorts of caprifigs not particularly valuable for use in caprification may, nevertheless, be extremely valuable in furnishing suitable breeding places for the insect at some critical season, as, for instance, the new variety noted above from Mr. Maslin's seedling fig orchard.

Since March, 1898, I have realized the importance of securing all obtainable varieties of caprifigs, and this object has been kept steadily in view ever since. A number of caprifigs were secured by me in Naples in 1898 and others in 1899 in Algeria, Greece, and Asia Minor, and in 1901 Mr. Carl S. Scofield made a special trip to the fig region in the Kabylie Mountains of Algeria to secure the many caprifigs that occur there. I secured some of the Italian sorts in 1902. In the meantime the Maslin seedling orchard has pointed out a way to obtain still more and ultimately still better sorts.

BREEDING NEW AND SUPERIOR FIGS AND CAPRIFIGS.

There is nothing to indicate that the Smyrna type of fig is very highly bred or very widely different from the wild type of figs. On the contrary, among even the few dozen edible figs secured by Mr. Maslin, there are several that are equal, if not superior, to the commercial Smyrna variety.

This being the case, there is every reason to expect to secure very superior varieties of drying figs and of caprifigs by growing large numbers of trees from seeds of the best varieties pollinated by all the different caprifigs. It must be remembered that the hereditary character of the caprifig comes into play in this breeding work, and that we might as well expect to improve the grade of Durham cattle with a scrub bull as to breed new and superior types of drying figs while using a poor type of caprifig. The heredity character of caprifig can be seen only in the offspring, so we are forced to try as many different caprifigs as possible in the hope of securing one that yields progeny of the highest order of excellence. This is another reason for securing all obtainable varieties of caprifigs, as it by no means follows that the caprifigs best adapted for artificial caprification on a commercial scale will be those yielding the best new sorts among their progeny.

NEW TYPES OF FIGS TO FIT AMERICAN CONDITIONS.

It is confidently expected that within a few years many of the several thousand seedling figs now growing will have fruited, and that comprehensive plans will be matured that will permit of the breeding of types of figs and caprifigs especially well adapted to American conditions. In such work use will be made of the 17 species and subspecies of figs of the Carica group known to botanists. Some of these wild figs are hardy in the climate of Washington and others are extremely drought resistant. In other words, the improvement of the fig has only just begun and fig culture is still in its infancy in this country.

THE MASLIN SEEDLING FIG ORCHARD AT LOOMIS, CALIF., AND ITS BEARING ON THE SMYRNA FIG INDUSTRY OF THIS COUNTRY.

By Walter T. Swingle, physiologist, plant life history investigations, Department of Agriculture.

I had the pleasure of presenting to the Thirty-fourth Fruit Growers' Convention, held at Riverside last spring, a paper (Some Points in the History of Caprification and in the Life History of the Fig, by Walter T. Swingle. In the official report of the Thirty-fourth Fruit Growers' Convention of the State of California, held at Riverside, Calif., Apr. 28 to May 1, 1908, pp. 178–187. Sacramento, Calif., 1908) on the history of the caprification of the fig, in which I referred to interesting new varieties of caprifigs that have originated in the seedling fig orchard planted by Mr. E. W. Maslin at Loomis, Placer County, Calif., some quarter of a century ago.

Since then I have spent some time investigating this remarkable fig orchard, and it is my purpose to give you briefly the principal results of this study.

The planting of the Maslin fig orchard: In 1885, when Mr. Maslin first started out to grow Smyrna figs from seeds, true Smyrna figs of the standard variety, Lob Ingir, had been growing in California for five years, the cuttings having been introduced by Mr. G. P. Rixford for the San Francisco Bulletin, through Consul E. J. Smithers, of Smyrna. These trees had borne no fruit, and many believed that the Smyrniots had not sent the regular Smyrna fig at all, but had maliciously substituted some sterile and worthless variety. It was while the matter was in this state that Mr. Maslin resolved to grow some true Smyrna figs from seed. We now know that the failure of the Bulletin Smyrna fig trees to bear fruit was due to the absence of the Blastophaga, or fig insect, but in 1885 the need for caprification was not recognized by anyone except Dr. Gustav Eisen.

Mr. Maslin gave an account of the planting of this orchard in a paper read before the twelfth session of the California State Fruit Growers' Convention, at Fresno, Calif., November 5, 1889, and I can not do better than quote those portions of his article giving the history of the plantation up to 1889:

"In the spring of 1885 I bought in San Francisco a box of the largest Smyrna figs I could find and sowed the seeds in a hotbed, letting the growth remain until 1888, when the trees were planted on a hillside in deep, warm, granite soil. They made a wonderful growth, the trunks being from 4 to 6 inches in diameter and the trees 10 to 15 feet high. They have never been irrigated, but have been cultivated. They have borne this year an abundance of fruit, while it remains on the trees not matured. The figs are about the size of a pigeon's egg, the receptacle well filled with flowers, but so far I have not observed any seeds. My impression is that the forces of the trees have been expended in making wood instead of fruit.

"Determined to have the best fig in the country, I wrote, in January, 1886, to H. K. Thurber, of New York, one of the leading importing merchants in the United States, requesting him to obtain for me a box of the very best Smyrna figs, telling him my purpose. He replied as follows:

"NEW YORK, February 1, 1886.

"The best grades of Smyrna figs are sometimes described as 'Eleme,' 'Imperial,' 'Choice Layers,' or 'London Layers.' I have ordered sent to you a box of 'Imperial,' which are the best in the market. There is no charge for them. I should be only too glad if in your wonderful soil and climate you should successfully raise a fig equal to the Smyrna fig.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"H. K. THURBER."

"The seeds of these figs I sowed in a hothouse; fully a month elapsed before there was a sign of growth. Later in the spring of 1886 the young trees were transplanted to a nursery and planted in rows 2 feet apart and 8 inches apart in the rows, and immediately covered with straw to shield them from the sun. They received no irrigation. In the spring of 1887 they were set out in orchard 25 feet apart, hexagon or triangular form. They were allowed to grow as many branches and trunks as came for the purpose of inducing extensive root growth. In the spring of 1888 they were cut down close to the ground, and of the sprouts which came, one, the strongest, was selected, and the others removed. As the stem or trunk grew, the lateral branches were pinched back, but not removed; pinched only that the stocky growth might shade the trunk, and not allowed to grow that the forces of the sap might be concentrated to make a leading shoot and a stocky trunk. * * *

"These trees bore fruit this year upon the wood growth of 1889. I have 10 acres planted altogether, 7 acres of the sowing of 1886, and 3 acres of the first sowing. The fruit did not drop, but remained on the trees until the late storm. A few days after the storm began I found on four of the trees about a dozen perfectly ripe figs. They were about the size of a pigeon's egg, cuneate or wedge shape, but rather flatter than the White Adriatic, with a short stem. Their color was a lively yellow, the flesh amber, decidedly sweet. The other and immature fruit was well packed with tissue, and except that it was green did not differ in appearance or shape from the ripe fig.

"One fact to which I wish to call attention, and a very important one in relation to the necessity of caprification, is that the leaves of all the fig trees grown from the seed obtained from Mr. Thurber are identical in type. There is not the slightest indication of the cross-fertilization by the wild fig, such as wild or scraggling growth or difference in the color of the bark. The growth of the tree is very upright, and the color of the wood is the same. The small size of the ripe fruit I ascribe to the lateness of maturing and the growth of the tree. I have brought with me some of the leaves of the trees which bore the ripe figs, to which I invite your attention."

From his manuscript notes and orchard plats, kindly placed at my disposition by Mr. Maslin, I am enabled to supplement in a few particulars the account he published in 1889. In the first place, the 7-acre orchard planted with seedlings of the Thurber figs in quincunx was so severely injured by a very heavy pruning given in 1890 that it was abandoned, and all the trees are now dead. However, a tract of about an acre was planted in square with seedlings of the Thurber figs alongside of the 2 acres planted the previous year with seedlings grown from figs purchased in San Francisco. In all, 100 trees were planted in 1886 and 53 in 1887. Of these 153 seedlings, 147 are alive now and 139 are bearing trees.

Recent history of the Maslin fig orchard: Mr. Maslin continued to take notes on these trees until the summer of 1891, by which time it had become apparent that these seedling trees would not yield edible figs in commercial quantities. This was because these figs are all of the Smyrna type, and require caprification in order to set fruit. Partly because of these expensive experiments, Mr. Maslin found his ranch unprofitable, and about this time disposed of it, no further care being given to the orchard for more than a decade. In 1893 Mr. Gustav Eisen found gall flowers and male flowers in the fruits of one of the Maslin seedlings, which must, of course, have been a caprifig. In the late autumn of 1899 I made my first visit to the orchard in company with Mr. Maslin, and in photographing the larger trees, noted the presence of a very promising caprifig, which has since proven to be one of the best in the orchard. In the spring of 1899 I had sent the Blastophaga from Algiers, which became established in Mr. George C. Roeding's orchard at Fresno. A year or two later Mr. Roeding noticed the Maslin orchard from the car window while riding through Loomis on the train. He then took steps to introduce the Blastophaga into the orchard, sending profichi full of insects ready to emerge to Mr. J. C. Mazal, whose father was then the tenant on the Maslin ranch. In examining the trees carefully a few days after the profichi had been suspended in the trees, Mr. Mazal was surprised to find that the Blastophaga was already established in the orchard, being found by him in two caprifig trees, both, curiously enough, bearing purple profichi, and the only two bearing purple fruit at this time. The Blastophaga were found by Mr. Mazal ready to issue in three profichi on the two trees, so, of course, they must have developed from eggs laid by the Blastophagas that entered in early spring, long before the profichi were sent from Fresno. Mr. J. C. Mazal is of the opinion that the Blastophaga reached the orchard from Mr. Van Lennep's place at Auburn, some 12 miles to the northeast, where the Blastophaga had been introduced the year previously. It has since been found that the Blastophaga is able to spread to considerable distances, probably by being caught and carried by strong winds. Since preparing the paper I have received a letter from Mr. Van Lennep that throws some light on the history of the introduction of the Blastophaga into the Maslin orchard at Loomis. The part of the letter concerning this matter is as follows:

"AUBURN, CALIF., January 18, 1903.

"Mr. WALTER T. SWINGLE,
"Monterey, Calif.

"DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 7 is before me. The caprifigs containing Blastophaga were sent me by Mr. George C. Roeding in April, 1901, since which time they have been established here.

"Possibly those found by Mr. Mazal before receiving from Mr. Roeding were blown from here, as we know they have been carried in that direction half that distance to trees taken from our nursery.

"My [caprifig] trees were from cuttings sent me from Smyrna by my brother, Reinhard Van Lennep, Dutch consul in Smyrna (my native city), in the spring of 1884.

"For years they set abundance of fruit, but would fall to the ground at a certain size, as did also the Erbili, until the insect was obtained.

"Yours, respectfully,

"DAVID VAN LENNEP."

As soon as the Blastophaga was introduced into the Maslin orchard it was seen that there were valuable caprifigs among the seedlings. Accordingly the chaparral, that at the time of my first visit in 1899 had nearly choked out some of the trees, was now cleared away, and the fig trees were pruned and cultivated by Mr. L. May, who had leased the ranch from November 1, 1903, on. Mr. Roeding sent a man to Loomis to attend to the packing and shipping of the profichi crop during the two seasons he rented the orchard from Mr. May. Considerable numbers of mamme, or winter generation caprifigs, were also sent to Fresno by Mr. May. During the past two summers the orchard has been rented to an Armenian, Mr. K. Arakelian, interested in fig culture at Fresno, and in 1908 no fewer than 452 boxes, each containing 20 pounds of caprifigs, were shipped from the Maslin orchard to Fresno. Of these, 21 boxes were mamme gather in April, and the rest profichi harvested at the end of June or early in July.

Maslin fig orchard leased by the Department of Agriculture: As a result of an investigation made in the spring of 1908, I found that exorbitant prices were being charged for profichi and mamme, and many fig growers had become doubtful as to the possibility of ever growing an adequate supply of Blastophaga on their own places, because of rumors as to the dependence being placed on imported caprifigs by the Fresno growers. If the part played by the Maslin seedling fig orchard had been explained publicly by those who knew about it, there would probably have been no such deep-seated distrust aroused. As it was, I found many of the growers were discouraged, and some had even dug up orchards of Smyrna figs just coming into bearing, because they were uncertain as to ever being able to get profichi when they needed them to caprify their trees, or without paying exorbitant prices.

This being the state of affairs, it was decided by the Bureau of Plant Industry to lease the Maslin seedling fig orchard and place it at the disposal of the Smyrna fig growers of this country. This was accomplished largely through the good offices of Mr. Andrew Ryder, of Loomis, and since November 1, 1908, the orchard has been in the possession of the Department of Agriculture.

Valuable new varieties of figs and caprifigs found in the Maslin orchard: In August, 1906, Prof. S. C. Mason, of the Bureau of Plant Industry, had found very promising Smyrna figs among the seedlings, and at his request Mr. Ryder cured a few sample figs from half a dozen of the best trees in September, 1906. I was very much impressed with the quality of some of these dried figs, and in September, 1908, I made a trip to Loomis to be able to see these figs in the fresh state, and to make observations on the possibility of curing them on a commercial scale. Mr. G. P. Rixford very kindly gave me the benefit of his experience by looking over with me the new varieties found in the Maslin orchard. Of the 130 trees in bearing, 74, or slightly over half, are caprifigs, and 65 are Smyrna figs. A number of these edible figs are very promising new varieties. At least 1 in 10 of these figs is worthy of careful trial with a view to commercial culture, and at least 2, and possibly more of them, show a very valuable characteristic not known in any fig of the Smyrna type now cultivated—the fruits become sealed automatically as they ripen.

The Rixford self-sealing fig: The best studied of these self-sealing varieties I have named the Rixford, in honor of Mr. G. P. Rixford, who first introduced Smyrna figs and caprifigs into California. It is a medium-sized, thin-skinned fig, with light amber-colored pulp of good flavor. As it ripens a drop of pellucid gum gradually hardens in the mouth of the fig, effectually sealing it against filth, beetles, and all other insects. This variety does not sour, because the germs that cause fermentation can not effect an entrance. The tree is very fruitful, and is of immense size; 2,600 cuttings were taken from it in the fall of 1908 without crippling it seriously. These cuttings are available for free distribution throughout the country, as will be explained below.

Another self-sealing variety was discovered on October 20, 1908, by Mr. A. H. Brydges, of Loomis, because its fruits had withstood without injury two soaking rains that had ruined the fruits of all other varieties growing in this part of the orchard.

The Maslin orchard a capital breeding place for Blastophaga: Probably the greatest value of the Maslin orchard lies in the fine assortment of caprifigs it contains. A score or more of these caprifigs are valuable for planting in Smyrna fig orchards to provide a breeding place for the Blastophaga. Some of the new caprifigs are valuable because of their large profichi full of insects and pollen; others, as was noted in my paper read at the Riverside meeting last spring, because they support the fig insects in midsummer, when few can find lodgment on the ordinary varieties of caprifigs; still others are of value in producing mamme very late in spring, when they are very useful in infecting profichi buds that push late. All of these varieties are available for free distribution on the same terms as the new fig.

It may be readily imagined what a splendid breeding place for Blastophaga is made by the Maslin orchard, containing, as it does, 74 different varieties of caprifigs, and being the largest caprifig plantation known in the world.

Distribution of young seedling figs by the Department of Agriculture: In view of the remarkably large proportion of valuable figs and caprifigs that have been found among the seedlings planted by Mr. Maslin, it becomes evident that the Lob Ingir (Bulletin Smyrna, Commercial Smyrna, Calimyrna) fig is not a highly bred variety, but is, doubtless, merely a chance seedling that originated in the Meander Valley in Asia Minor perhaps many hundreds of years ago. The foothills in the vicinity of Aidin have been celebrated for the high quality of the figs they produce for at least 2,000 years.

The Bureau of Plant Industry has grown several thousand seedling figs from the best obtainable Smyrna figs, including the Lob Ingir and the Rixford varieties, and these 1-year-old pot-grown trees are now available for free distribution to all who apply. In order to encourage the planting of seedling figs, and thereby the breeding of new varieties of figs and caprifigs especially well adapted to California conditions, the Department of Agriculture will give one cutting of a new fig or new caprifig from the Maslin orchard for every three seedling figs set out at least 25 by 8½ feet apart. Those who plant out seedling figs under these terms will be considered as cooperating in the fig breeding work of the department, and will be preferred in the distribution of new varieties that may be originated in the experimental fig orchards of the Bureau of Plant Industry, besides receiving all publications on fig culture of fig varieties to be issued by the bureau. Cuttings from the Maslin seedling fig orchard will be sent only to such cooperators.

Mamme and profichi from the Maslin orchard placed at the disposition of fig growers: One of the chief objects of the Department of Agriculture in leasing the Maslin orchard was to prevent anything like a corner in caprifigs. The mamme and profichi produced by the orchard will, for the present at least, be placed at the disposition of fig growers who do not have enough profichi to caprify their own orchard, and who wish an additional supply for their own use and not for sale. So far as possible mamme will be sent in small boxes by mail free of all charges, but the profichi must be shipped by express, and the grower must arrange to gather them himself, or else pay the caretaker the actual cost of picking and packing. Cooperators who have planted out seedling figs will be preferred in the distribution of mamme and profichi.

Names of all fig growers desired by the Department of Agriculture: A concise circular and a fuller bulletin are being prepared for distribution to fig growers by the Bureau of Plant Industry. These publications will give detailed information as to how to grow caprifigs, and will explain fully how to secure the new figs and caprifigs as a bonus for planting seedling figs.

All fig growers are therefore requested to send at once their names and full addresses to the Department of Agriculture in Washington, so they can be placed on the mailing lists to receive the circulars mentioned above.

Now, the reason I wish to speak to you is just this, that in view of the fact that the ranch is offered for sale, that it is leased for only a single year at a time, it was uncertain as to the future of this orchard, and the Department of Agriculture has taken over a lease of this seedling fig orchard and will run it for the benefit of the fig growers of California; that is to say, the cuttings of the valuable caprifigs will be distributed to fig growers under certain conditions, and those who need a supply of the fig insects will be furnished free of charge. Those who wish to use the caprifigs for caprifying their orchards can obtain them at the actual cost of picking, packing, and shipping. When I tell you that 452 boxes, weighing 20 pounds each, were shipped last season, you will realize that quite a large bulk is involved, too large a bulk for the department to ship free of all charges; but for the growers who need these caprifigs for their own use—not for sale—they will be furnished at the actual cost of picking and packing.

Now, as to the condition under which the Government will do this. Years ago I was shown conclusively that it is necessary to maintain an abundant supply of fig insects that have an abundant assortment of male figs. It is not sufficient to buy one or two of the best caprifigs—that is, the largest insects and the most pollen—you must have those, too, but you must also have other varieties in which the insect can live throughout the other months of the year. Every fig grower should plant in his orchard a small caprifig orchard. They can be planted thickly, and he should have at least 8 or 10 varieties. We have been for years collecting in the Old World cuttings of all the best-known caprifigs. We have 65 varieties in the orchard at Loomis. These cuttings of capri trees will be distributed free to all growers throughout this State and other States upon application, upon this condition, that for every fig tree they receive they agree to plant out 10 seedling fig trees, which the department will furnish free of all cost. To tell you why I make this condition, it is to prevent the miscellaneous request for free trees with which we would be overwhelmed otherwise; and, secondly, to encourage the planting of seedling fig trees. Mr. Rixford and I have been fortunate in having been able to make an investigation of the fig trees in Mr. Maslin's orchard, and we assume that at least 10 per cent of these figs are excellent new varieties of high value; that is, I mean edible figs. At least 10 per cent of the caprifigs are also very satisfactory varieties. So, in asking the grower to plant 10 seedling trees, we are not asking him to throw his money away but to carry on one step further the experiment Mr. Maslin made years ago; and I think you will find it interesting to watch these new varieties as they come into bearing. They can be planted rather thickly. I am making this announcement primarily to ask the fig growers in this State to send their names and addresses to Walter T. Swingle, Bureau of Plant Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., in order that they may receive circulars giving the exact conditions of this distribution and explaining in detail why we are leasing this orchard.

Now, I want to ask the permission of the chairman that Mr. Rixford explain something of the value of the variety of edible figs found in this orchard. I am not myself an expert on edible figs. I want to say just one word, which I am sure your chairman will be interested in. Through chance we have secured the finest strain of the fig insect there is in the world. I say this because I visited the fig centers of the Old World several times, and all through there the fig trees are infested by two fig insects, the Blastophaga, the true fig insect, and the Philotrypesis, which occupies a space that the fig insect should have occupied. In some places in north Africa I found that more than one-half the insects were these worthless Philotrypesis, the messmate of the Blastophaga, and the value in the Old World is partly governed by the value of this insect. Fortunately, in California we have simon pure strain of Blastophaga. It has no parasite; and I wish to make this public announcement to discourage any further attempt to introduce new Blastophaga from the Old World, an attempt fraught with the danger of introducing the Philotrypesis. We have countless millions of Blastophaga in the State. There is, of course, no earthly reason for reenforcing. I give this as a warning to not reimport the fig insect.

Mr. ONSTADT. When were those insects introduced up here at Maslin's place?

Mr. SWINGLE. They were introduced by Mr. Roeding, I think, in 1891. That is a few miles up the road. They were introduced a few years later to Mr. Maslin's place through Mr. Mazel, then the tenant; but in putting the insects on the trees Mr. Mazel noticed that there were a few insects there. They had extended from another place about 13 miles away.

Mr. ONSTADT. I am about 35 miles away from Maslin's. How did the insects get there?

Mr. SWINGLE. They were blown through the air. It is an insect which can stay in the air for several hours.

President JEFFREY. I would like for Mr. Rixford to make it clear what trees are benefited by this. There are some fig orchards, of course, where there is no use for the insect.

Mr. RIXFORD. Speaking of caprifying different varieties of figs, Dr. Swartz in 1893 at Fresno found several varieties that do not actually require caprification were greatly benefited when caprified. There is a certain flavor to the seeds which contain the kernels that is beneficial to the fig as an eating fig. You perhaps may not be aware that in all of the ordinary California figs that do not require caprification the seeds are empty shells, contain no kernels, and will not germinate. I have gathered recently about 60 varieties of seeds from the London horticultural collection, and a large number of those had not been caprified—the seeds would float on the water—and those that were growing in the neighborhood of the capri trees were all heavy, so it was very easy to tell the fertile ones from the infertile ones. We have given considerable attention to the Loomis orchard, and have found several varieties that are of superlative merit. There is one fig in particular which Mr. Swingle's sharp eye detected first. It is a fig that he calls a self-sealer. We found that the figs laying upon the ground—those that had been caprified—generally had the eye quite open, so that after lying on the ground a short time beetles of different kinds entered them, laid their eggs, and in a few days they were full of maggots. There are two trees here in the fruit of which the opening is stopped up by a little drop of sirup. We have an idea that it may be quite an advantage to propagate that variety. I have some samples here of two of them. These figs have undergone no treatment; they are just as we picked them off the ground.

Mr. SWINGLE. I might say that the ordinary fig with the open mouth is entered by all kinds of insects, and frequently it carries bacteria. This fig is protected. I have been asked if cuttings of this variety can be obtained under the terms and conditions I spoke of. They can. I will state that we will distribute a limited number of the cuttings of this variety. This is the Rixford fig, named in honor of Mr. Rixford, the first to introduce the Smyrna fig into this State. In regard to the pistache nut, we sent an expert to Sicily, who got the first commercial varieties of pistache nuts. The entomologist at Washington discovered a new—and, they believed, a very dangerous—pest, a beetle burrowing in the buds, and no shipments were allowed to be sent out. We dug up trees, and they were shipped back to Washington and repotted. Out of the 500 we only saved 6 or 8; and I make this explanation. You will obtain them. We have some up at Chico; they are growing rapidly, but we are, unfortunately, unable to supply the buds at the time stated. It was the discovery of this unknown pest, which had not been known in the world at all.

TANGELOS: WHAT THEY ARE—THE VALUE IN FLORIDA OF THE SAMPSON AND THORNTON TANGELOS.

[United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Plant Industry, crop physiology and breeding investigations.]

For a number of years the Department of Agriculture has been testing a large number of crosses between different varieties of citrus fruits, one of these crosses (between the tangerine orange and the grapefruit) producing a new type of fruit, which has been named the tangelo. As a class these fruits resemble round oranges more than either of their parents and are exceedingly variable, sister fruits from seeds of a single cross-pollinated fruit often being very unlike. Second-generation seedlings, however, reproduce the parent variety almost as closely as though grown from a bud of the parent tree.

Two well-recognized varieties of these fruits have been thoroughly tested and for a number of years past have been distributed to cooperators for further trial. These tangelos are called the Sampson and the Thornton. They have been grown in a small way only and, until recently, chiefly for home use. Failure to appreciate their proper stage of maturity has served to disappoint many who have experimented with this new type of fruit. When eaten before fully ripe the fruit is disappointing, the flavor being disagreeably acid. It colors up early and externally appears mature long before it is really ready for consumption.

The Sampson tangelo is under normal conditions a decidedly late fruit, maturing in Florida about the time of the Tardiff orange, through March, April, and May. The Thornton is considerably earlier, the time of ripening, however, seeming to vary in different sections, though it usually is not mature before January or February. Some trees, however, have lately come to notice, the fruit of which is distinctly early, ripening in November and December.

As commercial plantings are being made at several places in Florida, it is important that citrus growers should have a clear understanding of the characteristics of the two types now available.

The Sampson tangelo is a slightly pear-shaped, thin-skinned, smooth, and shining fruit, of variable size, though usually larger than an average orange, pale orange in color, with a rather acid, sprightly flavored, aromatic, soft, and juicy, deep orange-colored pulp. If properly grown and picked when fully mature, it is a delicious fruit. It is liable, however to dry out on one side before fully ripening, a fault assumed to be due to sun scald. This tendency will probably preclude its culture on an extensive scale except by experts for a special market. It has in some cases been necessary to throw away as culls a large percentage of the crop of this variety even in the regions where it grows best. There is some evidence going to show that the tendency of the fruit to sun scald is less pronounced in occasional trees. Care should be taken to secure bud wood from such trees for further propagation.

The Thornton tangelo is of a different type—a rather rough, thick-skinned fruit of good size, with light or very pale orange-colored juice and sprightly flavored pulp. It has little acidity and resembles a tender, good-flavored orange more than a grapefruit or tangerine. When fully ripe it is so tender that extra care may be necessary in packing it for shipment. In this regard and in its rather free rind it resembles the tangerine. It may be eaten out of hand, like a tangerine, but is doubtless better when halved and eaten like a grapefruit. It requires no sugar, and the pulp is so tender it can be removed with a spoon without cutting the segments; moreover, there is little or no tendency for the juice to squirt when the spoon is inserted in the segment. While the Thornton fruit is not as attractive in appearance as the Sampson, it is milder in flavor and by some is preferred on this account. The fruit of both sorts should receive thorough spraying to produce clean, bright tangelos. Citrus scab is especially disfiguring on the Sampson tangelo, which seems to be rather susceptible to this disease. All foliage affected with scab should be carefully pruned away.

An early-maturing tangelo of good quality is desirable to furnish a supply throughout the shipping season and in some locations to avoid the danger of freezing before maturity. Buds from the early Thornton trees referred to above will be thoroughly tested in different localities to see if this tendency is inherent or due to local conditions. With the large number of similar hybrids still to be fruited, there is little doubt that desirable fruits will be obtained, ripening throughout the whole season, from November to July.

The success of these first two hybrids, using the tangerine and grapefruit as parents, has led to the creation of hundreds of additional hybrids between all the Mandarin types of oranges, including several varieties of tangerines, the King and Satsuma oranges, and the better types of grapefruit and pummelo. Among the tangelos resulting from such crosses are some of much promise, but further testing is necessary before any of these can be recommended for general planting.

For the canker-infested portions of the Gulf Coast States west of Florida there is reason to believe that some of these tangelos will be found of marked canker resistance. These will serve as substitutes for the very susceptible grapefruit largely grown for home use in this region. Tests now being made at the College of Agriculture, Los Banos, P. I., using a large number of tangelos supplied from material under test in this country, show a wide range of susceptibility, some of the tangelos being apparently canker resistant.

The fact that the Natsu-mikan, a fruit similar to a tangelo and possibly a spontaneous hybrid of an orange of the Mandarin type with a Japanese pummelo, seems to be decidedly canker resistant both in Japan and in this country confirms the belief that canker-resistant tangelos may be with reason expected from Mandarin-pummelo crosses, especially when one or, preferably, both of the parents are canker resistant, as would be the case with a cross between the Satsuma orange and the Hirado pummelo.

Hybrids between canker-resistant pummelos and other citrus fruits were made in Japan in 1915 and subsequent years through the cooperation of several of the imperial and provincial agricultural experiment stations. The resulting crosses are being tested for canker resistance both in Japan and in the Philippine Islands.

MEMORANDUM IN REGARD TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE DATE INDUSTRY IN THE SOUTHWESTERN UNITED STATES.

Twenty years of experimental work in cooperation with the State experiment stations of Arizona and California have shown that the hot irrigated valleys of the Southwest are well adapted to commercial date culture. For 10 years date culture was problematical and no marketable dates ripened. Just at the beginning of the Great War marketable dates began to be produced in both the Coachella Valley in California and the Salt River Valley in Arizona, but because of the war this promising new industry attracted little attention. At the present time the date industry is attracting much attention and abundant capital stands ready to push this new fruit industry just as fast as the experimental work of the Department of Agriculture blazes the way.

In many ways the date palm is unique. It stands large amounts of alkali in the soil, is not affected by hot winds or sand storms, and is strikingly adapted to culture under extreme desert conditions, provided water for irrigation is available. On the other hand, the date palm reproduces with extreme slowness and the best varieties produce on the average only a dozen offshoots during the whole lifetime, producing only one or two a year until the offshoot bearing age is past. In the second place, the date palm can not, like all other fruit trees, be budded or grafted. If the wrong variety is planted the trees must be dug up at great expense and destroyed and offshoots of better varieties set in their place.

This new industry is in a critical condition, therefore, having been proven to be adapted to the Southwest, but having unusual handicaps which interfere with its power of rapid expansion which are not inherent to any other fruit industry.

Preliminary experiments give promise that new methods of rooting offshoots will make possible considerably greater offshoot production, and at the same time experiments in date breeding have shown the possibility of originating new and very choice varieties especially adapted to local conditions, provided the single choice trees so produced can be multiplied rapidly until plantings can be made on a commercial scale. Also it is very desirable to introduce under proper safeguards additional choice offshoots from the Old World, since substitution later on is impossible. The right variety must be planted at the start.

In the present stage of the date industry in the United States the $10,000 increase requested for this work in the appropriation for the Office of Crop Physiology and Breeding, Bureau of Plant Industry, is really to be considered as a high-class investment. There can be no doubt that from now on the money invested in the scientific study of the date industry will revert to the Federal Government in tenfold amount in the form of income-tax returns.

This same Office of Crop Physiology and Breeding 10 years ago established in the Southwest the Peruvian alfalfa through scientific investigation. This alfalfa yields two more cuttings than the ordinary alfalfa grown in the Southwest and is rapidly replacing all other varieties in this region. This same office, in cooperation with four other offices of the Department of Agriculture, established in the Salt River Valley the culture of Pima cotton, the longest-fibered Egyptian cotton in the world.

In the case of the Peruvian alfalfa and the Egyptian cotton the returns to the Federal Government in the form of income taxes exceed each year twentyfold the total cost of the work by the Department of Agriculture. It will undoubtedly prove to be true also in the case of the date palm, and it is not economy, but rather the reverse, to withhold the small amount necessary to push this industry and establish it on a flourishing basis in the next few years.

There is every reason to expect the date industry to grow rapidly until a capital of from twenty-five to fifty million dollars is invested. It will supply the whole of America with the cleanest and best dates that are to be found in any part of the world and will prove beneficial not only to the growers but to the consumers as well.

JANUARY 19, 1921.

MEMORANDUM ON NEW TYPES OF CITRUS FRUITS.

Experiments in the breeding of citrus fruits which have been under progress for the last 10 years have shown beyond question that it is possible to originate new types of citrus fruits and of stocks upon which to graft citrus fruits which are better adapted to the soil and climatic conditions than any of the citrus fruits or stocks now grown commercially. This type of work is particularly important for Arizona and Texas and California, where the attempt is being made to grow citrus fruits under unusual conditions—that is, where the climate is exceptionally dry and the soil markedly deficient in humus.

The Sampson tangelo is a sample of one of the new types of citrus fruits being originated by cross breeding. It is a hybrid of the grapefruit and tangerine, but is quite different from either parent, and has, where it can be grown, proved to be extremely profitable to the grower and very popular with the consumer.

The work on breeding new fruits is carried on in the office of Crop Physiology and Breeding Investigations. The work of bud selection of fruits which have entered commercial culture is carried on in Investigation and Improvement of Fruits, particularly by Mr. A. D. Shamel, stationed at Riverside, Calif., and the investigation of the limiting climatic factors, the understanding of which are so highly important in successful orange culture in Arizona and the hotter parts of California, is carried on by the office of Biophysical Investigations. All three of these offices are in the Bureau of Plant Industry.

Crop Physiology has been allowed $5,000 increase out of $20,000 asked for in the estimates; Investigation and Improvement of Fruits has been allowed no increase out of $26,800 asked for, of which $15,000 would go to Mr. Shamel for his bud-selection work; Biophysical Investigations has been allowed the full amount asked for, $32,500.

FEBRUARY 5, 1921.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Arizona, as modified, to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted by the committee, on page 20, line 5, it is proposed to insert "$61,860."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, beginning at the top of page 26, to strike out:

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $360,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, after due advertisement and on competitive bids, is authorized to award the contract for the supplying of printed packets and envelopes and the packeting, assembling, and mailing of the seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, or any part thereof, for a period of not more than five years nor less than one year, if by such action he can best protect the interests of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th of January: Provided also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same session been supplied by the department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I renew the amendment I offered shortly before adjournment on yesterday. It is an amendment to which I believe the chairman of the committee said he had no objection.

Mr. GRONNA. May we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 27, line 8, it is proposed to amend the text of the part proposed to be stricken out by inserting, after the words "Delegates in Congress," the words "and the Resident Commissioner of Porto Rico."

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Texas that I believe that amendment ought to go in, regardless of whether the seed provision is restored or not, because we ought not to discriminate against Porto Rico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the same amendment should be made at two other places in the part proposed to be stricken out.

After the word "Delegate," in line 16, page 27, I move to add the words "or to the Resident Commissioner of Porto Rico."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. And on line 25, page 27, after the word "Congress," I move to insert the words "and to the Resident Commissioner of Porto Rico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on striking out the House provision as amended.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The Senate committee proposes to strike out the House provision. Is not the question on adopting the Senate amendment? I am trying to get at the parliamentary situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentary situation is that the question is on striking out the House provision as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, is the amendment now pending the one which is designed to restore the seed provision?

Mr. GORE. To strike it out.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall vote "aye."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, for several years the House has placed this item in the bill. The Senate generally comes along and strikes it out, and then the matter goes to conference, and I know of no time when the Senate has had its way about it. It has always acceded to the wishes of the House, and the bill then became a law, and the people of the country got their free seeds.

I see no reason in sending the matter to conference. There is no use in trying to economize by keeping these seeds from the farmers. We have heard a great deal about the farmers at this session of Congress. A great many Senators thought it would aid the farming element a great deal to pass a so-called emergency tariff bill here, which was a species of hypocrisy the like of which has never been seen in Congress before. Now you propose to take away from the farmers a small pittance of seeds that they have received before. I am opposed to that kind of hypocrisy and that kind of economy.

Yesterday we passed a bill to loan to the farmers in the drought-stricken areas of the Northwest some money with which to purchase seeds—a very appropriate piece of legislation. I see no wisdom in appropriating $5,000,000 to loan to farmers in drought-stricken areas to purchase seeds and then eliminating from this bill a provision for the purchase of seeds to be sent to farmers everywhere.

I am in favor of treating the farmers all over the country alike; and it seems to me that the Senate committee's recommendation in this matter should be overruled, and that we should incorporate this seed provision in this bill, because in the end we know that the Senate will have to accept the provision.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator is consistent. He opposed striking out this provision in the committee——

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. And of course he has the right to oppose it now.

The Senator asked if it was consistent to appropriate money for the purchase of seeds for farmers. The Senator would not for a moment allow the seeds which we were supposed to purchase under the bill passed yesterday to be shipped either by mail or by express. The Senator knows that we are paying out enormous sums of money because these seeds go through the mails. I believe that we could help the farmers a great deal more by furnishing them rare and valuable seeds from some other source; and I want to say to the Senator, as chairman of the committee, that if I am appointed one of the conferees I shall insist that the free-seed provision shall stay out of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I am opposed to that. I hope we will not instruct the Senator from North Dakota and his colleagues in conference to insist on striking the provision for these seeds from the bill and withhold them from the farmers of the country. It is very little we can do for them in appropriating this seed money, and let us do this small thing. Let us not have Congress adjourn and have anyone say we did nothing for the farmers.

Everybody seems to concede, at least on the other side of the aisle, that the so-called emergency tariff bill will not become a law. It is said in the newspapers that a great many of the Senators on the other side voted for the so-called emergency tariff bill because they thought the President would veto it, and that it therefore could not become a law.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator from North Dakota never said that, and the Senator from Idaho did not say that.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senate should instruct the conferees to keep the provision in the bill, of course there would be nothing else for the conferees to do than to insist that it should remain in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I am very anxious to see legislation expedited in every way, and if we agree to what the House has done, we will be following precedent after precedent of past Congresses and it will relieve the conferees from much discussion.

Mr. GRONNA. When the bill is sent back to the House, it will go to the Committee on Appropriations first, and I believe it is possible to get an agreement with the conferees of the House to leave out this provision.

Mr. HARRISON. I am opposed to that. That is why I want the Senate to instruct the conferees to accept the House bill; because I am afraid that if we get it before the steering committee of the House, which steering committee is made up of gentlemen who live in large cities of the country, we may not be able to do something for the farmers we now have an opportunity to help.

Mr. GRONNA. The committee of the House, of course, left this provision out. I believe it was put in on the floor of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the House of Representatives put it in, and it seems to me the Senate should leave it in, so that this Congress will not adjourn and let it be said by the country at large that we have done nothing for the farmers. Let us give them a little pittance of a few seeds, if nothing else. So I ask for a record vote on this proposition.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I would like to say to the Senator from Mississippi that, as far as Kansas is concerned, the farmers do not want these seeds.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that if Kansas does not want them, and they will give to Mississippi the pro rata part of Kansas, we will take it.

Mr. CAPPER. I would like to read to the Senator a few lines of a communication from the head of the agricultural department of Kansas, Mr. J. C. Mohler. He attaches to his letterhead a clipping from the daily newspaper announcing that the House of Representatives had appropriated $365,000 for seeds, and then he writes:

> If you could have this free-seed provision eliminated, it would be a fine service and a big saving. We think this free-seed distribution is bad business and a waste of funds.

I think he speaks for about ninety-nine out of one hundred of the farmers of Kansas.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has advocated free seeds for the farmers of the country. I simply want to read what some real farmers say.

I have here a letter from the Mayview Farmers' Union, No. 4, present membership 52, their motto being "Justice, equity, and the Golden Rule." This is written from Mayview, Wash., a small country place, and is dated February 3, addressed to the United States Senate, and reads as follows:

> MAYVIEW FARMERS' UNION, No. 4,
> Mayview, Wash., February 3, 1921.
> To the United States Senate:
> Whereas commercial depression, poverty, and starvation are abroad on this earth, taxation has reached the limit, and every dollar of public money should be spent for the best purpose possible; and
> Whereas the "free distribution of garden seeds" is of very doubtful utility, and under these conditions we would be ashamed to accept them: Therefore
> We, Farmers' Union, No. 4, in session to-day (19 present), respectfully and earnestly urge you to defeat the garden-seed appropriation, thereby saving for a more useful purpose the $360,000 cost, the clerical labor placing them in the mail, and the expense of transporting and delivering them.
> Unanimously passed.
> J. L. HORRELL, President.
> C. W. COTTON, Secretary.
> Presented through the courtesy of Senator JONES.

That, Mr. President, is the voice of real farmers.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the chairman of the committee how much this seed distribution amounts to in the way of an appropriation.

Mr. GRONNA. The appropriation carried in this bill is $365,000, but it costs the Government many, many times that for carrying them through the mails. I have not been able to figure out exactly the cost, but it runs into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, because we have to pay for carrying the seeds through the mails.

Mr. TOWNSEND. After we buy the seed.

Mr. GRONNA. We buy the seed for $365,000, but it costs a great deal more than that to transport them through the mail.

I want to say to the Senator from Idaho and to the Senate that the committee thought there was more need for the preservation of our forests throughout the entire country, and the committee increased the appropriation for cooperative work in the saving of the forests from $125,000 to $625,000, so that the increase in the Forest Service is only a little more than the amount appropriated for free seeds.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have not taken the floor to debate in favor of the free-seeds proposition. I simply desired to inform myself as to how much the Senate could save by cutting out the distribution of seeds, while the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs are contemplating seriously raising the appropriations some $150,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Washington will have to write back to his constituents and tell them that even though the seed distribution item goes out of the bill, the appropriation for paying those who distribute the seed will remain. While the provision for the free seeds is going out, the committee thought that the salary of the man who is in charge of the distributing of the seed should be increased. So they went to work and increased it from $2,500 to $3,000.

Mr. President, I think we ought to cut the item for free seeds out, and I hope it will go out, as far as the farmers are concerned, because the farmers care nothing about it whatever. The only good that can come from it would be the distributing of the seed to the school children of the country, to inspire them to start little gardens, and get them to raising some vegetables instead of playing around and getting into mischief. But in this bill the same expense for distributing the seed is provided for as if they were going to continue the distribution of seed hereafter.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, of course it is a matter of indifference to me whether this item stays in or goes out. But I do not think there will be any added expense whatever, under the present machinery of our Government, beyond the $365,000, because our postal regulations are such that the same force which is there now will transmit the seed, and we have so much space rented and engaged on the basis of weight, that is determined when seed are not weighed in. Therefore it will make practically no additional expense.

What I rose to remark is that I do not propose to let pass unnoticed the statement that if this item for free seed is cut out the officer who has charge of the distribution should go. The real truth is that with the provision for free seed cut out we provided that the officer who has the distribution in charge should not only be retained but increased in salary.

I was one who insisted that that should be done, for the reason that we have other seed and rare varieties of trees and shrubs which we provide for. I have had some experience with Mr. Jones, and, as I said yesterday, and I take this occasion to repeat now, it would be an investment on the part of the Agricultural Department to keep such an official as he is. Because of his efficiency and the universal recognition of it, we provided a place for him that would not depend upon the going out of the seed provision. That is the reason we kept him and placed him in a position where his services could be utilized.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, for 10 years I have heard very powerful pleas on the floor of the Senate to retain this seed distribution, none, I think, so powerful as the plea in behalf of the farmer just delivered by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. During every one of the 10 years this hoary-headed old graft has marched into this Chamber, and the Senate most of the time has thrown it out. Now it is presented again.

There is not much use talking about economy in this Congress if we are to appropriate $360,000 for such a farce as this free-seed distribution is. It is the laughing stock of everybody who receives any of the seed, and a humiliating thing to anybody who ever plants any of it.

Mr. Jones's salary has been referred to by the Senator from South Carolina. I can see some reason for increasing Mr. Jones's salary, even if we eliminate the seed distribution. Heretofore Mr. Jones has had the delightful association of Members of Congress, rushing to him to find out about beet seed, and turnip seed, and carrot seed. He spent a large part of his time conversing with Members of Congress. That was a delight, and that should be taken into consideration in fixing his salary. He was willing to serve for less in view of that.

Now that we are to take this charming duty away from him it is very proper that, as he is not in the future to have the pleasure of mingling with Members of Congress who are chasing for seeds to send out to their constituents to make them think what they are doing for them, his salary ought to be increased, and I think it is a very proper thing to do, as he is a valuable man.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. Has the Senator consulted Mr. Jones about this "pleasure"?

Mr. KENYON. No; because I do not send out these seeds. I am reminded of a meeting in my State one time when a Congressman, whose name I will not mention, and I addressed the meeting, and I denounced this procedure of sending out garden seed. I received a letter two days afterwards saying that evidently as I did not want my allotment of seed he would like to have them.

Seriously, however, it seems to me, Mr. President, such a silly performance, with the condition of the Public Treasury, to be sending out, at a tremendous expense, little packages of seed, and then talking about them being for the benefit of the farmer. I am inclined to think the Senator from Mississippi was talking in a Pickwickian way, of which he is such an able master. I hope that the conferees on the part of the Senate this year, especially in view of the fact that the House, if I understand it, only adopted this by 7 majority on the floor, will stand firmly and let this bill fail, if necessary, rather than let this provision stay in. It would add to the respect the people of the United States have for the American Congress, and at least would lead them to think that we were going to save some money, even in small ways. It is about time that the process of economy commence. This garden-seed appropriation has always been a farce and always will be. Let us end it now, once and for all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, from what the Senator from South Carolina has stated, the inference may be drawn that I am opposed to Mr. Jones. I wish to inform him that I have no opposition to Mr. Jones. I know the gentleman and know him to be a very fine man, but he has had certain duties to perform in the past, and the greater part of those duties, together with the numerous employees that he had under him to perform them, have been taken away largely through the elimination of the seed for distribution. There is no new work put upon him or those employees. The distribution of rare seeds has been going on for years, and has been carried on by Mr. Jones in connection with the seeds that were supposed to go to the farmers and that cost $365,000 a year for the seeds alone. So there is no more work for the future, as far as rare seeds are concerned, than there has been in the past.

I could not help believing that taking that work away from Mr. Jones and his assistants—preparing millions of packages of seeds to be sent to all parts of the country, all the addresses to be placed upon them, and gathered together and sent to the post office, and all that sort of work—should enable us to cut out some of the employees provided for in the past. That is the object I had in saying what I did. I think Mr. Jones could well be used, perhaps, in some other work in the department, and perhaps with greater responsibility than sending seeds out to the farmers. He may be all that the Senator says he is, and I have not any doubt that that is true, but if we are going to relieve the taxpayers of the United States—I say "if," but we have got to do it. I wish to say frankly that there is no "if we are going to do it." We have got to do it or there is going to be trouble in the United States. I think we ought to begin with the small things and carry it up through all the appropriations of the Government and cut out every unnecessary expense. The American people expect us to do it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the history of the seed provision in the House sheds some light on the action of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The House committee in reporting the Agricultural appropriation bill to the House left out the appropriation for seeds. Having left out the appropriation for the purchase of seeds, they also left out the appropriation for Mr. Jones, who is charged with the distribution of the seeds. On the floor of the House the appropriation for the purchase of seeds was restored. I take it that through an oversight the appropriation for Mr. Jones's salary was not restored. So as the bill came to the Senate it contained an appropriation for the purchase of seeds and made no provision for their distribution.

The Senate committee struck out the provision for the purchase of seeds and restored the appropriation for Mr. Jones, charging him with the distribution of rare seeds and plants, a duty which ought to be carried forward regardless of the free garden-seed provision. I think the free garden-seed provision ought to be stricken out, because there are other duties remaining for Mr. Jones to perform, and this provision in his behalf ought to be carried, but we find ourselves in this situation: No one can foresee the eventualities of a conference, and even though the Senate strikes out the provision for the purchase of seeds, if by any chance it should be restored in conference and the Senate should make no permanent provision for Mr. Jones, we would find ourselves in the position of having a provision for the purchase of seeds and no appropriation for any officer to make their distribution.

I think Mr. Jones is a very capable officer, and for my own part I hope that the recommendation of the committee to increase his salary to $3,000 will prevail.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is late in the afternoon, and I shall not ask for a quorum nor shall I demand the yeas and nays. I shall content myself with merely asking for a division on the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

On a division, the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 28, line 24, to reduce the appropriation for general expenses of the Bureau of Plant Industry from "$2,568,770" to "$2,394,235."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 1, to reduce the total appropriation for Bureau of Plant Industry from "$3,067,270" to "$2,895,735."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 5, after the word "lands," to strike out "$50,000" and insert: "$115,000: Provided, That not less than $25,000 shall be used for the study of forests on farms and for advising farm owners as to the planting of forest trees, the establishment and care of windbreaks, shelter woods, and woodlots," so as to read:

For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forests and forest lands, $115,000: Provided, That not less than $25,000 shall be used for the study of forests on farms and for advising farm owners as to the planting of forest trees, the establishment and care of windbreaks, shelter woods, and woodlots.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. On page 42, line 9, after the word "woodlots," I move to insert:

And provided further, That not less than $15,000 shall be used for forest investigation in Idaho and the inland empire.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho, but I believe we would have to increase the appropriation, because $40,000 is allotted for experiments at forest stations and $25,000 for the purpose provided in the committee amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. I further move to amend by increasing the amount of the appropriation, on page 42, in line 6, from $115,000 to $130,000.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am not sufficiently acquainted with geography to have in mind the exact boundaries of "the inland empire." I should like to inquire of the Senator from Idaho if it includes Montana?

Mr. BORAH. It includes Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is this an official designation?

Mr. BORAH. I offered the amendment in the language which was furnished me by the Forestry Bureau. It is particularly for the purpose of maintaining a forestry station at Priest River, from which they make investigations in Montana, Idaho, the Dakotas, and parts of Washington, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I move to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho by adding the words "including the State of Montana."

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to having that included, because it is already included in the manner in which it has been explained to me. I intended it to be included.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me the appropriation of $25,000 for the study of forests on farms and for advising farm owners as to the planting of forest trees and the establishment and care of windbreaks, shelter woods, and wood lots is going a long way. No doubt it was estimated for and asked for, but to me it seems perfectly useless. I know, of course, that it will give employment to as many people as $25,000 will cover, but there are so many other things that ought to be done by the Government which would bring greater returns to the American people than this that I think the Senate ought to hesitate before spending money for this purpose.

It may be that some of this money will be expended in the State of Utah, but, so far as I am concerned, I would not care whether all of it was to be expended there, I would be opposed to the provision at this time. I do not know that it is worth while to ask for a separate vote on the amendment, but I do believe that it is unnecessary, and the expenditure of $25,000 for this purpose during the coming year I do not believe ought to be authorized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Idaho offers the following amendment to the committee amendment: On page 42, line 6, strike out "$115,000" and insert "$130,000," and following the word "woodlots," in line 9, add the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That not less than $15,000 shall be used for forest investigation in Idaho and the inland empire.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator from Idaho if the expression "inland empire" is a local designation, or is it official?

Mr. BORAH. It is the designation which has come to be applied to a certain territory in the Northwest, and what it means is well understood. I should not have used the language myself; I think it should have designated the particular States, but the Forestry Bureau know their business in regard to it, and they suggested this language. I am perfectly willing for the sake of clarity to mention the particular States. I mentioned Idaho because the Forestry investigation bureau is in Priest River, Idaho, and the inland empire itself, it is well understood, includes certain territory in which they operate from that point. However, if other Senators desire to be more specific I have no objection.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Is it the opinion of the Senator from Idaho that that terminology would better fit the case that he has in mind rather than naming the States?

Mr. BORAH. I think it is preferable to naming the States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the States are named, including the State of Montana, will not that be construed to mean that other States not specifically named in the bill are to be excluded?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The way in which it is expressed does not make any difference to me.

Mr. BORAH. I could put into the RECORD the letter of the Forestry Bureau, which would show precisely what the appropriation is for and what territory it is expected to cover. It would be an explanation of the language which would not admit of any misconstruction, in my judgment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should be very glad to hear the letter to which the Senator refers.

Mr. BORAH. I said I was going to ask to have the letter inserted in the RECORD. It is very long. Does the Senator from Montana desire me to read it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I am perfectly willing to take the Senator's statement; but, of course, even the letter would not be an official interpretation of the measure. I think I shall insist upon the amendment which I have suggested, if the language "inland empire" is retained in the amendment, because the term "inland empire," if I have the correct understanding, is one which originated in the city of Spokane, which is supposed to be the capital of the "inland empire," and the interpretation of the term depends upon where one is located. I apprehend very likely that the gentleman who first used the terminology considered tributary to the city of Spokane territory which is clear over in Montana. We in Montana have a somewhat different idea about it. We scarcely regard ourselves as commercial or otherwise tributary to Spokane.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Priest River Forest Experiment Station covers a certain territory, which has been designated by the Forestry Bureau apparently as the territory of the "inland empire." The way the Forestry Bureau use the terminology and the way the people of Spokane use it may be quite different, but the Forestry Bureau understands it to include certain territory, and a part of it, at least, that I know of is in Montana; but if we include Montana, of course, we must include the other States, and I would not know just exactly how to designate them.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think there is some force in the argument presented by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. Of course, I am interested in experimental work to be conducted in sections of my State, but the term "inland empire" never has included the territory lying west of the Cascade and Sierra Nevada Mountains and would not reach that part of the States of Oregon, Washington, and California which is densely covered with a growth of trees and the particular section which needs reforestation. If the Senator from Idaho conceives this amendment to include all of the northwestern section of the country, I think he is greatly mistaken, and I would not want the amendment to refer to the State of Montana without also including Utah, Oregon, Washington, and California.

Mr. BORAH. Very well, we will put in those States instead of "inland empire."

Mr. McNARY. And North Dakota also should be included.

Mr. BORAH. What I am more particularly after is the $15,000. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. I will ask the Senator why exclude Nevada?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that we insert "in the United States."

Mr. BORAH. Of course, the experiment station at Priest River under the operation of the Forestry Bureau covers certain territory, and I do not know whether or not it includes Nevada, but if the Senator from Nevada wishes Nevada included we will also put in Nevada.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee whether or not this appropriation provides for the establishment of forestry experiment stations wherever and whenever the Department of Agriculture thinks they ought to be established?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. This particular experiment station is already established and has been running for some time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Idaho if he will not withhold his amendment, in order that we may vote upon the committee amendment? I recognize there is merit in the Senator's amendment and it ought to be adopted, but I desire to vote against the committee amendment, which provides:

That not less than $25,000 shall be used for the study of forests on farms and for advising farm owners as to the planting of forest trees, the establishment and care of windbreaks, shelter woods, and wood lots.

I should like to have an opportunity to vote on that amendment, because I think it ought to go out. The Senator from Idaho could then offer his amendment to the committee amendment if it is agreed to, and if it goes out he could offer his amendment when the committee amendments shall have been disposed of. Will the Senator from Idaho allow us first to have a vote upon the committee amendment?

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I am in favor of whatever the committee desires, and I will withhold my amendment to the committee amendment if the committee amendment is first to be voted on.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have that procedure followed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should exceedingly regret if the desire of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] should be accomplished by a vote of this body. As a western representative and one interested in tree culture and reforestation, I desire to say that I think it is essential that the fundamentals of reforestation be taught to farmers. It is my opinion that in the future we are going to look to the small wood lots and to the small farms for our timber and our lumber. But very few farmers who live in the Western States or in the pine-growing States of the South, or in the other States, know anything about tree culture. It is a science unto itself.

We must abandon the idea that a tree grows merely because there happens to be a seed thrown on the soil. There must be protection from fires and from certain animals that devastate the young forests. Men must be taught how to cultivate the trees and to protect them from the vandal ways of children. I think the forestry literature which is circulated by reason of this appropriation is doing a very commendable work. I think it would strike at the basis of the great scheme to plant more trees and conserve our forests should we strike out this humble little provision which only appropriates $25,000.

The taproot of the whole scheme of reforestation certainly rests with the individual, the home, and the wood lot. To strike at it now in this small way, in order to save $25,000, would be a matter of regret in the future, in my opinion.

On page 352 of the House hearings on the Agricultural bill for 1922 there is a brief but interesting statement by the department on this subject, which I ask that the Secretary may read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

FOR THE STUDY OF FORESTS ON FARMS, ETC.

No. 76, page 136, is a new item, proposing an appropriation of $25,000 for the study of forests on farms and for advising farm owners as to the planting of waste lands with forest trees, the establishment and care of windbreaks, shelter woods, and wood lots, and also the most advantageous marketing of forest products grown upon such farms. The Forest Service has done a considerable amount of investigative work bearing upon farm wood lots and has published its results from time to time in farmers' bulletins, and in other publications designed to give the farmer practical suggestions of taking the best care of his wood lots and also on marketing his products to the best advantage. We have been unable, however, to do nearly as much work of this character as should be done. The farm wood lots embrace about one-third of the entire area of forests in the United States, and particularly in the Eastern States they form an important part of our remaining timber supply. East of the Mississippi River about 40 per cent of the standing timber is attached to farms as a part of farm holdings.

The farmer is the type of timber owner who should be most interested in reforestation, because, as a rule, he represents a more permanent ownership than the lumber company and he has a more permanent interest in keeping up the value of his property.

We have proposed this item because we wish to enlarge the extension work which we have done hitherto from time to time in advising the farmers, by regions, where forest conditions are the same, as to the best method of handling their timberlands and wooded areas which are useful as an adjunct to their property. The field for this sort of work is enormous. We want not only to advise the farmer how to grow trees on his poorer land but also to advise him on the best methds of disposing of his timber after it has grown. The farmer is proverbially a poor timber seller; he does not get the value of his timber, because he does not know what its value is. We have seen from the results of our work hitherto that a large field lies available for practical reforestation if we have the funds to take this matter up. Without this item we can still do something, but we should have a small group of men—14 if this money is appropriated—who will specialize in this field of farm forestry and carry on the work as a continuing project, for it will continue indefinitely. I do not know of any way in which $25,000 could be expended to better advantage to encourage reforestation than under this item.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the item at the top of page 21 provides an appropriation "for silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations," and so forth. That means, of course, the development of trees. That item has been in the Agricultural appropriation bill for many years. All that the Senator from Oregon has said as to the growing of trees and the necessity of it is true, but the department has been carrying on that work now for a long time, and I have no doubt that it will continue to do so for years to come. Every time, however, I hear testimony given to one of the committees of the Senate, for instance, along the line of that we have just heard read by the Secretary, the thought occurs to me that the officials of the Agricultural Department think that the farmer has not sense enough to carry him to the table; that he does not know anything; that he has to have somebody from the department at Washington teach him when to eat and how to eat and how to get what he needs to eat, and what he shall raise and what he shall sell. I do not believe in such rot. I think the farmer of this country is well able to care for himself, and I think he knows just about as much how to raise wood on his farm and when it is necessary to provide a windbreak as does some fellow who is sent out there all the way from Washington to tell him. I do not think the farmer is such an ignorant person as he is pictured to be here; but whenever the department wants an appropriation to do something, and thereby increase the expenditures of our Government, they base their demands on the needs of the farmer.

Mr. President, the Senate can do as it pleases about it, but this appropriation is simply opening another avenue of expenditure, and when it once goes into the bill it will never go out; it will be estimated for like all of the other items that go into such bills every year. It will be said that as it is existing law and was appropriated for the previous year, of course it must be appropriated for again and again.

Mr. President, there are now over $100,000,000 of permanent appropriations that never come before Congress, and, in fact, during the last few years there have been about a billion dollars annually of such appropriations. Nobody ever knows what they are; nobody every inquires into them; they are appropriations to be made year after year, and when they get upon the statute books they never are eliminated. Many of them are hoary with age. I am going in the next few months, if I can find the time, to examine all the permanent appropriations, and I am going to see if many of them can not be eliminated. We do not know to whom we are to-day paying salaries all over the United States to do things that were appropriated for 25 years ago.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question in that connection?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Has a summary of those appropriations ever been published?

Mr. SMOOT. The total amount of them is published.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I mean a summary giving the character of the appropriation, as well as the amount.

Mr. SMOOT. I have never seen a full summary of them. As I say to the Senator, I am going into all the details of them.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I trust the Senator will.

Mr. SMOOT. I started to do it about six months ago, but I found it was a mighty long road to travel; but it has to be done, and I have learned enough already to know that there are appropriations under which money is being paid out every year that we appropriated for by law a quarter of a century ago, and not a dollar of good has come to the country from them.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, does the Senator refer to continuing appropriations?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I do. We pass a law here, and as a result of simply putting in the little words "hereafter it shall be," it goes into the permanent appropriations, and the law is signed by the President of the United States and we never think of it thereafter. Even in these yearly bills, when we put a new item into the bill, see how hard it is to take it out?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, some four years ago I called for a list of these permanent appropriations to be sent to the committee, and a good many of them were stricken out; but since the war I suppose a great many more have crept in, and there ought to be a publication of these permanent appropriations again. Four years ago, as I say, they were called for, and some were cut down as far as it could be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that just at the time we were going to do that the war came on and examinations of all kinds ceased, but in studying the appropriations that were reported as permanent appropriations we found items that no man living in the United States, unless it is the man who draws the check, ever thought were being drawn from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, if the Senate wants to begin this, well and good, although the provision itself says it is for silviculture; so I shall not say anything more about it. If the Senate wants to put it in, let it go in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. GRONNA. I call for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have modified the language of the amendment which I offered and have submitted it generally to the Senators that were interested in the matter as members of the committee, and it seemed to be satisfactory. After the words "wood lots" I propose to add:

Provided further, That not less than $15,000 be used for forest investigation throughout the territory covered by the operations and the work carried on from the Priest River, Idaho, Forest Experiment Station.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 42, line 22, after the word "Provided," to strike out the word "further," so as to read:

Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 may be expended for the construction and maintenance of boundary and range division fences, counting corrals, stock driveways and bridges, the development of stock watering places, and the eradication of poisonous plants on the national forests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 2, after the word "forests," to strike out "And provided" and insert "Provided further," so as to read:

Provided further, That no part of any funds appropriated for the Forest Service shall be used to pay the transportation or traveling expenses of any forest officer or agent except he be traveling on business directly connected with the Forest Service and in furtherance of the works, aims, and objects specified and authorized by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 8, before the word "further," to strike out the word "also," so as to read:

And provided further, That no part of any funds appropriated for the Forest Service shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for, in whole or in part, the preparation or publication of any newspaper or magazine article; but this shall not prevent the giving out to all persons, without discrimination, including newspapers and magazine writers and publishers, of any facts or official information of value to the public.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 15, to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided also, That the grazing fees payable under existing law for the use of national forests during the calendar year 1921 may be paid, at the option of the holder of a permit, in two equal installments, the first half of said fees on the 1st day of August, 1921, and the remaining half on the 1st day of October, 1921, and in the event of such payments are not made on or before such deferred dates penalties shall be thereafter imposed in accordance with the provisions of existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to recur to page 42, and ask if there was an amendment adopted increasing the figures from $115,000 to $130,000 in line 6, page 42?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was not.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to recur to that and offer an amendment to that, if there is no objection. It is necessary in order to deal with the situation as it now is. I offer an amendment to the effect that the figures "$115,000" be increased to "$130,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 43, line 24, to increase the appropriation for general expenses of the Forest Service from "$3,924,282" to "$3,989,282."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has been adopted, the $15,000 will have to be added to the total. The total here will have to be so amended as to include the $15,000, or it will not be allowed. I refer to the item at the bottom of page 43:

In all, for general expenses, $3,989,282.

I suggest that the Secretary be instructed to add $15,000 to that total.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair has universally held that it is part of the business of the Secretary to correct the totals.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 44, line 14, to increase the total appropriation for Forest Service from $6,389,302 to $6,454,302.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 19, after the words "District of Columbia," in line 18, to insert "including cooperation with such persons, associations, or corporations as may be found necessary," so as to read:

General expenses, Bureau of Chemistry: For all necessary expenses, for chemical apparatus, chemicals and supplies, repairs to apparatus, gas, electric current, official traveling expenses, telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, for the employment of such assistants, clerks, and other persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may consider necessary for the purposes named, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, in conducting investigations; collecting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such investigations; and for rent outside of the District of Columbia, including cooperation with such persons, associations, or corporations as may be found necessary, for carrying out the investigations and work herein authorized as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 6, to insert:

For investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of fish, shrimp, oysters, and other shellfish, and for experimental shipments of these products, for the utilization of waste products, and the development of new sources of food, $20,000;

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this item is a duplication of work. In order to be sure of it, I asked for a report on the matter. I have here a letter on the subject, reading as follows:

I desire to suggest the following amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 15812) reported to the Senate on February 9, 1921. On page 46, lines 7 to 11, inclusive, strike out the following (under Bureau of Chemistry):

"For investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of fish, shrimp, oysters and other shellfish, and for experimental shipments of these products, for the utilization of waste products, and the development of new sources of food, $20,000."

The Agricultural act for 1921 carried an appropriation of $52,880 for the Bureau of Chemistry—

"for investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of poultry, eggs, fish, shrimp, oysters and other shellfish, and for experimental shipments of these products, for the utilization of waste products, and the development of new sources of food."

In its estimate for the fiscal year 1922 the Department of Agriculture (Bureau of Chemistry) asked for the appropriation of $52,880 for the same purpose (p. 270, Estimates of Appropriations, 1922).

The House of Representatives, however, eliminated this item in preparing the Agricultural bill for 1922.

The Senate committee inserted in the place of this item the item first quoted above, which limits the work to fish, shrimp, oysters and other shellfish, and reduces the appropriation from $52,880 to $20,000. The committee's report (p. 10) states that the reason for this limitation is that the Bureau of Markets and the Bureau of Crop Estimates have taken over that portion of the work previously performed by the Bureau of Chemistry which relates to poultry and eggs.

It is the opinion of this office that the work lately undertaken by the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture in investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of fish, shrimp, oysters and other shellfish constitutes an out-and-out duplication of the work of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce. From the organization of the office of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries in 1871, the Fish Commission (later the Bureau of Fisheries) has done work of this character. The investigation of problems of preservation and utilization of the products of the fisheries has been recognized as a function of the Bureau of Fisheries from its inception, and an examination of the publications of that bureau reveals that for 40 years it has been giving as much attention to these matters as its limited appropriations would allow. In recent years it has conducted a continuous, intensive investigation into the utilization of the waste products of fisheries and into the development of new sources of aquatic foods. It has all along been conducting experiments in canning, freezing, and otherwise preserving aquatic food products; and not the least of its achievements has been the introduction of improved packing methods in the processes of commerical fisheries in all parts of the country.

The Bureau of Fisheries has a fishery-products laboratory in Washington, D. C., which has facilities for handling investigations in this particular field which are superior to those of any laboratory in the world. The bureau also has another laboratory on the Pacific coast installed to facilitate the handling of similar problems in that territory. The Bureau of Fisheries is not only the proper agency to perform the functions under discussion, considering the organic laws of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce, but it is, moreover, much better equipped to do this work than the Bureau of Chemistry at the present time.

I am informed that on December 21, 1920, a conference was held between representatives of the Department of Commerce and representatives of the Department of Agriculture, with respect to the overlapping of certain of the activities of the two departments. This conference was attended by the following persons, among others:

For the Department of Commerce: Secretary Alexander; Assistant Secretary Sweet; Dr. Stratton, Director of the Bureau of Standards; and Dr. Smith, Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

For the Department of Agriculture: Secretary Meredith; Dr. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry; and Mr. Taylor, representing the Bureau of Plant Industry.

In the course of the discussion Dr. Smith, Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, stated that the work being done by the Bureau of Chemistry in the field of fishery technology was the proper function of the Bureau of Fisheries, and that the latter bureau was better equipped for the work than the Bureau of Chemistry. Dr. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, agreed that this was the case, stating that he had taken up the work only with the acquiescence of the Bureau of Fisheries and for the reason that the Bureau of Fisheries lacked the funds with which to do the work. He stated, furthermore, that the Bureau of Chemistry was prepared to withdraw from this field if such action was desired by the Department of Commerce. It was pointed out by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries that the fact that two governmental agencies were asking for appropriations to do work in this field increased the difficulties of the Bureau of Fisheries in obtaining adequate appropriations for its work; and Dr. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, agreed to accompany Dr. Smith, Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, in appearing before the Appropriations Committees to ask that the appropriation for this work be stricken from the Agricultural bill and given to the Bureau of Fisheries.

In view of these facts, I have suggested that the item in question be eliminated. No additional appropriation for the Bureau of Fisheries will be necessary since the work of that bureau has already been adequately provided for in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask whom that letter is from?

Mr. SMOOT. It is from the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency, who made an investigation of the matter at my request.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it a recent letter?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a recent letter. It is dated just the other day.

Mr. McNARY. What is the date?

Mr. SMOOT. It is dated February 21, 1921.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the Committee on Appropriations ever made an appropriation to carry on this work?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it has been a duplication of work in the past.

Mr. HARRISON. In what bill?

Mr. SMOOT. In the sundry civil appropriation bill; and I think it was inserted in the Agricultural appropriation bill at the request of the Senator from Florida, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. HARRISON. This appropriation has been carried for several years in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I am aware of it.

Mr. HARRISON. Then why did the Appropriations Committee provide a similar appropriation for similar work?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it came before the Appropriations Committee years and years ago when the appropriations were first made for the Bureau of Fisheries. We have already appropriated for this purpose, though, perhaps, not a sufficient amount, as Dr. Alsberg said. It was put in the Agricultural appropriation bill, as I remember, upon the motion of the Senator from Florida, and, of course, when once an item gets in the bill it never goes out.

Mr. HARRISON. But this money has not been appropriated this year.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the House left it out of the bill this year.

Mr. HARRISON. The House did?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Appropriations Committee, either in the sundry civil bill or the legislative bill, has carried an appropriation for this very work?

Mr. SMOOT. Not for the Agricultural Department; but we have for the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. HARRISON. To carry on this same work?

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely the same work.

Mr. HARRISON. How much was that appropriation?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not remember what increase was made; I can not say; but that is where the appropriation ought to be. It is conceded that we have a laboratory here in the Bureau of Fisheries, better than any in the world, and this is a duplication of work, done by two departments of our Government, and it ought to cease in one of the departments.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the same work should not be done by both departments, but the work should be carried on in some way, and it would seem to me that the Committee on Agriculture is the proper committee to handle this proposition, and it should be incorporated in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Why should we have the Bureau of Fisheries, then? Why not abolish it entirely?

Mr. HARRISON. As I just stated, I think there should be a single appropriation carried for this work; but I was of the opinion, and I am sure the Committee on Agriculture was, that the Department of Agriculture is doing this work in a very efficient manner.

Mr. SMOOT. They are not doing it in the same manner the Bureau of Fisheries is.

Mr. HARRISON. Is that letter all the information the Senator has on the subject?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but it is plenty, I think.

Mr. HARRISON. That is one man's view, and the Committee on Agriculture has had representatives of the department before it on this proposition.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If I caught the reading of the letter correctly, the subject matter of eggs and poultry was originally embraced in this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The shipping of eggs and poultry, and so forth?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Those two things have been eliminated from the amendment providing for shrimp, oysters, and so on. What particular bureau handles eggs and poultry now?

Mr. SMOOT. The Agricultural Department; but I think that appropriation is in another place.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Agriculture Department?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. I want to say to the Senator that this provision was first made, as I stated—I do not know whether the Senator was in the Chamber when I stated it or not——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; I was in the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. On a motion from the floor by the Senator from Florida, and at that time it went in the bill for last year, and I think poultry was included in the appropriation that was made at that time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Utah, it may be that eggs and poultry were carried under the Fisheries Bureau, and fish carried under the Agricultural Department.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not quite that bad, but it would not have been surprising if it had been done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I give notice that I shall offer this amendment in the Senate, and I shall take time to give the justification of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to congratulate the Senator from Utah on the spirit of economy he is showing and the great power he is exercising over the Senate in the matter of cutting out a small appropriation of $20,000 which is in the interest of developing new sources of food. That seems to be carrying out the spirit of the Senator, however, in sponsoring recently the alleged emergency tariff bill, which would increase the burdens upon the people of the country in the matter of increased cost of living, and at the same time fighting this bill, which proposes to spend $20,000 to develop new sources of food for the people of the country.

The Senator has read, in justification for striking this proposition out, a letter from some man by the name of Brown. I have looked into this, and I have not been able to find in the sundry civil bill where that provision is carried for this year. If it is not carried in that bill, and if the Senator can not show us that provision—I hope he can—then the Senate would be convinced that this appropriation is not made, and this work not provided for, and then the Senate should make adequate provision for it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have here the sundry civil act for this current year. The Bureau of Fisheries is a bureau in the Department of Commerce.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Here are two and a half pages of appropriations for fish stations throughout the country. Then here is an item:

Propagation of food fishes: For maintenance, equipment, and operations of fish-cultural stations, general propagation of food fishes and their distribution, including movement, maintenance, and repairs of cars, purchase of equipment and apparatus, contingent expenses, temporary labor, and not to exceed $10,000 for propagation and distribution of fresh-water mussels and the necessary expenses connected therewith, $400,000.

I do not remember just what the amount in the pending sundry civil bill is.

Mr. GRONNA. Is there any provision for chemical investigation in the bill? I think the Senator from Utah is somewhat confused over this matter. This item is for chemical investigations. I do not know that there is any such thing in the Bureau of Fisheries as a chemical department.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This provides for investigating the marketing. That surely is not a chemical matter. It provides for packing. That is not a chemical matter.

Mr. HARRISON. It is under the Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Markets.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But the whole fish proposition is under the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the fish proposition is under the Bureau of Fisheries, naturally so; but the proposition of marketing the fish and utilizing them for food purposes is under the Agricultural Department, and should be under that department.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Here is a $400,000 item in the sundry civil act.

Mr. HARRISON. Not for carrying out this idea.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; covering the propagation and the distribution.

Mr. HARRISON. That is to care for fish hatcheries throughout the country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; there are separate items for fish hatcheries.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This proposition in the Agricultural appropriation bill is for investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of fish; that is, after they are in a state for food. The proposition the Senator is referring to is for the transportation of live fish, which have been propagated, and are sent out for the purpose of stocking ponds and rivers throughout the country.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that Secretary Redfield has been many times before the Committee on Appropriations and has shown his samples of fish food, telling what it had saved to the American people, and all of the processes that were discovered by that department through the appropriations made in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not aware of that.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Mississippi doubts that there is an appropriation for this matter, I will read two or three pages of the bill for the next fiscal year.

Mr. HARRISON. I have looked for it, and I can not find it.

Mr. SMOOT. I can find it.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator can. It would save $20,000.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to call attention to the fact that the remarks I made were directed to what the Senator from Washington had said in reference to the Bureau of Fisheries. He has read nothing that substantiates the assertion that an appropriation was made for any such work as is provided for in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the work has been going on for a year.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If that can be found, it would be a different proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. One of the provisions in the sundry civil bill for the next fiscal year is as follows:

Propagation of food fishes: For maintenance, equipment, and operation of fish-cultural stations, general propagation of food fishes and their distribution, including movement, maintenance, and repairs of cars, purchase of equipment and apparatus, contingent expenses, temporary labor, and not to exceed $10,000 for propagation and distribution of fresh-water mussels, and necessary expenses connected therewith, $400,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think that covers the provision just stricken from the Agricultural appropriation bill? That provides—

For investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of fish, shrimp, oysters, and other shellfish, and for experimental shipments of these products, for the utilization of waste products, and the development of new sources of food.

It has nothing in the world to do with the item in the sundry civil bill, which merely applies to fish hatcheries and fish-cultural stations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken. There is a specific appropriation in the sundry civil bill for every fish station in the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the language quoted by the Senator from Utah is identical with the language which the Senator from Washington read, and that $400,000 is for the purpose of securing different varieties of fish, to propagate them in the waters of the United States. Every Senator is more or less familiar with the fact that requests come for different kinds of small fish to be sent from the Bureau of Fisheries, to put in ponds for the purpose of stocking and in the streams of the country. It has no reference whatever to preparing the fish after it is grown and ready for food, for the purpose of food.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This does not apply simply to fish raised for propagating through the Bureau of Fisheries; it applies to shellfish.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator means the provision in the Agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Of course, this applies to the food products.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It applies solely to the preparation of foodstuffs, whether raised as the result of the activities of the Bureau of Fisheries, which produces fish, or found on the seacoast.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is not the only appropriation that is made. I know what has been done by the Department of Commerce, as reported to us by the former Secretary of that department. But in this same bill we make a provision under the heading, "Inquiry respecting food fishes."

If the Senator from Georgia will listen, I would like to tell him about the other provision.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator knows what he is going to tell me, I would be glad to hear it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator knows—if he is ready to listen—the Senator will tell him what is in the bill. It provides:

For inquiry into the causes of the decrease of food fishes in the waters of the United States, and for investigation and experiments in respect to aquatic animals, plants, and waters, in the interest of fish culture and the fishery industries, including expenses of travel, $45,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think that embraces this?

Mr. SMOOT. It further provides:

For collection and compilation of statistics of the fisheries and the study of their methods and relations and the methods of preservation and utilization of fishery products, including compensation of temporary employees, travel, and preparation of reports, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, and all other necessary expenses in connection therewith, $20,000.

It provides for sponge fishes. We have plenty of fishes provided for.

Mr. HARRISON. In view of the statement of the Senator, which has convinced the Senate that that provision was not incorporated in the sundry civil bill, will he not allow us to reconsider and incorporate this provision?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to read a statement from the Agricultural Department to show what this money is used for. It is not being used for the purposes stated either by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] or the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. This statement is as follows:

The fish investigations of the Bureau of Chemistry have been under way for three or four years. In the act for 1920 the work was provided for under a separate item of $20,000, but in the preparation of the bill for 1921 the House committee combined the paragraph with the appropriation for poultry and egg investigations.

I shall not read more of that paragraph.

Mr. SMOOT. Read all of it.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well. It continues:

Since it is the evident desire of the House committee that the work relating to poultry and eggs be transferred to the Bureau of Markets, and as the department had already planned to carry this change into effect, there is no further need to make further provisions under the Bureau of Chemistry.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said.

Mr. GRONNA. It continues:

The Bureau of Markets, however, has no facilities at present for carrying on the fish work.

I am reading now with reference to poultry.

And, furthermore, it is not believed that they have the authority to do so, inasmuch as these investigations are limited to the investigation, handling, shipping, and storing of farm products.

The work which the Bureau of Chemistry is doing in improving methods of handling, packing, shipping, and storing fish is already yielding valuable results, and marked improvements have been made. Much work, however, remains to be done in developing the most practical, efficient, and economical methods for shipping and storing these highly perishable products. Small experimental laboratories have been opened at San Diego, Calif., and Pensacola, Fla.

This is an appropriation for an entirely different class of work. What the Senator from Utah has read has reference to the propagation of fish for the raising of fish. This is for the handling of fish, and it necessarily must be done under direction of the Bureau of Chemistry.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That has reference to the handling simply preparatory to the raising of fish. This provision has reference, without any regard to fish raised in the special ponds, to putting in shape all manner of fish whether caught out of the ocean or elsewhere, and the only place where we have the splendidly organized chemists for that purpose is in the Department of Agriculture, where they conduct the study and furnish the information.

Mr. GRONNA. The committee gave this very careful consideration, and I believe every member of the committee considers it a very important item. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the action was taken be reconsidered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I give notice that I shall offer the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word. I do not think there is a specific appropriation in the sundry civil bill probably embracing just the language of the bill here, but it seems to me that whatever we desire to do with reference to fish should be estimated for by the Department of Commerce and should be cared for under that department. It is not an agricultural product at all.

The Department of Commerce has been turning down estimates with reference to these very matters. They have been before the Appropriations Committee, I will not say with reference to this particular thing, but I have in mind one estimate that they sent down. They appeared before the Appropriations Committee this year and urged us very strongly to incorporate in the sundry civil bill an item for the conduct of demonstrations in fish cookery. I take it that that would come about as near agriculture as anyone would think in dealing with fish, yet that is an estimate sent down by the Department of Commerce to the Committee on Appropriations for inclusion in the sundry civil bill. There was another one for the conduct of demonstrations and instruction in the care of cheap and wholesome methods of preparing and cooking fish; that is, not carrying living fish around and distributing them, but wholesome methods of preparing and cooking fish.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator think that really belongs under the head of the Department of Commerce? Does it not belong under the head of farm economics, which is all in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is where it has been for two years anyhow. The estimates always come down that way, and I will say to the Senator if he will examine the Book of Estimates for several years back he will find that to be the case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So far as I have come in contact with the practical work, it has been in connection with the Agricultural Department.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will examine the Book of Estimates for several years back he will find these same estimates coming down, and I know they have been appearing before the Committee on Appropriations and urging this sort of appropriation for inclusion in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I said to the Senator was that where I have found any practical work being done along this line—I did not say appropriations, but I said work being done—it was under employees of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the former Secretary of Commerce not only told us what they had accomplished to save millions of dollars to the American people on account of the preparation of these fish, but he brought samples down and showed us what had been accomplished. They were there upon the table before the members of the Committee on Appropriations. He called attention to a fish that had been worthless, as far as food value was concerned, but made valuable through investigations. He not only called attention to it, but he brought samples to show us that he had succeeded in making such fish a food product, the value of which amounts to millions of dollars to the American people.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What Secretary did that?

Mr. SMOOT. Secretary Redfield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Secretary Redfield was an extreme advocate of the study of household economics, and they did a great deal of it under his administration, but the work that has been done in the past nine years has been in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. The Department of Agriculture never had an appropriation for this purpose until two years ago.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Department of Agriculture has been conducting studies and work in instruction in household economics and it has had appropriations for specialists in that line in connection with the State colleges of agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a far-fetched proposition, and this appropriation—if that statement be true—is a duplication of work.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No it is not far-fetched. It is very near home.

Mr. SMOOT. There was an appropriation made two years ago in this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What amendment is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A rejected amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that there is a total misapprehension of what the Secretary of Commerce is doing. He is charged with finding out and propagating that variety of fish that is good for food. Of course, the only way he could find it out was when he got a new variety, or when it was shown to be worthless, then by proper breeding and proper crossing he had to test it and in that way find the fish that was good for food. He did not go into the business of finding out about packing and storing and putting fish on the market. He was simply demonstrating that he had developed or discovered a fish that was good for food, and that was strictly within his line of work.

Mr. SMOOT. He used part of the appropriation made for fish to demonstrate that leather could be made out of alligator skin.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Of course; and therefore he recommends the raising of alligators for the skins. That is what he is there for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the reading of the bill be continued.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 47, line 24, to decrease the appropriation for carrying into effect the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1897, entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," etc., from "$38,000" to "$30,000."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to that item.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the amendment may go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 11, to strike out:

For the study and improvement of methods of dehydrating materials used for food, in cooperation with such persons, associations, or corporations as may be found necessary, and to disseminate information as to the value and suitability of such products for food, $23,500.

Mr. FRANCE rose.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask that this amendment go over?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that this can be taken up after other committee amendments have been agreed to. I ask that it go over.

Mr. FRANCE. I will say to the Senator that I am compelled to be away shortly, and I should like to offer my amendment if it is agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well; I have no objection.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to offer an amendment to the portion to be stricken out, and then I wish to say something in that connection. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 48, in line 16, in lieu of the amount printed in the House bill, $23,500, insert $100,000.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to explain very briefly why I have offered the amendment. In 1917 and 1918, when the committee was making a study of new sources of food supply and methods of preservation and transportation of food, it became very deeply interested in the subject of dehydration of food products, particularly fruits and vegetables. As a result of the study made by the committee and as the result of hearings upon the subject, the committee inserted in the bill of 1918 an item of $250,000 for the carrying on of educational and demonstrational work upon the subject of dehydration.

Representatives of the Department of Agriculture went to a group of gentlemen and explained to those gentlemen the importance of the subject and urged them to raise the money for the building of a plant to demonstrate the feasibility of this method of dehydration on a commercial scale. As a result of the representations of those gentlemen from the department, those who had been approached, among them being some very prominent bankers of Baltimore, consented to undertake to build a plant for demonstration of the feasibility of dehydration upon a commercial scale. These gentlemen were unwilling to go into the enterprise unless they could be assured, not by the division of dehydration but by the Department of Agriculture itself, that the department would stand back of them in the work. Upon the 27th of June, 1919, they were assured by the Department of Agriculture in a letter that the department was very deeply interested in the work and that they should proceed to organize a company for the building of a plant. This group of gentlemen—and I will say of them that they are men who had become very deeply interested in the question of food supplies during the war—then organized a million-dollar company and began the erection of a plant. There was no delay in the erection of the plant, except such natural delays as were necessary because of strikes and the labor and material supply conditions at that time, and the plant was completed within the year.

However, in April of 1920, after $750,000 had been expended by the company, the Government notified the gentlemen that no funds were available for the carrying on of the educational work which the Government had promised to carry on if the gentlemen would build the plant. Not only were they informed that no funds would be available for the carrying on of the work, but the Department of Agriculture was compelled to cancel orders which they had placed for the dehydrated products with which they were to make the demonstration and with which they were to carry on the educational campaign.

Now, the Department of Agriculture is very deeply interested in the question of dehydration, and after extensive laboratory studies this anhydrous method which is to be employed by the company was found to be superior to any method which has been used abroad. It is considered to be of the utmost importance to the farmers and to the producers of the country, and particularly to the producers of vegetables, fruits, and other perishable foodstuffs, as well as to the consumers, that the fund for demonstration work be appropriated. The Secretary of Agriculture has asked for $100,000. The amount is estimated for in the estimates to carry on educational work which, it seems to me, in view of all the circumstances, the Government is under a moral obligation to carry on.

These gentlemen are now in possession of a plant which cost them about $900,000, the investment in the plant having been made at the solicitation of the Government, and the Government is not in a position to carry on the educational work really necessary if the value of the methods of dehydration is to be demonstrated to the farmers and shippers of the country.

In view of this situation which I have attempted very briefly to call to the attention of the Senate, I hope that the chairman of the committee will consent to the amendment to the portion to be stricken out and that he will not insist upon the committee amendment. I feel, as a member of the committee, that this is a matter which the committee did not have an opportunity of looking into and upon which we were not informed at the time we reported favorably the committee amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland is a very valuable member of the Committee on Agriculture, but he did not happen to be present when this action was taken. Would not the Senator be satisfied if the amendment were disagreed to and the amount allowed by the other House left in the bill? I will say to the Senator, I do not believe that the committee would agree to an appropriation of $100,000. That, I think, is a larger amount than ought to be agreed to.

Mr. FRANCE. I will say to the Senator that when I spoke to him about this matter the other day I felt that $50,000 might be enough, but upon looking into the whole question it seems to me that what the Secretary of Agriculture has asked for, the sum of $100,000, is about the minimum, for it is very apparent that this new method could scarcely be demonstrated over the country with a lesser amount than would be available from an appropriation of $100,000. If $23,000 were appropriated, only about $2,000 of it would be available for demonstration purposes and for the carrying on of a campaign of education.

It seems to me that the Government is under moral obligations, in view of the representations made to the gentlemen to whom I have referred, to appropriate money for the carrying on of this demonstration work. Those gentlemen were of the opinion at the time they were persuaded to build the plant that $250,000, or a large portion thereof, would be available for carrying on the educational and demonstrational work.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. McNARY addressed the Chair.

Mr. FRANCE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In addition to the particular situation which the Senator from Maryland has in mind, does not the Senator think that this is splendid work for the Government to do?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I am most enthusiastic about the process of dehydration. It has been found, for example, that perishable vegetables and portions of beef which were not available under ordinary circumstances may be dehydrated and made into a dehydrated soup in Chicago which can be sold at a profit for a penny a plate in New York, thus utilizing materials which otherwise would be wasted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And dehydrated material can be kept almost indefinitely, can it not?

Mr. FRANCE. It can be kept indefinitely, and very large quantities of it can be transported in very small bulk and at very low cost compared with the cost of transportation in its original form.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to know why the committee struck this item out. It seems to me that it is an appropriation for a work which is very desirable to carry on until it is brought to perfection.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. FRANCE. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there is no doubt that excellent results are being accomplished through this process. It is not a new one, however; it is only new in the sense that it was not practiced prior to our entrance into the World War. Its feasibility has been demonstrated in several localities in the West. The item was stricken out by the committee on motion of one of the members. Very little was said about the subject. I think we all agree with the chairman of the committee that there should be a restoration of some part of the sum which has been estimated for by the department, though not the full sum. The amount which the House appropriated was $23,500; the department's estimate was $100,000. I think the chairman of the Agricultural Committee and its other members would be very willing, so far as I know their state of mind, to restore the provision carrying an appropriation of $50,000, which is half of the estimate, and a little more than double the amount carried by the House bill.

Mr. FRANCE. I should be very glad to see that amount incorporated in the bill, although I feel that $100,000 should be appropriated for the purpose.

This is the situation: A million-dollar plant has been built at Chicago, and if the Government should cooperate in carrying on a campaign of demonstration and should make dehydration a popular method of preserving food, and if, as a result of that, the company should make a success of its Chicago plant, it would then plan to erect plants in different parts of the country where vegetables of a perishable character are grown.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has called my attention to the fact that sweet potatoes may profitably be dehydrated. It is quite possible that the Chicago dehydration plant might be duplicated in the region where sweet potatoes are grown.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that through the advice of the Agricultural Department dehydration work has been begun and is going on profitably, as I am advised. It was first suggested, I think, about three years ago during the war, and I think has proven to be very successful. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, if it will be agreeable to him for the Senate to reinstate this item with an appropriation of $50,000?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, there was considerable opposition to this appropriation in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but since our meeting the committee has had information which I believe would warrant the committee asking that the amendment be disagreed to; but I will say to the Senator from Maryland and to the Senator from Georgia that they will endanger their purpose if they seek to make the appropriation larger than $50,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think that is all the Senator from Maryland insists upon.

Mr. GRONNA. I think, then, that the amendment ought to be disagreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear the chairman of the committee signify his purpose to have the committee amendment disagreed to and to indicate his favor of the appropriation carried by the bill as it came from the House. I should like to see a more liberal amount appropriated. I was favored only a few months ago with an opportunity to witness the process of dehydration of a great many fruits, vegetables, and other food products, and I was impressed with the limitless possibilities the process offered. Not only that, but it was represented to me, and apparently upon perfectly solid ground, that the process could be carried on by machinery costing comparatively little; indeed, those who were interested in the proposition had it in mind to construct dehydrating plants, inexpensive in character, to be set up by cooperative associations in the fruit-growing sections and in sections where vegetables are produced in considerable quantities or where fish are caught and placed upon the market. I was astonished at the perfect state of preservation of the flavor of fruits by the process which was exhibited to me. I thought it not at all unlikely that cooperative fruit associations and cooperative vegetable associations and similar associations could easily construct dehydrating plants which, as it seemed to me from the reports which were made, would not cost more than from five to ten thousand dollars to erect. I think that it would be an excellent thing if the Department of Agriculture carried on more experimentations with respect to the various processes that are about to be offered to the public, so that definite information could be given the public concerning the reliability of the processes, whether they will, in fact, accomplish the results which are promised, and otherwise to conduct operations which will demonstrate their great practicability.

Take the item of potatoes, for instance. Potatoes are a crop that can ordinarily be transported but a short distance. The soil of the Northwest is particularly adapted to the production of the potato, but it is next to impossible to transport the potatoes grown there because of weather conditions. They are not harvested in the State of Montana, for instance, until the cold season is upon us, and then it becomes impossible to transport them except in artificially heated cars, the expense and difficulty of which makes transportation practically prohibitive. They could be dehydrated and put upon the market, affording an abundant and perfectly palatable and wholesome food that would otherwise go to waste, and it would help both the producer and the consumer in a very marked degree. I am very glad to know that we shall have an appropriation of at least the amount carried in the House bill for this purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall not object to this appropriation; it would not do any good if I should object. There was a time, however, when experiments of this kind were eagerly carried on by private enterprise, and they were generally carried on successfully, much more successfully than they will be carried on under the prevailing species of paternalism which refers everything both established and to be established to the consideration of the Government plus an appropriation.

The dehydration of vegetables and fruits is not a new thing; private enterprise discovered the process and demonstrated its utility. Some years ago, I think during the war, an appropriation was made for this identical purpose. I then thought that, inasmuch as private capital was engaged in the business, the appropriation was unnecessary, but it was granted nevertheless.

We are getting to a point, Mr. President, when we expect the Department of Agriculture to take upon its shoulders at public expense the burden not only of things needed but of things supposed to be needed. Yesterday we considered one or two small appropriations intended to enable the Department of Agriculture to observe the behavior and other qualities of vegetables in transit and after arriving at the market. I have no doubt that this will mean an addition to our civil-service force and an addition to our permanent expenditures. Of course, I do not know how vegetables behave or how fruits behave when they are in course of transit; but I know how California lemons behave. After they leave the Pacific coast and reach Salt Lake City and Denver they command $6.50 a box; as they proceed eastward, however, their behavior is more modest, and by the time they reach the Atlantic coast they are readily obtainable at from $4.50 to $5 a box. If appropriations could investigate that behavior and correct it, I should feel more disposed to view with equanimity these constantly increasing and inflated appropriations; but if we leave the process of dehydration to private enterprise and to private capital it will be developed much more effectively and more satisfactorily, in my judgment, than by creating another little bureau in Washington and setting a lot of so-called scientists at work in the department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I was not present in the committee when this provision was stricken out, or I should have urged that it be retained, and that the appropriation be increased. It may be true that private enterprise discovered the process of dehydration, but it is also true that it was used to very little extent and only by a few large companies until the Department of Agriculture was authorized, a few years ago, to carry to the public information with reference to the process. There are now being built, as the Senator from Montana has said, machines to be used in this work. The Agricultural Department has helped substantially in bringing about a larger use of the process, and I believe an enormous saving of fruits and vegetables can be accomplished if knowledge is furnished to the people generally or to those who could use the process. I think it will be of great value and will result in a great saving, and it is one of the very activities in which it is proper for the Agricultural Department to engage. I am glad the chairman of the committee agrees that the House provision shall be restored, and I hope the amount will be substantially increased.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I request that this item be passed over for the day. I have some communications upon the subject which I should like an opportunity to examine with a view of laying them before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to passing over the item?

Mr. GRONNA. No; there is no objection to passing it over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over then.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. H. Overhue, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 15836) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

RECESS.

Mr. GRONNA. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 23, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 22, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., pastor of Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, to-day is great because yesterday was great. In grateful remembrance the past rises before us in a bold and in a distinct outline. How we thank Thee for the chivalry and traditions of our forefathers who carried a millennium in their breasts and a republic in their brains. They challenge our intellect and our hearts because they still minister unto our country and unto the world. This day may we reconsecrate ourselves to those fundamentals on which the sleepers of our free institutions must forever rest for their glory and for their perpetuity. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROGERS presented a conference report on the bill H. R. 15872, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, for printing under the rule.

ADDRESS OF MR. CAMPBELL OF KANSAS.

The SPEAKER. By special order of the House the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized to address the House for one hour.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, governments do not spring up; they are created. They do not endure; they may be perpetuated. Is history a picture gallery containing few originals and many copies? Do the people of former periods set the example for the people of periods that follow? Is there a destiny that shapes our ends? An independent and free people may be original, make and follow their own plans, and determine their own destiny. This hour is full of interest to those who are concerned with questions affecting the welfare of the people and the future of the Republic.

So it is not my purpose to-day to attempt to extend the fame or add to the renown of Washington. His fame is secure even to the earth's remotest bounds; his renown will grow as the centuries unfold the scroll of the ages. While men care for wisdom and honor and patriotism and appreciate the achievements of those who have served mankind, Washington will have a place in the minds and hearts of men in all countries and in all ages. [Applause.] I shall therefore take occasion on this anniversary of his birth to note the Government established by the fathers, the achievements made under it by the American people and its benefits to mankind, and at the same time consider the departures that have been made from its fundamental principles and purposes that endanger its perpetuity.

It is safe to say that the creation and adoption of the Constitution of the United States mark the world's greatest achievement in the art of self-government. The fathers under the leadership of Washington undertook the delicate and difficult task of creating a Government with such enduring principles as would make it susceptible of being perpetuated. It was provided that each citizen who lived under it should for all time be the political equal of every other citizen and that every man should have the opportunity of obtaining individual reward for individual effort. The Government created was of the people, by the people, and for the people. Its purposes and powers are simple, plain, and direct. It offers protection to the citizen in his right to life, liberty, property, and in the pursuit of his happiness. The powers granted are enumerated with such other powers as may naturally be implied from the written instrument.

These powers impose upon the Government created the duty of dealing with national and international questions affecting the life, the character, and the honor of the Republic and its people in their national and international relations. The right and duty of dealing with such questions as affect the individual citizen are left to the States and the smaller political subdivisions. Under this division of political authority and duty the people of the United States have through a hundred and thirty years enjoyed the freest and best government in all the world. Under the simple guaranties of government that make the individual secure in his natural rights the American citizen has been developed. He is self-reliant, resourceful, courageous, inventive, ambitious, patriotic, and appreciative of his heritage of freedom. There runs through his veins the best blood of every people north of the Mediterranean Sea. From the days of the fathers every generation has offered and freely given life and property for the maintenance of the honor, the preservation of the integrity, and the advancement of the glory of the Republic. It is ours. We must preserve it. We must not impose duties upon it that it can not perform. We must not ask the exercise of functions for which it was not created. We must not indulge in the hope of things from it that it can not give. We must not invite disappointments in the operation of its activities. It is enough that it shall always offer protection to all that man holds dear and shall continue to afford opportunities to the individual citizen to obtain rewards according to his individual ambitions and efforts.

The hope of winning individual reward has won for the American citizen the foremost place in every trade, in every business, in every industry, and in every profession. The humble but ambitious and industrious youth of our land have realized their highest hope and achieved their loftiest ambition. They have risen, step by step, from the job of the plainest laborer in the varied industries and occupations of our country to the highest executive positions in them. Our great physicians, financiers, captains of industry, ministers, lawyers, and statesmen have been recruited from the humble homes of the country. Inventions and discoveries, improvements in the arts and sciences that aid the health, add to life, and better the conditions of living are all the achievements of individuals seeking individual reward. A youth born in a cabin without a floor and without furniture, unprovided with a simple washbasin or the plainest infant's clothing, and amid all the indications of squalor and want, rose without the solicitude of a bureau or the aid of the Government to the Presidency of the Republic and left a greater name to history and mankind than any prince born to the purple in 30 centuries. [Applause.] Let not governmental solicitude or paternal care close to the ambitious youth of the future that door of opportunity.

Now, let me refer to some of the national assets acquired by the American people as a result of the individual efforts of the individual citizen. In advancing civilization westward from the sea forest and prairie yielded to individual industry and became fertile and fruitful fields. Hillside and valley were covered with flocks and herds; rivers were bridged; mountains were tunneled; and railroads crossed the continent eastward and westward and traversed it northward and southward, touching its harbors in all the waters that wash its remotest borders on every side. Mill and shop and factory followed the growth of population and supplied in abundance the commodities that met the demand for necessities and gratified the taste for luxuries among our people. The continent from sea to sea has been covered with prosperous and happy homes, with populous and rich cities, all busy with industry and commerce. While making these achievements our people have cultivated the accomplishments that enlarge and ennoble life. The school, the church, the college, the university, and the eleemosynary institution have kept pace with the growth and progress of the people.

It is safe to say that no other people at any other time or in any other country have made such rapid and splendid growth as has been made by the American people under the protection of the Constitution in all that makes a Nation powerful or a people great. But let me call attention to some startling facts that further emphasize our high relative position among the nations of the world: We have 6 per cent of the world's population; we have 7 per cent of the world's landed area, but we produce 20 per cent of the world's gold, 25 per cent of the world's wheat, 40 per cent of the world's iron and steel, 40 per cent of the world's lead, 40 per cent of the world's silver, 50 per cent of the world's zinc, 52 per cent of the world's coal, 60 per cent of the world's copper, 60 per cent of the world's cotton, 70 per cent of the world's oil, 75 per cent of the world's corn; we operate 40 per cent of the world's railroads, refine 80 per cent of the world's copper, and manufacture 85 per cent of the world's automobiles. These achievements are all monuments to individualism. But, again, when the nations allied to resist the advance and conquest of the greatest military power of ancient or modern times came to our Government and people for men, for food, for war materials, and for money to meet the demands of that awful hour we supplied the men, the food, the materials, and the money. The allied nations in their hour of need did not appeal to other countries with area and natural resources equal to ours. Vast empires rich in every variety of resources lacked development because they lacked a simple constitution that protected the lives, the liberties, the property, and the pursuits of the people while they worked for their own advancement and sought rewards for their own efforts. They came to us because our institutions and laws had given our people a chance to develop their resources, make themselves strong, and our country great, while the individual citizen worked for his own advancement.

Our men, though untrained in the art of warfare, had the individuality and ability necessary to meet the demands of that day on land and sea, under the sea, in the air, in the trenches, over the top, and in no man's land. They were all fit; they were the marvel of allied armies and civil populations. From our abundant resources food and materials went to military and civil populations in allied and neutral countries. We were able in two short years to raise forty billions of dollars—fifteen billions by taxing our people and twenty-five billions by the sale to them of certificates and bonds. No other people in all the annals of time were ever able to accomplish what was done by the American people in that short period. [Applause.] The accumulations of individualism and the achievements of the individual citizen gave our country a place of imperishable glory in the annals of mankind. [Applause.]

It is not necessary that I should enumerate further the marvelous achievements and the great progress of our people under the simple guaranties of the Constitution. It is enough to say in addition that they have advanced in manhood, in character, in fortune, and in fame while working out their own destinies under that great instrument.

This leads me to call attention to the important duties of this hour that require us to take our bearing and to ascertain how far we have already been beguiled to divert and multiply the activities of the Government in matters foreign to its original purposes, and to contemplate the effects of such departure on the life of the Republic and on the opportunities of the individual citizen.

It would be difficult to enumerate all the departments, bureaus, and commissions of the Government at Washington that have been created to exercise bureaucratic authority and paternal guardianship over the people in every part of the Republic. There is no activity, business, social, or domestic condition that is not the object of their supervision, their solicitude, or their authority. Over 690,000 civilian employees make up the army that oversees and directs the affairs of the people and assumes guardianship over them. Government agents and inspectors, exercising every variety of authority, are found on every Pullman out of and into Washington. Government reports on every subject from adenoids to rat traps fill the files of offices that cover acres of floor space in Washington. The mahogany and quarter-sawed oak office furniture already installed has cost many millions of dollars, and more is being constantly purchased.

If a yearling dies of foot-and-mouth disease on a farm in Kansas, the Government at Washington acts on the case. If a shote dies of the cholera in a hog lot in Iowa, the Government at Washington takes charge. If a weevil bores through a boll of cotton on a plantation in Texas, the Government at Washington is stirred to action. Nothing escapes the vigilant eye of the Government and its innumerable functionaries. If the price of one article goes up, let the Government take charge of the seller; if the price of another article goes down, let the Government take charge of the buyer. And thus the carnival of Government activities goes merrily on. Government control is assumed to be the remedy for every ill, and Government regulation the source of every good.

The people pay all the expenses. In some instances they pay it all through the Government at Washington. In the case of other activities they pay half through the Government at Washington and the other half through the governments of the States. But the people pay all the expenses of this complicated machinery of Government, that has its agents looking over the shoulders of every business man and directing the affairs of every citizen. This use of Government is not without deplorable precedent. The disappointment and despair of the people of France growing out of the delay in the inauguration of the millennium by the activities of the Government at Paris led to the French Revolution. The French Government at Paris undertook the control and the direction of everything that concerned the French people. It was assumed that the people could do nothing for themselves and that the Government could do everything. Failure, disappointment, and revolution followed.

The fathers embodied with rare wisdom those elements of strength and endurance which were essential if the Government was to be perpetuated through the ages. They avoided with the foresight of statesmen the things that lead to disappointment and discontent among the people. The fathers studied the experience of mankind in self-government. They studied the lessons and profited by the teachings of history. They sought and found the causes of failure by other peoples in the experiment of self-government. They did not wander into the realms of fancy. They were creating a Government for human beings whose nature has remained the same through all the centuries of time. They knew that the things that in other ages had invited criticism, provoked discontent, and resulted in disappointment and revolution would lead to the same end in future ages. They therefore created a Government adapted to the nature of man, a simple Government of laws to be enacted and enforced by the chosen representatives of a free people. The purpose of the Government was to protect them in their natural rights, and to enable them to meet their national and international duties and obligations.

The fathers did not contemplate a bureaucratic government at any time under the Constitution they gave us. It was not in the scheme of the fathers that the people should even be beguiled into using the Government at Washington for supervising or directing their purely personal, local, and domestic affairs. They knew that in a government of free people no man is big enough or wise enough or good enough to command another, his political equal, in what he may or may not do. It is fundamental that a free people may not be expected long to endure the annoyances, the vexations, the arbitrary regulations, the restrictions, or the disappointments that are incident to government by men acting as the functionaries of a central authority, directing the affairs of and exercising police powers over the people in the remotest parts of their territorial limits. Even the assurances of Government bureaus that the authority exercised over the liberty of the citizen is for his own good will not long beguile the citizen into a surrender of his right to live under a government of laws enacted by his authority and consent that merely protect him from injury by others and protect others from injury by him.

There is no word in the discussion by the fathers of the powers and duties of the Government they have handed down to us that leads to the belief that it was contemplated in their plan that the head of any department or the chief of any bureau or the agent of any commission should at any time make restrictions or arbitrary regulations affecting the life, liberty, property, or the pursuit of happiness of the citizen. Such restrictions upon the individual as were contemplated were to be made only by the States, and the lesser political subdivisions having immediate jurisdiction, and then only by the plain terms of statutes enacted by the representatives of the people. The rapidly growing and alarming tendency to-day is toward a centralization of all authority and power incident to government in Washington.

Let me call attention to some of the things the fathers have said upon this subject.

Chief Justice Marshall said:

The genius and character of the whole Government seems to be that its action is to be applied to all external concerns of the Nation and to those internal concerns which affect the States generally.

Madison said:

It is to be remembered that the General Government is not to be charged with the whole power of making and administering laws. Its jurisdiction is limited to certain enumerated objects which concern all the members of the Republic, but which are not to be attained by the separate provisions of any.

Jefferson said:

It is not by the consolidation or concentration of powers but by their distribution that good government is effected.

We have already ignored the admonition of the fathers; we have defied the laws of human nature, which never change; we have overlooked the lessons of history. All these have admonished us that only governments of simple laws can properly serve or long endure in a country of free people. We have already been led by the delusion that Government bureaus, exercising bureaucratic authority and police power not authorized by the terms or implied by the provisions of the Constitution, are better for the people than a Government that lays down rules of action in plain statutes. We have been lured by the promise that Government agents would lead the citizen by the hand into green pastures, beside still waters, into elysian fields, then on into the millenium. Already the citizen looks about him and finds himself in the midst of a fool's paradise, entirely surrounded by Government bureaus. So many of the numerous bureaus of the Government are exercising bureaucratic authority and police power that they meet the citizen everywhere he turns—in his fields, in his mills, in his mines, in his shops, in his factories, in his places of business, great and small—everywhere substituting the will and judgment of a Government agent for the will and judgment of the individual citizen. No matter in what direction the citizen may turn, lo, the agent of the Government is there to forbid or to command. Instead of remaining his protector, the Government has become his guardian.

This is a wide departure from the Government founded by the fathers. Let me call attention to some admonitions of publicists and to dangers recorded by historians that await in the direction in which we are rapidly going.

Fiske, in his Critical Period of American History, says:

If the day should ever arrive (which God forbid) when the people of the different parts of our country should allow their local affairs to be administered from Washington * * *, on that day the progressive political career of the American people will have come to an end, and the hopes that have been built upon it for the future happiness and prosperity of mankind will be wrecked forever.

This is at the same time a prophecy and a solemn warning.

De Tocqueville, the great commentator upon governments, in speaking of governmental conditions in France which immediately preceded the French Revolution says—I read excerpts:

They—

Referring to the government in Paris—

attempted a bureaucracy to administer, a democracy to govern. Collectively the nation was sovereign, individually citizens were confined in the closest dependence. Yet in the former were expected the virtues and experience of a free people, from the latter the qualities of a submissive servant. During the period which preceded the revolution a host of schemes for new societies and government were brought to light. These schemes sought various ends, but the means by which they were to be reached were invariably identical. All the schemers wanted to use the central government for the destruction of the existing system and the substitution of their new plan in its stead. They all assumed the rights and powers of the State ought to be unlimited, and that the only thing needed was to persuade it to use them aright. Mirabeau relied on the central power alone for the realization of his chimerical schemes.

Already in those days ministers were seized with a mania for seeing with their own eyes the details of everything and managing everything at Paris. The mania increased with time and practice. Not content with aiding the peasantry in times of distress, the Central Government undertook to teach them the art of growing by giving good advice and occasionally by resorting to compulsory methods. The Government distributed certain charitable donations among the various parishes on condition that the inhabitants should on their part make certain alms. A very extensive machinery was requisite before the Government could know everything and manage everything at Paris. The Government had suddenly changed all its agents and all its principles. Not a man but was affected, either in his rank or in his habits or in his business. No one knew whom to obey, where to apply, how to act. Every part of the nation being thus thrown off its level one final blow was enough to set the whole in motion and produce the greatest convulsion and the most terrible disorders that were ever witnessed.

This awful parallel in the experience of mankind should cause us to stop and look and listen. We have already departed from the Government of the fathers into the same governmental activities over the personal affairs of the people that led to the greatest calamity in human history—the French Revolution.

We should be admonished not to follow their steps further in the direction of discontent, disorder, disappointment, and the destruction of government. It is already said that thousands of liberty-loving citizens are leaving our country because they allege it is no longer a Government of free people. Our people, with a majority of many millions, have recently repudiated a once popular leader of a great party, who was acclaimed throughout the world as the most popular Executive on earth. The sudden revolt against that leadership was in large part due to the fact that Government agents throughout his administration appeared everywhere, exercising bureaucratic authority and police powers over the people. There was an emphatic protest against such bureaucratic authority even in time of war. It is not improbable that like protest will be repeated against one administration of our governmental affairs after another if such bureaucratic powers are continued with all the burdens and vexations incident to their exercise. It must not be forgotten or for a moment overlooked that the agent of a bureau is neither wiser nor better nor more concerned in the welfare of the individual over whom he exercises his authority than the individual himself. Governments that depend upon the confidence and affection of the whole people for their perpetuation should use great care in giving rise to hopes of benefits that Governments can not give.

There are many matters that require more than individual attention, matters in which cooperation is not only desirable but necessary. In all such matters the smaller political subdivisions and the States should be resorted to. In that way the portion of the public directly concerned are able to observe and intelligently determine whether those they have employed to do the particular things they require are rendering a service that justifies the continuance of the activity and the expense involved in carrying it on. It is a profound truth that that government is best that governs least.

The increase of governmental activities by the Government at Washington naturally leads here to brief comment on the question of taxation necessary for their support. The cost of the Government at Washington to-day runs into many billions. It must be paid by the people through taxation. No tax or system of taxation is popular. The taxgatherer has been unwelcome in all ages and in all countries. As the tax increases the criticism of the activity for which it is imposed is multiplied. Even benefits that are local are not always looked upon as compensation for the heavy tax imposed for their maintenance. When the benefits are remote criticism becomes emphatic protest. Many bureaus and commissions created to lighten the burdens or better the conditions of the people have only resulted in increasing the burden of taxation they bear. There is a warning in these words:

He has erected a multitude of new offices and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people and eat our substance.

This was one of the charges made by the fathers against George III in their Declaration of Independence.

The Government of the United States is of so great national and international importance to our people even unto the remotest township and hamlet of the Republic that its place in their affections should not be imperiled, nor should it be made the object of common criticism for failure to do for the citizen what the citizen alone can do for himself. A solemn responsibility and a great duty immediately confront us here. We are the chosen representatives of the American people, sworn to protect and defend the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic. It is time to begin the process of restoring a government of laws under the Constitution. It is time to limit the activities and reduce the expenses of Government at Washington. [Applause.] The process of eliminating every element of weakness with which the Government has been burdened and which now make it the object of criticism should be gradual but persistent, until we can again look upon it as the simple government of laws, given us by the fathers for the purpose of guaranteeing life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness by the people. We must give assurance to the hope that under God our children and their children from generation to generation may have in the centuries as they come and go the same guaranties and the same opportunities that we and our ancestors have enjoyed under the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

EXTENDING PROVISIONS OF THE FARM LOAN ACT TO PORTO RICO.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8038, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up from the Speaker's table a bill of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8038. An act to amend section 4 of an act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, extending its provisions to Porto Rico.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman asks unanimous consent to agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does not require unanimous consent to take it from the Speaker's table.

Mr. WINGO. How is it a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. It is a House bill with Senate amendments on the Speaker's table.

Mr. GARD. Was not the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, would not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and send the bill to conference? The Senate amendments involved proposals that have been rejected by the House Committee on Banking and Currency when it reported this bill. I have no desire to delay the carrying out of the judgment of the House, although it be contrary to my judgment. I was against the bill when the House reported it. The House limited the bill to the bank in Springfield, Mass., which they contend is the financial center where their business is done. The Senate goes further and authorizes any land bank in the United States to establish a branch in Porto Rico. There is the case pending in the Supreme Court involving the provisions of the farm-loan act. There are numerous applications for amendment to the law. I think the wiser course is to wait until the farm-loan system is tried out before you make any amendment to it. If the Senate amendments are immaterial they can be shown to be immaterial.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding from a hurried reading of the Senate amendments is that whereas the House bill provides that the bank at Springfield shall be the parent bank, so to speak, the Senate amendments provide that the parent bank of Porto Rico will be such a bank in the United States as may be designated by the board. That is my understanding.

Mr. GARRETT. By the Federal Land Bank Board here.

Mr. MONDELL. That is correct. It is a question whether it is going to be the Springfield bank or some other bank somewhere in the United States.

My understanding of the reason for that change is this: It seemed entirely possible that conditions might arise which would make it wise to have some other bank, rather than the Springfield bank, act in this capacity, and that could have been done by a change of designation by the Farm Loan Board without coming back to Congress.

Mr. WINGO. That is the very danger which men who voted for the original bill but who are now opposed to this assigned to me. I am not carrying out my own personal wishes. The gentleman knows that I am against the whole thing for the present, but gentlemen who supported the bill on both sides of the aisle have suggested to me that there is the danger that we were careful in the House bill to limit this branch bank to one Federal land bank, which the proponents of the bill themselves say is a bank in the territory where the Porto Ricans do their business, but under the Senate amendments this Farm Loan Board down here, willy-nilly, without consulting Congress, might transfer that liability from one Federal land bank to another one in another part of the United States. Congress is going to be in session at all times, and if that is going to be done I think that Congress could be trusted to act intelligently on the proposition. My objection goes to the procedure. We have 10 days yet before the end of the present session. Let the gentlemen follow the customary course, take up the bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. I shall not object to that. Then if they can not agree, gentlemen can come in and press for a concurrence in the Senate amendments. Why lay down and let the Senate have its way without any other protest at all?

Mr. McFADDEN. This is a very minor suggestion. The controlling thought in the committee, as I remember, when the bill was considered, was the fact that the Springfield bank was doing less business than any of the other of the farm-loan banks, and it was thought that because of that fact this branch should be a branch of the Springfield institution, and this designation in the amendment leaving this in charge of the Federal Farm Loan Board does not materially change the effect of the bill.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman may be right as to what governed him, but the gentleman will remember that that is one of the objections that I offered to putting it up there.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. WINGO. But whatever may have been the motive that governed different gentlemen, it is true that the judgment of the committee was against this, and the judgment of the committee being against it, the House should insist on a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana demands the regular order. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I shall object for the present. I shall not object to unanimous consent to sending it to conference.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, then I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8038, an act to amend section 4 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, extending its provisions to Porto Rico, with Senate amendments thereto, and to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to take from the Speaker's table and to concur in the Senate amendment to the bill which has just been reported.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I have not yielded the floor. Upon that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 83, noes 33.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 207, nays 104, not voting 117, as follows:

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present; the Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the motion.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, there are 20 minutes of debate on a side. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania going to discuss it?

Mr. McFADDEN. I did not intend to do so unless the gentleman wants some time.

Mr. WINGO. I am going to take the 20 minutes allowed under the rule.

Mr. CANNON. Why does not the gentleman take some time and explain it?

Mr. WINGO. Of course, the gentleman is entitled to first recognition; and I presume the House wants to know something in reference to the bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will wait and hear from the gentleman. I reserve my time.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, so those who came in may understand what the situation is, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN], chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, called from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8038 and moved that the House concur in the Senate amendments and moved the previous question. This bill is a bill to amend the Federal farm loan act so as to extend its provisions to the island of Porto Rico. As the bill passed the House, we authorized the Springfield, Mass., Federal farm land bank to establish a branch in Porto Rico. The Members are familiar with the arguments which were made in favor of the bill and the justification that was made for the passage of the bill through the House, limiting it to the one bank that took in the territory through which the people of Porto Rico did their business. My position is that we should have followed the customary and usual practice—that is, the gentleman ask that we disagree to the Senate amendments and send the bill to conference. I should not object to that. The conferees who would have been appointed by the Speaker would have been in favor of the Senate amendments. I believe that I can go before the conferees of the Senate and I can make them agree to an amendment to their own amendments. They are going to do more than they intend and more than this House intends. But I appreciate the dilemma of my friend from Pennsylvania—he is between two cross fires. His natural impulse is first to follow the customary course and next to be courteous to the Democrats on the committee; but the insistence of the leaders who are at the back urge him on to put things through, whether or not the House understood them or whether the House cared, so I do not blame my friend; but I can say to the leaders and Members that you will never gain any time by doing it. I have never yet on the floor of this House wasted any time on banking and currency matters, except to give what little information I had in my humble way. Now, gentlemen, let us see what is the position of the Committee on Banking and Currency and what is the position I have urged on that committee, even when my own constituents came before the committee and insisted on amendments which would extend the privilege of the farm loan act to people in the United States who did not now have it.

That position has been this, and this House has ratified it time and again, that we wait until this farm loan system is tried out and give it a chance, and amend it only as time and experience shows is necessary, and along safe and sane lines. Now, I can understand how men voted for the original House bill to authorize the Springfield bank to establish a branch down there, and I would be willing to do it if you would put some limitation on it that you remember I offered on the floor; but I tell you this Senate amendment on the bill as it is now will authorize the establishment of an original farm land bank in Porto Rico, and there is no lawyer on this floor who will sit down and study this language who will jeopardize his reputation as a lawyer who would say that is not true. That is what it is going to do. Now, why not vote down this proposition and send this bill to conference? Will we lose anything——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman analyze the language in the amendment so as to show what will result in the establishment of a new bank?

Mr. WINGO. If I have time I will; but there is the trouble. I have got some colleagues who want some time. You have voted to shut off debate in this House. I have given the gentleman the provision that he as a lawyer can analyze. I could not get a copy of the bill from the Clerk. I had to borrow one, and the gentleman may have the same trouble. That is the trouble in ramming this thing through——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the gentleman has reached a conclusion and announced that conclusion, and I ask him briefly for his reasons.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman listened to me. I think there are gentlemen sitting before me who know that I have already called your attention to one specific provision of the bill. I am not going to waste time by repeating it. You get the bill. You can read it while I am talking, and if you do not come to the conclusion that I have mentioned I will be surprised, for I have a great respect for the gentleman's legal ability. The gentlemen have not told us anything about it. The principal objection I have to the whole thing is that you have got this matter already up in the Supreme Court now, and do not know what they are going to decide. Men who bought these bonds in good faith are entitled to not have their security disturbed, and just as sure as you put through this wide-open measure authorizing the Federal land bank to establish a Porto Rican branch and attach it to an inland bank of the United States, whenever that land bank goes out or when the Farm Loan Board goes out and floats bonds in the future, bring it home to yourself that if you are going into the market to buy bonds what effect would that have on the security in your eye as a safe investment?

It is not fair to the farmers of America to jeopardize their security and depreciate it in the market in order to do your duty to Porto Rico. You can do your duty to Porto Rico by providing for a separate, independent system down there for which the Federal land banks of the United States are not responsible.

I will go further with you and say that I will not only be with you in recognizing our duty to Porto Rico but I will be willing for the Federal Treasury to put up all the stock and carry it all; but what I object to is to saddle this risk on all the farm loans and bonds of the United States, and making every farmer in the United States who has a loan in this bank directly responsible to the extent of his stock in that bank, which is 5 per cent of his loan, for the loans in Porto Rico.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. BEE. I am very much interested in that statement, because it is a controlling factor in my mind. I have not been able to tell how the stockholders in this country would be rendered liable.

Mr. WINGO. You can not get a loan at a farm loan bank unless you subscribe to 5 per cent of the capital stock through your local association. That is a stockholder's liability. It is true that it is a very remote one.

Mr. BEE. You mean the stockholders there?

Mr. WINGO. The farmer who borrows.

Mr. BEE. In the United States?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; in the United States.

Mr. BEE. He would be liable for the bad loans in Porto Rico?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly. Because these bonds are going to be issued, and if there is any deficit at all the whole system will be responsible. The gentleman says that is a remote possibility. I concede that is true; but, gentlemen, even if it is remote, it is a factor in the sale of bonds, is it not? I am talking to men some of whom have invested in bonds. Human nature is human nature. The point I am making is not antagonistic to Porto Rico.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I would suggest that the gentleman get time from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN], as I have little time.

Do not jeopardize the farm loan system in the United States. God knows it has enough tax on it now. Give the Porto Ricans a system if you want to do so; subsidize it out of the Federal Treasury if it is necessary to the Porto Ricans; but I object to depressing the farm loan bonds issued to take care of loans in Kansas, Michigan, Pennsylvania, or in Arkansas, in order to discharge our duties to the Porto Ricans and saddle that liability on the loans made by the farmers of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill was considered in the House and passed by an overwhelming majority, notwithstanding the strenuous opposition of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO]. There is not anything of danger in it; there is not anything in it that could possibly disparage the system in the United States. He speaks about the 5 per cent guaranty. The 5 per cent guaranty is created for the protection of the particular members of the particular association that a man joins. That in Porto Rico would, of course, be the guarantee for the Porto Ricans, and Porto Ricans alone. He says that to extend the act to Porto Rico would injuriously affect the bonds of the United States. I doubt that any such result can possibly occur.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will be very brief.

Mr. BEE. I understand the gentleman's statement that this 5 per cent guaranty would only apply to the members of the farm-loan bank in Porto Rico and not in the United States?

Mr. TOWNER. It would only apply to the particular association.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. JUUL. The bill states that no loan shall be made in the island of Porto Rico to run for a longer term than 20 years. Will the gentleman tell us whether that is an increase of the period of time or a decrease upon the grant already existing?

Mr. TOWNER. It is a decrease in the farm-loan system.

Mr. JUUL. What is the limit of time?

Mr. TOWNER. That is fixed by the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. JUUL. And this is a limitation?

Mr. TOWNER. This is a limitation.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. DEWALT. The gentleman from Arkansas referred to litigation now pending in the Supreme Court. Will the gentleman briefly state what that is, or whether that would affect this matter at all?

Mr. TOWNER. I presume it may affect it, as it might affect the whole system. The suit attacks the constitutionality of the law. But it would not affect this particular case any more than it would affect all the others. That is sufficient, I presume, for the purpose of this consideration.

Now, gentlemen, this bill passed the House; it went to the Senate with the provision in the bill that the branch bank in Porto Rico should report to the Springfield, Mass., regional bank. The Senate committee and the Senate thought that it would be better not to fix it permanently in Springfield, Mass., because it might be desirable to make them report to the New York bank or to the Charleston bank, or some other bank along the Atlantic coast. So they thought it better on the whole to leave it to the Farm Loan Board. I have not any doubt but that the first regional bank that will be selected will be the Springfield bank. However, it will then be subject to change.

It will be seen that this amendment which was made in the Senate was not a material amendment at all. I do not think it affects the bill injuriously in any way to agree to the Senate amendment. If it had been a material change, of course there would have been time or opportunity offered for a longer discussion, and I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] that it was with no object of cutting off discussion, except that we might have it discussed only as long as it would be just to do so. Forty minutes is long enough to discuss this proposition. We might have cut it off to a very few minutes by commencing the discussion and then moving the previous question and putting it to a vote.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] made a particular point that the passage of this bill would mean the establishment of another farm loan bank in Porto Rico. In answer to his question I want to read from the bill the following, from page 2, line 2:

Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Board and under such conditions as it may prescribe, the provisions of this act are extended to the island of Porto Rico; and such Federal land bank as may be designated by the Federal Farm Loan Board is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank at such point as the Federal Farm Loan Board may direct on the island of Porto Rico.

I can not for the life of me understand how the gentleman can construe that language to mean that the passage of this bill will establish another Federal farm loan bank. If the gentleman can make that language say any such thing, I can not understand how he succeeds in doing it.

Now, there was no attempt on the part of the chairman of the committee to force this legislation through. The reason why I proceeded in the manner I did is because we are in the closing days of Congress. This is an important measure to the people of Porto Rico, and if it was referred to conference, as the gentleman suggested, it would mean delay, because we all know the congested condition at the other end of the Capitol, and it simply means that the bill would be defeated if it were handled in the manner he suggests. The gentleman is opposed to the bill, and he is using these methods for the purpose of defeating the legislation.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE. I simply want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether, under the provisions of this bill, the proceeds received from the sale of these bonds in this country could be loaned in the island of Porto Rico to the people there, or does it provide that the people of Porto Rico must buy a certain number of bonds?

Mr. McFADDEN. The people of Porto Rico can buy, and the people of the United States can buy these bonds.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes. But will it be possible under this legislation to sell these farm loan bonds in this country and then use the proceeds derived from such sale and make loans in Porto Rico?

Mr. McFADDEN. If the Federal Farm Loan Board sees fit to do that it will.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McFADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that, apropos the gentleman's remark about the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], I was one of the most enthusiastic supporters of this bill and helped to get it out of committee and helped to get it before the House. I agree with the gentleman from Arkansas that this bill should go to conference. I do not think it will endanger the enactment of the bill. I think it will benefit the bill.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. As I understand this bill, the House and Senate have passed it, and the only change there is in it, compared with the way it existed before, is that instead of the land bank in Massachusetts being in control, the Federal Board is in control?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes. The Federal Board, in spite of this, may designate the Springfield bank, or the Baltimore bank, or any one of the 12 Federal land banks.

Mr. JUUL. And we have already practically passed the bill, with the exception of that feature?

Mr. McFADDEN. Exactly. The gentleman can easily understand that if we send this bill to conference the conferees will have very little to stand on in conference in exacting the things that the gentlemen propose.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BRAND. Does the gentleman entertain the same opinion as Judge TOWNER does in regard to liability in case of a loss on these loans, to-wit, that no one but people who belong to the institution in Porto Rico are in anywise responsible for losses that may be sustained, if any?

Mr. McFADDEN. That applies to the 5 per cent stock subscription?

Mr. BRAND. No. Would the farmers of this country not in the system be responsible as taxpayers for any loss on account of the operations of the branch bank in Porto Rico? If any loss occurs——

Mr. McFADDEN. Only in case of the failure of the farm loan system, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. BEE. Every other farm loan bank is responsible and liable, is it?

Mr. McFADDEN. You are liable on account of your stock subscription.

Mr. BEE. Everybody is now.

Mr. McFADDEN. We are extending to the Porto Ricans the same privilege, the right to borrow up to $5,000 for a period of 20 years.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. The language at the top of page 2 reads:

Any Federal bank may establish branches within the land bank district.

Is that for the purpose of establishing a branch bank? What is the object in establishing branch banks?

Mr. McFADDEN. To accommodate borrowers, the farmers who are borrowing.

Mr. HAUGEN. Would it not entail considerable expense?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think so. All the expense has to be paid under the law by them.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it necessary for the establishment of these banks?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes. It may be in some instances to accommodate farmers who want to borrow.

Mr. HAUGEN. For what reason? I am speaking about branch banks. Why is it necessary to establish branch banks? Is it to pile up the expenses?

Mr. McFADDEN. No. The object is to accommodate the borrowers in the various localities.

Mr. HAUGEN. Are they not being accommodated by the present branch bank?

Mr. McFADDEN. In some instances they are not in Porto Rico, and this bill provides for that.

Mr. HAUGEN. How many branch banks are contemplated?

Mr. McFADDEN. One in Porto Rico.

Mr. HAUGEN. It says:

Any land bank may establish branches within the land bank district.

Does this apply only to Porto Rico?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say that this bill is a specific bill for the relief of the situation in Porto Rico.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman contend that it limits it to one branch bank, and no more?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is limited to one branch and one bank.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman agree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] that if the Porto Rico branch bank should fail and there is a loss it would only fall on the stockholders of the branch bank in Porto Rico, and not on the farm borrowers in Kansas or any other district in the United States?

Mr. McFADDEN. It would fall on the stockholders of the farm loan system.

Mr. WINGO. The entire system?

Mr. McFADDEN. The entire system, as I understand.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is in error in his conclusion, and I felt sure that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would say that.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman from Iowa is not in error. The 5 per cent which is paid into the guaranty fund does not extend beyond the immediate association.

Mr. WINGO. With all respect for the gentleman's knowledge—and I have great respect for it—I candidly assure the gentleman that he is in error.

Mr. TOWNER. I candidly assure the gentleman from Arkansas that he is in error regarding the matter. The guaranty of the 5 per cent only extends to the immediate association which is organized when these farm loan associations are organized. The only possible loss that could occur would be for the failure of some of the bonds that are issued, or something of that kind. That, of course, would be equally borne by all the people of the United States; but no loss could occur so far as the 5 per cent guaranty fund is concerned, outside of Porto Rico. That certainly is true.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is speaking about one thing and I am talking about another. I am talking about the stock liability.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman in his remarks said the 5 per cent contribution which must be subscribed by the men when they enter the system——

Mr. WINGO. Sure; and I remember very distinctly that I made a fight to limit the act when it was written—to limit it to the gentleman's viewpoint—but I lost out, and I know that the stock liability extends to every stockholder to the extent of his stock.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman is still talking about stock liability.

Mr. WINGO. I am talking about the 5 per cent subscription. What is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. TOWNER. About the liability these men take with regard to guaranteeing the loans in their own association.

Mr. WINGO. I do not know anything about that fund. The only thing I know anything about is the 5 per cent stock subscription. I never heard of the other.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I have only a few minutes. I will yield if the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. STEAGALL. Is not this the fact, that in case of a loss it will fall, first, on the farmers and be paid out of their 5 per cent liability? If not, it will then fall on the other 12 loan banks to make it good, and if they can not pay it, the bondholders who hold the bonds would be the folks who would lose the money?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is practically correct.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understood the gentleman to say that the establishment of branch banks is limited to one, to Porto Rico?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is, under this bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think the gentleman is in error about it. Any land bank may establish branches, not one, but "branches," in the plural.

Mr. McFADDEN. With the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board?

Mr. HAUGEN. Exactly, with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board; so with the approval of the board they may establish a thousand or any number.

Mr. McFADDEN. I can not imagine the Farm Loan Board doing that in Porto Rico. This is a specific bill for the relief of the farmers in this island.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am talking about the language of the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. That is in the original bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is the original bill I was talking about, as to the number of branch banks that could be established.

Mr. TOWNER. What has been done with regard to the Porto Rican matter is entirely different from that and outside of that. That is the original law now, and it is not changed at all in the slightest particular.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is the law now that they may establish any number of branches.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; that is the exact language of the law.

Mr. WINGO. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not taking a position against this because I oppose the bill. I was one of the most enthusiastic supporters of this measure. I am opposed to it because this amendment of the Senate gives the Federal Farm Loan Board the right to attach Porto Rico to any land district it sees fit, anywhere in the United States, in the language of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. It not only does that, but it gives them the right, having first attached it to Springfield, then to attach it to Baltimore, and having left it there for a year, then to attach it to Columbia, and having left it there for a year, to attach it to the Pacific coast. The result is that when you come to determine where the liability is for the Porto Rican bonds, for the Porto Rican bank, you will need a committee to send for persons and papers to ascertain to what division it was attached when the bonds were issued. Now, if this House thinks that it should go to Springfield, which was the place stated in the hearings to be most convenient and suitable, and the bank that had the least business and therefore needed some extension, and which is the place where we fixed it, I am in favor of leaving it where this House fixed it, and have it determined once for all what bank is primarily liable for the bonds of that institution.

Something has been said about the liability. I think some gentlemen here need to know more about the farm loan act. When a man borrows a thousand dollars from a Federal land bank, he immediately out of that thousand dollars pays $50 to the local association, of which he is a member, for stock therein. That $50 is invested by that association in the stock of the Federal farm loan bank from which the loan is obtained. And when the man finishes paying his loan he gets his money back with which he is credited. Meanwhile he gets his part of the dividends on that stock credited on his interest account, and when he finishes paying his loan, the last thing that is done is to credit him on his loan with the $50 which he has paid into the stock of the Federal farm loan bank. Now, you say that because the bank is liable to lose money it will not hurt the stockholders. It hurts the stockholder directly, and it lessens the investment he made in the stock of the bank. Whenever you render anything uncertain, as you render it uncertain by switching this bank from one place to another, you render the bonds less desirable in the power to do business as it was done before. The beginning of the abdication of power in this Congress to determine what shall constitute the district in which these outlying provinces are to be embraced is the beginning of the turning over of autocratic power to the Federal Farm Loan Board and putting it where it will render uncertain and unsafe many of the investments in bonds, and it will depreciate the value of the stock of the owners in the farm-loan system of this country.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. BEE. What I have not been able to understand is the sanctity of this Springfield bank.

Mr. STEVENSON. The sanctity of the Springfield bank is shown in the hearings. It is shown there that the transportation trade and business relations was between Springfield and the district of Porto Rico, and that is why they ask to be put there. In addition to that, the smallest amount of business was being done by the Springfield bank, and it was the only one that had not attained the basis that it was supposed to, and therefore we placed it in this territory.

Mr. DEWALT. Have they a branch in either Hawaii or the Philippines?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; this was done by special statute, and when we do it we ought to say what bank it shall be attached to. This is an attempt to take it away from us and give it to the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. WINGO was recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Before the gentleman begins his remarks I would like to have him give us the reason or the motive in making this change, and what is the object of the Senate committee amendments?

Mr. WINGO. I can not answer all of the question without violating the rules of the House. There is nothing very serious about it. I should not take the time of the House any further except for two reasons: First, to answer the error into which the gentleman from Iowa has fallen, and also to correct that error in the RECORD, because a great many people have the same erroneous idea.

I take issue with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] with a great deal of diffidence, because I have great respect not alone for his character but also for his ability as a lawyer. The gentleman is in error about the stock liability, and if it were an ordinary statute I would not say it with so much seriousness, but I remember distinctly that my political fortunes were wound up in that question in one campaign and I made the fight of my life to keep out the very stock liability that is in the act.

What is it? Under the law local farm associations are formed. No man can get a loan unless he is a member of the local association. No man can belong to an association unless he is a stockholder and owns capital stock. The capital stock of the local associations is divided into $5 shares. For every hundred dollars borrowed by a farmer he must own one share of stock. When he wants a loan from the farm loan bank his association has to subscribe to a like amount of stock of the Federal land bank.

Section 8 of the law provides:

Any person desiring to borrow on farm land mortgage through a national farm loan association shall make application for membership and shall subscribe for shares of stock in such farm loan association to an amount equal to 5 per cent of the face of the desired loan, said subscription to be paid in cash upon the granting of the loan.

Section 7 of the law provides:

Whenever any national farm loan association shall desire to secure for any member a loan on first mortgage from the Federal land bank of its district it shall subscribe for capital stock of said land bank to the amount of 5 per cent of such loan, such subscription to be paid in cash upon the granting of the loan by said land bank.

Section 9 of the law provides:

Shareholders of every national farm loan association shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such association to the extent of the amount of stock owned by them at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount paid in and represented by their shares.

That is a customary stock liability which every lawyer will easily comprehend. What is the liability of the farm loan association to the land bank? It is identical. What is the liability of each of the Federal land banks? Section 21 provides:

Every Federal land bank issuing farm loan bonds shall be primarily liable therefor, and shall also be liable, upon presentation of farm loan bond coupons, for interest payments due upon any farm loan bonds issued by other Federal land banks and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of such other land banks; and every such bank shall likewise be liable for such portion of the principal of farm loan bonds so issued as shall not be paid after the assets of any such other land banks shall have been liquidated and distributed: Provided, That such losses, if any, either of interest or of principal, shall be assessed by the Federal Farm Loan Board against solvent land banks liable therefor in proportion to the amount of farm loan bonds which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment.

There can be no dispute about this stock liability, can there? It is so clear that it does not require a lawyer to see it. The point I make is this, that we are in error when we favor joining Porto Rico business to the United States. If Porto Rico business proves unprofitable, if there is a loss by the Federal loan bank that issues bonds and furnishes money for the loans in Porto Rico and the Federal land bank should default it could not fail; why? Because under the law the Federal Loan Board can call on every other Federal land bank in the proportion provided in the statute to make the losses good. Each land bank calls on its stockholders, the local associations, for their proportions of the liability, and the association calls on each of its stockholders, the farm borrowers, to make good the loss; so you see that in the last analysis each borrower is liable under the law to lose not only the amount paid in for his stock but also may be assessed in addition thereto in a like amount in order to make good losses.

So if you pass this law each land bank, and in turn each local association, and in turn each borrower, through stock liability is liable to the extent of 10 per cent of the amount of his loan if it became necessary to make good any loss in Porto Rico. Gentlemen tell me that that will not depress the market for farm loan bonds. Well, if investors still retain common horse sense at all it will. That is the thing against which I protest. In any event, this bill should go to conference.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, in answer to what was said by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] there is nothing in this bill to indicate that the Springfield bank will not be designated. It simply gives the right to designate to the Farm Loan Board. I believe, as a matter of fact, that the Farm Loan Board intends to designate the Springfield bank, but it reserves to them the right to say which bank they shall designate.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to secure a copy of the law, but gentlemen will understand that under this system the farmers must first make an effective association among themselves before they can obtain their loans.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is true of the system as it operates in this country, but is it not true that under this bill loans are authorized to be made directly to the farmers?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. The thing which this Congress without hesitation refused to allow in the original bill, as it applies to the farmers of this country?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; but the only effect of that is to strengthen rather than to weaken it, for that reason. The guaranty fund then becomes effective for all the loans made in the island. The gentleman understands that the island is small; it is not much larger than our smallest States. It is different from the large region or section that is under the regional banks. A branch bank in Porto Rico can take care of all of the conditions that exist there. The guaranty which they must make in Porto Rico of 5 per cent will go to support all of the losses that may occur within the island of Porto Rico, and they are not liable for all losses, nor are we liable to them on account of losses made. The gentleman should understand that this guaranty has not anything whatever to do with the stock and bond question. The 5 per cent guaranty is made for the purpose of supporting or sustaining or guaranteeing against losses that are made in each particular association by reason of a failure to pay the loans when due.

Mr. STEVENSON. Suppose the association which puts that money right into stock of the farm loan banks loses its stock, how does it respond to its stockholders?

Mr. TOWNER. It has the money; it has the guaranty.

Mr. STEVENSON. But if it loses it, what becomes of it?

Mr. TOWNER. It can not lose it when it is deposited in the Federal banking system. That is the supporting point; that is the real guaranty against losses in the whole system.

Under the provisions of the farm loan act 10 or more farmers unite to form a farm loan association. They each make application for a farm loan, not more than $10,000 and not less than $100, and in the aggregate not more than $20,000. Five per cent must be taken from each loan and placed with the land bank under whose jurisdiction the association is formed. Stock is issued for this amount and held as collateral security for each and all of said loans. That is the manner in which the 5 per cent is held as a guaranty, and the guaranty does not extend beyond the loans in each particular association.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 77, noes 35.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 214, nays 76, not voting 138, as follows:

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15441) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ordered printed under the rule.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Washington, the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, has just handed in a conference report, and I desire to make this inquiry: The House conferees have adopted a new bill in place of the bill which passed the House. I understand it will be treated as an amendment notwithstanding it is a new bill, and that the Senate bill has several sections. Now, I desire to know, will we have the right in the House, when the conference report is called up, to secure a separate vote on the different sections, or will it be treated as one amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will be upon agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SABATH. Under the rules will we be precluded from asking for a separate vote on the different sections?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will permit, the conference report is an amendment to the Senate amendment and naturally goes as one amendment, to be adopted by the House and voted up or down.

Mr. SABATH. The entire bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think so.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill in order to proceed further in the consideration of the Senate amendments submitted in that report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 42, line 10, strike out "$109,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$184,600."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment. This will merely restore the House total which the Senate increased by reason of the amendment which was voted down by the House on Saturday.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 49, at the top of the page, insert:
"That the provision in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, authorizing the expenditure of not exceeding $50,000 from unexpended Osage tribal funds heretofore appropriated for construction of a fireproof office building for Osage Agency is hereby amended to provide that not exceeding $100,000 of such unexpended Osage tribal funds may be used in the construction of such fireproof building, including the removal of the present office building and rearrangement of the interior of same for employees' quarters, said amount to be immediately available."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment. This amendment increases by $50,000 the amount which the House allowed for the construction of the office building for the Osage Indians. The increase is necessary to complete the building and it will come out of the tribal funds and not from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the gentleman if he has made any investigation to be able to say that he knows that this additional amount is required?

Mr. ELSTON. Hearings were had before the subcommittee of the House, and they tended to show that $100,000 was absolutely needed. It appears, however, that the limit of cost had previously been fixed by act of Congress at $50,000, and it seemed advisable, by reason of the limited jurisdiction of the appropriation subcommittee, to leave the item out of the bill. The Senate had hearings, and it appears that the preparations for building were completed to such a stage that $100,000 would be needed.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman recalls that when the committee visited the Osage Agency last year there was no evidence anywhere that any building had been started for that purpose. If it has commenced, it must have commenced since then. While I have no particular objection to the increase of this item, due to the fact that there is a tremendous business activity there to be handled, and the quarters they were operating in were really very inadequate, in my judgment, this is an item like all the others—legislation—and should have been thoroughly investigated before this action was taken. I do not propose to offer any serious objection to its going through, but I am calling attention again to the fact that this is an increase of appropriation without proper investigation on the part of anyone.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, after line 22, insert: "That the provisions contained in the Indian appropriation act approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L., 983), authorizing the use of $5,000 of Osage tribal funds for appraisement of lands in Osage County, Okla., for the purpose of adjustment and settlement of claims for or on behalf of any Osage Indian with respect to assessments theretofore or thereafter made, is hereby amended to provide that an additional sum of not exceeding $17,500 is hereby appropriated from Osage tribal funds for the purpose of employing expert accountants, clerks, and special attorneys, under the direction of the Department of Justice, in pending suits in the Federal courts on behalf of Osage Indians in connection with such assessments, such amounts, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment; and I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the House, let me say that the surplus lands of the Osage Indians are taxable. It was contended by the members of the Osage Tribe that their lands were assessed too high some three or four years ago. A suit was brought in the Federal court in Oklahoma and carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court upheld the contention of the Osages to the effect that the lands were assessed too high. But they are taxable. Now, this amendment is for the purpose of allowing an additional amount of money out of the Osage funds to insure a correct assessment, or to employ accountants and others to see that correct and fair assessments are made. And I want to say that after this amendment was placed on this bill, which, I understand, was at the suggestion of the Interior Department, as a Senate amendment, the chief of the Osages, with certain members of his council, who are here in the city, together with the attorney for the Osage Tribe and with other prominent members of the Osage Tribe, came to us and insisted that this was a proper amendment, payable out of the Osage funds, and that it ought to be allowed. And for that reason the motion was made to recede and concur in the amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to be the policy that, inasmuch as the Osages have plenty of money and plenty of opportunity to get more, anything that is suggested that will spend more of their money is perfectly right to place in these various items.

Now, what the gentleman said is undoubtedly true. It may be so. But to my mind this is just a contention of increasing the amount of work that people can be employed in.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield? The purpose of this amendment is to save them money.

Mr. SNYDER. I know. That is the proposition that is brought to all committees for the purpose of increasing appropriations, and increase the number of people on the pay roll. Now, this may be all right, but I do not know anything about it. I have had no opportunity to investigate it. No member upon the legislative committee has had any opportunity to investigate it, either, and therefore I am opposed to it. I do not think it is a proper item to be in this bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will yield for a moment further, let me say that the amount the Osages would have to pay if they had not brought this to the Supreme Court was a very large amount. It ran up toward $100,000. I do not have in mind now the exact figures, but this is to correct that excessive assessment and to have it reduced. It is in the interest of the Osages, and they want it.

Mr. SNYDER. What I want to get before the membership of this House is the very statement I made in the beginning, that because the Osages have money very little care is being used with the expenditure of that money so far as it can be used to increase buildings and size of equipment, so that more people can be employed to use their money. That is exactly what this item is intended to do here.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to say that this matter grew out of the fact that there is a contention between Osage County and the tribe as to these valuations. The county has already made arrangements to hire experts to make a survey, and so the Indians think it necessary to be made on their behalf.

Mr. SNYDER. This is the usual thing. You will notice these Osage items here doubled over last year, because the appropriation that was made last year was not used, with the understanding that they would come this year and get another appropriation and increase the old one and go ahead. And next year they will come in for another for the same purpose, not having spent any of the money so far appropriated.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will say to the gentleman from New York that we did not allow a single dollar except what the Osages themselves asked for.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman knows the Osage Council comes down here, and anything that the Interior Department wants is a very simple matter to get the Osages to agree to.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, this item has been explained as an item necessary for the Osages and their benefit. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 92, page 46, line 21, insert: "For dining hall and equipment, $40,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment. And I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, this is for a dining hall and equipment for the Cherokee Training School. This is the only school of the kind in the United States, so far as I know. It is for the orphan Indian children. The original building was erected in 1875, having a capacity of some 65 or 70. I refer to the dining-room capacity and the dormitory capacity. Some 10 years ago the Government of the United States bought this plant and property. Since that time an additional dormitory has been built, which increased the capacity of this school from 65 to 70, so that last year it had a reported capacity of 155. Since then, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, another dormitory has been provided, for which a foundation has been built, payable out of the remaining funds of the Cherokee Nation, amounting to about $63,000. When the dormitory now in the course of construction is erected the capacity of this school will be about 250. This will be completed by September, 1921. Now, we have a dining-room capacity, as I say, of about 60 or 70, so that when this new dormitory now in the course of construction is completed there will be about 250 in this school, with the dining-room capacity of only 60 or 70. Hence, there is very urgent need for this additional dining room at this school.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 93: On page 46, line 22, strike out "$53,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$93,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment. It merely corrects the total to correspond with the additional amount.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 94: Page 50, line 8, insert "for heating plant, $40,000; for boys' dormitory, $70,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that the House recede and concur with an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 94, and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "for heating plant, $40,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the committee of conference did not see its way clear to agree to both of these items. But the one they have agreed to recommend favorably is of the utmost importance to this school.

This heating plant was installed many years ago, when the number of buildings to be heated was much fewer than now. It has done good service in its time, but it is now worn out by long use. I know of my own personal knowledge that the heating plant should be replaced, because I have been at the school during the inclement portion of the year, in the early spring, and the rooms where the children were studying and the dormitories and classrooms were all too cold for comfort, and too cold for the children to live in.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur with the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur with the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 95: Page 50, line 9, strike out "$147,400" and insert in lieu thereof "$257,400."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and agree to the same with the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 95 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$187,400."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, this merely corrects the total, to correspond with the item stricken out and the additional items which have been placed in, which would decrease the Senate total and increase the House total.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 101, page 52, after line 21, insert "Texas":
"For support of Alabama and Coushatta Indians in Polk County, Tex., $5,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and concur. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, this is a band of Indians in my State and district, numbering about 213. They are Alabama Indians who moved to Texas at a very early date. They are practically a deserving band, and particularly in need of some help at this time, and I hope that the amendment will be adopted. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, this is the most indefensible amendment in the bill. Here it is proposed to pick up a band of Indians who have no possible claim upon anybody, possibly, outside of the State of Texas. During the six years that I have been connected with Indian affairs periodically this item has been brought to the committee by one or two Members from the State of Texas. There is absolutely no justification for it, except that the United States is asked to start out and take over bands that have no call upon it whatever, bands that have been released for more than a hundred years. That is true of this band of Indians in Polk County, Tex. They are as well off in many instances as many of the Indians are in other sections of the country now.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Do not these Indians have lands themselves?

Mr. SNYDER. They have.

Mr. CARTER. And has not the State of Texas already appropriated money for them?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. How much of an appropriation has been made for these Indians, if the gentleman knows? How much is it expected they will spend for them with this $5,000, which is nothing else than a camouflage for charity?

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman has it right. A few years ago, through the energy of some Members from Florida, we took on a band of Seminoles, and we are now regularly appropriating for those Indians, who have been discharged from the Government for over a hundred years. Now they come here with a proposition from the State of Texas. If there is one thing in this bill that is unjustifiable and that ought to go out, and that would not be here except by this amendment and which could not get into the Indian bill by any other method, it is this; and if the membership of this House has any confidence at all in its Committee on Indian Affairs it ought to go out by a vote.

Mr. ELSTON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, about two years ago Congress appropriated $5,000 to build a school for these Indians. Therefore this is not the first effort which has been made on their behalf. That school is about to be started for these Indians by the Indian Bureau. They are a band known as one of the lost tribes. They have never had any of the gratuities of the Government. The Bureau of Indian Affairs have recommended them as particularly deserving, and have recommended an appropriation of something like $120,000 for them.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman point out to the House anywhere in any printed record where anything has been recommended for these Indians by the Indian Bureau?

Mr. BRIGGS. Certainly.

Mr. SNYDER. I mean anything besides the school.

Mr. BRIGGS. In 1918, in the hearings on the Indian appropriation bill, the recommendation was made strongly in behalf of these Indians not only by the Indian Commissioner but by the investigator who went down there and made a personal investigation and a long detailed report about these Indians.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman will not find anything in the Indian appropriation bill except for that school.

Mr. BRIGGS. As a result of that investigation the Commissioner of Indian Affairs urged three things. He urged that they be given an appropriation for education, that they be given stock and agricultural equipment, and that they be given an appropriation for the purchase of additional land to give them an opportunity to earn their livelihood, and a better opportunity for developing and sustaining themselves. There is no request in this bill for any land. It simply asks a small appropriation of $5,000 to give these Indians an opportunity to help sustain themselves.

Mr. WALSH. Does the State of Texas appropriate anything for these Indians?

Mr. BRIGGS. The State of Texas gave them about 1,100 acres of land.

Mr. WALSH. Does it appropriate anything for their support?

Mr. BRIGGS. I think the State of Texas has made a small appropriation for them.

Mr. WALSH. And this is simply to transfer that burden to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BRIGGS. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think we should make an appropriation to buy upright pianos for them?

Mr. BRIGGS. They are not asking for pianos, but for a school, which this Government is constructing, and for which provision has been made, and for an opportunity to get instruction to support and sustain themselves.

Mr. ELSTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have always been under the apprehension that one of the main reasons why the Government appropriated money for the support of the Indians was because in the course of the progress of civilization the whites had taken away from the Indians the lands which the Indians formerly owned. Of course, that is not true of lands in the State of Texas, so far as the General Government is concerned. We never took any lands away from the Indians in Texas. The General Government has never owned any lands in Texas. I do not know just what the plea is here why we should now contribute to the support of these Indians, when the State of Texas has taken the land away from them. Of course, everywhere else in the United States, in one way or another, we have deprived the Indians of their lands.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. These Indians are not really Texas Indians. They are Alabama Indians. They migrated from Alabama to Louisiana in the early part of the nineteenth century, and from Louisiana they first came into Texas about 1816, then moved away in 1836 and returned in about three or four years later.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then the gentleman's theory is that these Indians having voluntarily moved away from Alabama, we should pay them for the land which they voluntarily moved away from?

Mr. BRIGGS. No; they have been recognized as one of the lost tribes. The Indian Bureau called special attention to that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They certainly have been lost, as far as I was concerned.

Mr. BRIGGS. The United States Government has never done anything for these Indians except to make a small appropriation for this school building.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose next we will have a request to appropriate money for the Indians in Massachusetts and in Maine.

Mr. DEMPSEY. How about the Tammany Tribe? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIGGS. These Indians are not like other Indians in the United States who have been receiving the bounty of the Government for years and years.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What we propose to do by this is to make paupers out of Indians who could be self-supporting.

Mr. BRIGGS. On the contrary, if the gentleman will allow me, I propose to offer an amendment to add after the word "support" the words "and education." The purpose is to obtain some education for these Indians along industrial lines in connection with the Government school which is being erected there.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. After all, that is what it comes to. They have their land now.

Mr. BRIGGS. They have 1,100 acres which the State of Texas gave them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I say they have their land now.

Mr. BRIGGS. But the land is so poor that they can not make a living on it; and without being instructed in more intensive cultivation they have no chance whatever of increasing the present meager yield from the soil. What is most needed is more land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is a reflection on the State of Texas. I am sure the gentleman would not want to reflect on his own State.

Mr. BRIGGS. I do not think it reflects on the State of Texas. It simply reflects on the fact that the Indians have not had the aid and instruction from the Federal Government that other Indians have had. It was stated in these hearings by the present chairman of the Indian Committee [Mr. SNYDER] that the Indians ought to be given an opportunity to learn how to develop this land more intensively before additional land is given them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It all comes back to the proposition that we have got to support the Indians when we have taken their land away from them, and in this case they are Texas Indians. All the ones that are alive there now, I suppose, were born in Texas. Texas had all the public lands in that State, but it wants Uncle Sam now to bear the burden of caring for these Indians.

Mr. BRIGGS. Texas only wants the United States to do its part. These Indians came from Alabama and other States. The State of Texas ought not to be charged with their support any more than any other State is charged with the support of the Indians within their borders.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, this is a remnant of what once was one of the most warlike tribes of Indians in the Southern States. They were called originally Alibamu Indians, and were a part of the ferocious aborigines encountered by De Soto during the bloody carnage enacted at the Battle of Maubilia near the present site of the city of Mobile, Ala. Originally they must have been a part of the Choctaw Tribe, because they speak a very similar language. After the States of Alabama and Mississippi began to settle up with whites they moved on to Louisiana, and from there finally to Texas. Reaching Texas at an early day when land was cheap the State of Texas generously set aside a tract of land for them which, I think, was finally reduced to about 1,100 acres. Since that time they have been living on the land and subsisting as best they could, getting along perhaps not as well as a great many people of that splendid State, but existing nevertheless as self-supporting Indians.

Now, I think my friend from Texas makes a most serious mistake when he takes a self-supporting man with all the liberties he gets as a United States citizen and undertakes to place him under the tutelage of the Federal Government or the Indian Bureau, thereby destroying his initiative, impairing his integrity, and placing him in a position where he will be a perpetual charge of the Federal Government.

Mr. BRIGGS. Let me say to the gentleman that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs states that that is exactly what the Indian Bureau does not want to do—to take charge of them. They will furnish a teacher and some supervision and direction of the proposed instruction, but the Indians will not be put under the control of the Federal Government. These Indians bear an excellent reputation for industry, peacefulness, and uprightness of character.

Mr. CARTER. The language of the amendment says "for support of the Alabama and Coushatta Indians." How is the Government, the Secretary, the Indian Bureau, or any other agency to support them unless it takes charge of them? I have as much sympathy for the advancement of the Indians as any man in the country; I have as much sympathy with the education and development of the Indians as any man; I have as much sympathy with his comfort and his welfare; but I also have some sympathy with his manhood, therefore I do not believe that this appropriation, putting these people under paternalistic control when they have shown that they are able to sustain themselves, will be a good thing for these Indians.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to say that the purpose of this appropriation is to give these Indians some instruction and education in connection with the Government school which the Government has provided. This provision ought to be amended, and the word "education" substituted for the word "support" as used by the Senate, and I shall offer that amendment, and I hope the Chairman and House will accept it.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, if the item had read "for the education of the Coushatta Indians" it might not be necessary to vote on it in this way, because it would not have been subject to a point of order under the rules of the House, for the law authorizes the education of the Indians, but the only thing that we can be guided by is the language of the amendment itself, and again, this item reads "for the support of the Coushatta Indians." I am afraid that in his zeal to help these people the gentleman from Texas is making a very serious mistake when he undertakes to place self-supporting Indians under the control of and on the support of the Government.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have no objection to substituting the word "education" for "support," and have stated it was desired to use the money for instruction so that the Indians might be taught vocational agriculture and given industrial training.

Mr. WALSH. Is there any State law or anything in the constitution of Texas that prevents the State from making an appropriation to take care of these Indians?

Mr. CARTER. As a matter of fact, Texas has been furnishing for years a specified amount for their education and turning it over to the school district comprised by this little reservation.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is there any law in any State that prevents a State from educating the Indians?

Mr. CARTER. Indeed there is not, and our own State, Oklahoma, appropriates and spends thousands of dollars every year for the education of Indian children.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to strike out the word "support" and substitute the word "education."

Mr. ELSTON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WALSH. Let the amendment be reported. I want to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "support," line 24 of the printed bill, and insert in lieu thereof the word "education."

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with the amendment that the Clerk has just read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were 71 ayes and 21 noes.

So the motion to recede and concur with an amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the aid of the public schools in Uintah and Duchesne County school districts, Utah, $12,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That Indian children shall at all times be admitted to such schools on an entire equality with white children.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 102 and concur in the same with the following amendment: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out "$12,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,000."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is this money to be used for the maintenance of schools which are open to the white children and to the citizens of Utah, so that we are in fact in an Indian appropriation bill contributing to the maintenance of schools in the State of Utah, part of which may be used for the education of Indians?

Mr. ELSTON. The situation is quite different. This is a school that is maintained by the white settlers. It was built by the white settlers and they are paying all of its expenses. It is situated in the heart of the Indian country, and all of the Indian children are privileged to attend the school and do attend the school in almost equal numbers with the white children. The Indians are contributing nothing to the school. The whites are paying all of it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And what is the total expenses of schools in this district?

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. WELLING].

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, I am not able to say what the total expenses of schools in this complete district are. All of the schools in the county are consolidated into one school district, and this is one school of a number of schools in the county. The total would approximate perhaps $50,000 a year.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What proportion of the population is Indian?

Mr. WELLING. In this particular school?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. WELLING. I should say at least 50 per cent of the population that attend this particular school are Indians.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And the expense of the school is $50,000?

Mr. WELLING. No; the expense of all of the schools in the entire district, which includes the whole county unit.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What I am trying to get at is whether the $6,000 proposed as an amendment is a fair amount in the proportion which the number of Indian children bears to the total number of children attending that school.

Mr. WELLING. In my judgment it is not fair. The appropriation since I have been in the House has been $12,000, but it has been reduced to $6,000, and I am quite willing to accept the responsibility for the State to maintain the rest of the cost of this school.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELLING. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Are these Indians wards of the Nation?

Mr. WELLING. Absolutely.

Mr. BEE. They are not now contributing anything to this education, but it is all maintained by the white citizens of Utah?

Mr. WELLING. The Indians have not contributed a cent of taxes, never have.

Mr. BEE. And this proposed amendment contributes on the part of the Government its share to the education of its own wards.

Mr. WELLING. Yes; and it has sought to do that in the past.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELLING. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Can the gentleman tell us how many Indians there are attending this school now.

Mr. WELLING. There are on this reservation——

Mr. SNYDER. I am speaking about this school.

Mr. WELLING. I know. There are on this reservation about 1,080 Indians and I can not say how many children there are in the school.

Mr. SNYDER. It is a fact that this is a white school, is it not?

Mr. WELLING. It is a fact that it was built by the white people living there.

Mr. SNYDER. It is largely for the children of the employees of the Indian Service?

Mr. WELLING. That is true.

Mr. SNYDER. So it is not an Indian school at all, and that is about the size of it.

Mr. WELLING. I take issue with that. The Indian children are there with the white children.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not know why the United States should furnish schools for Utah or Texas or any other State where the burden should be wholly on the State.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELLING. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Are these Indians United States citizens?

Mr. WELLING. They are not.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER. Are these schools supported by taxes or by subscription?

Mr. WELLING. They are supported by State taxes.

Mr. CARTER. State and county taxes upon the property within the school district, the same as other schools?

Mr. WELLING. Yes; but I will say this, that 90 per cent of the property in this school district is either public land or lands belonging to these Indians, and the remaining 10 per cent of land in the entire county is levied upon to maintain the total school system, and it is an intolerable burden upon the county.

Mr. CARTER. Are not most of the white children in these schools children of employees of the agency?

Mr. WELLING. They are.

Mr. SNYDER. I would have no objection to this if this were an Indian school, but it is not.

Mr. BEE. Let me say to the gentleman from New York this: He says he does not want the United States educating the children of Utah or of Texas. That statement is not fair.

Mr. SNYDER. I qualify that by saying that the United States Government ought not to take the burden of a State to instruct and educate the people of a State for whose education the State is responsible.

Mr. BEE. The United States Government ought not to put upon the people of a State the burden of educating the wards of the people of the United States, and that is what you are doing here.

Mr. SNYDER. This particular project that we are talking about is not an Indian school.

Mr. BEE. But Indian children are going to it and getting the benefit without contributing anything. It is the same as the Texas proposition.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to convey to the State of Utah all the right, title, and interest which the United States has in and to the bridge across the Duchesne River near the town of Myton, and to convey to the county of Duchesne, in said State, the bridge across the Duchesne River near the town of Duchesne, which said bridges were constructed with appropriations contained in the acts of August 5, 1909 (36 Stat. L., 124), and March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., 1074): Provided, That the State of Utah and county of Duchesne consent to this arrangement and agree to at all times in the future maintain, repair, and keep in good condition said bridges free from all expense to the United States or the Indians of the Uintah and Ouray Reservation in Utah."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment.

This bridge was constructed across the Duchesne River near the town of Myton, Utah, from an appropriation of $25,000 made by the act of August 5, 1909 (36 Stat. L., 124), which bridge is now a part of the State highway system through the former Uintah and Ouray Reservations, and is used but very little by the Indians, being used principally for the benefit of the white people. A similar bridge was constructed several years later across the said river near the town of Duchesne from an appropriation of $15,000 in the act of March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., 1074), which is not a part of the State highway system, but is really a county bridge, and is also used but very little by the Indians.

The Indian Service has been put to some expense in the past for the repair and upkeep of the above bridges, which the limited use made thereof by the Indians does not longer justify. It is, therefore, deemed advisable to turn these bridges over to the State and county, respectively, on condition that the said State and county shall at all times maintain and keep the said bridges in repair without expense to the United States. The State highway commission of Utah has already expressed its willingness to take over the Myton Bridge on the conditions mentioned, and efforts are now being made to have the county take similar action with respect to the Duchesne Bridge.

Mr. Speaker, this is briefly the substance of the justification furnished me by the Indian Bureau, indicating that the United States Government and the Indian moneys are charged for the upkeep and repair of this bridge. It is part of the State highway system in this part of the State, and the State and county are perfectly willing to take it and keep it in repair hereafter, and relieve the Government and the Indians of any charge whatever. It seems to me it is a very proper amendment.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ELSTON. I do.

Mr. TILSON. How does it happen that this appropriation was made to build a bridge—two of them, it seems—for the Indians, that the gentleman says are not now used by the Indians?

Mr. ELSTON. Of course, that is somewhat ancient history. That was in 1909.

Mr. TILSON. It goes back of the gentleman's time in this House; but I did not know but what he could tell me if the same degree of care was being exercised now and we occasionally build a bridge for a county in a State which the Indians themselves use very little?

Mr. ELSTON. I think there is some improvement going on since 1909. The gentleman from Utah can answer the gentleman perhaps more accurately, and I will yield him a minute.

Mr. WELLING. The bridge was contracted for when this entire area was Indian territory inside of an Indian reservation and it was entirely proper that it should be built there. It was built originally for the Indians. After the bridge had been constructed a large portion of this area was thrown open to public settlement. The bridge thereupon naturally connects the territory that belongs to white people. It was built properly. It ought to have been built by the Indian Bureau when it was built, and it is entirely proper now that the State should maintain and care for it.

Mr. TILSON. And it is at present a white elephant on the hands of the United States Government?

Mr. WELLING. No; not at all.

Mr. TILSON. And we ought to get rid of it, is not that the best reason for voting for this amendment?

Mr. WELLING. It is not a white elephant.

Mr. TILSON. As far as the United States Government is concerned.

Mr. WELLING. It is now outside of the reservation.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield for a question or two?

Mr. ELSTON. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. The information which the gentleman read here was handed him from the Indian Bureau?

Mr. ELSTON. It was.

Mr. SNYDER. Did the gentleman make any investigation of this item in the preparation of this appropriation bill?

Mr. ELSTON. As I remember, this item was not submitted to the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee when we had the Indian bill in hand.

Mr. SNYDER. Does the gentleman know whether it was submitted by the bureau to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate?

Mr. ELSTON. It certainly was, and was considered by them.

Mr. SNYDER. That is the reason the item was put on in the Senate?

Mr. ELSTON. As to that I am not absolutely certain, but I believe it was put on by the Indian Committee of the Senate.

Mr. SNYDER. So the gentleman as chairman of the subcommittee made no investigation of this item at all?

Mr. ELSTON. The item speaks for itself, and it appealed to my good judgment. I believe it to be a proper thing. I think if the gentleman will read it he will agree with me, and I do not think the gentleman can make very much out of his line of questions.

Mr. SNYDER. I have read it several times, and what I am asking is to show that I have tried to show——

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman object to the item or the policy?

Mr. SNYDER (continuing). That it is legislation on an appropriation bill without any investigation on the part of any committee of the House.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I will say this in respect to the gentleman's statement: Last year the gentleman brought in his own conference report, with something like 130 amendments, that went through here without any discussion whatever, and there were no doubt many legislative items put on by the Senate. I do not remember that any gentleman got up then and made any observations such as the gentleman from New York is making with respect to the matter. We took his word. In this case you do not have to take my word. You can read the amendment and decide for yourself.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman know any reason why the Committee on Indian Affairs should not have brought legislation in here on this subject and had it out several months ago?

Mr. ELSTON. I am not going to make any criticism about that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

"Stevens and Ferry Counties, Wash.: For payment to Stevens and Ferry Counties, in the State of Washington, of their claims under section 2 of the act of July 1, 1892, relating to the payment of local taxes on allotted Colville Indian lands, there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $115,767.67, to be immediately available, of which amount the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to pay to said Stevens County $44,309.67, and to pay to said Ferry County $71,458: Provided, That there may be deducted from said amount by the Secretary of the Interior such sums as he may find have been paid to said counties for Indian tuition; also the excess, if any, where the rate, based on the value of Indian allotments, may be found to be in excess of the rate on taxable land."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Satus Creek irrigation project, Yakima Reservation, Wash.: For beginning the construction of diversion dams and distributing systems for irrigat'ng 40,000 acres of land adjacent to Satus Creek on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., $50,000, the total cost of the project not to exceed $2,500,000: Provided, That the cost of this irrigation system shall be reimbursed to the United States by the owners of the land irrigable thereunder in not to exceed 20 annual payments and the Secretary of the Interior may fix annual operation and maintenance charges, which shall be paid as he may direct: Provided further, That if any allottee shall receive patent in fee to his allotment before the amounts so charged against him shall have been paid to the United States, then such amount remaining unpaid shall be and become a lien upon his allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited in such patent and may be enforced by the Secretary of the Interior by foreclosure as a mortgage, and should any Indian sell any part of his allotment with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the amount of any unpaid charges against the land sold shall be and become a first lien thereon and may be enforced by the Secretary of the Interior by foreclosure as a mortgage, and delivery of water to such land may be refused within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior until all dues are paid: And provided further, That no right to water or to the use of any irrigation ditch or other structure on said reservation shall rest or be allowed until the owner of the land to be irrigated as herein provided shall comply with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and he is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may determine proper for making effective the foregoing provisions, and to require of owners of lands in fee such security for the reimbursement herein required as he may determine necessary, and to refuse delivery of water to any tract of land until the owners thereof shall have complied therewith."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment, and I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the integrity and the honor of the Nation are involved in this amendment.

Let me go into the history of the situation. Prior to 1855 the Yakima Indian Tribe owned millions of acres of land in the Territory of Washington. In 1855 the Federal Indian agent, Gov. Stevens, the governor of the Territory of Washington, called a great council together at what is now the city of Walla Walla, and a treaty was made with the Yakima Indians by which they relinquished millions of acres of their lands to the Federal Government and restricted their residence and their rights to the Yakima Indian Reservation, consisting of something over a million acres of land. The Indians themselves accepted this treaty in good faith. They have never been accused, so far as I know, of in any way violating or attempting to violate the terms of that treaty.

As time went by the white settlers on the river above and across the river appropriated the waters that otherwise might have been used for the irrigation of Indian lands. This led to a prolonged controversy, and finally it reached a point in 1913 where there was a joint congressional committee named, which went out to the reservation and made an investigation, and held lengthy hearings, a copy of which I hold in my hand. They found that the Indians had been deprived of their just water rights. They also found, and recommended to Congress, that of each allotment of 80 acres of land that was subject to irrigation they were entitled to a free water right for 40 acres.

Mr. SWINDALL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I will.

Mr. SWINDALL. What is the value of this land without irrigation?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Without irrigation this land is worth probably $3 to $5 an acre; with irrigation it would be worth $300 to $500 an acre.

Mr. SWINDALL. Do the Indians live upon it and support themselves from it?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The testimony shows they are having a very difficult time in supporting themselves upon it.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I will.

Mr. MILLER. What proportion of these Indian lands has been irrigated?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the gentleman will permit, I will lead up to that.

Upon the recommendation of the congressional committee, in August, 1914, it was agreed there should be water furnished adequate for the irrigation of 40 acres of each Indian allotment. Pursuant to that, and because the United States as the guardian of the Indians' rights had permitted this water right to be utilized by other settlers, it became necessary that the United States purchase another water right, and the commission so recommended. The law of August 1, 1914, recognizes the necessity and makes the provision for the purchase of a water right for $635,000, and the money has been appropriated year by year, and that amount has been paid for a water right on the Wapato project, which is a part of the Yakima Reservation.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does that $635,000 include all the money which has been expended on the Wapato project?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It does not. There has been money expended for ditches that distribute water to the land.

Mr. HAYDEN. What is the aggregate amount which has been expended?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is $1,600,000; and the testimony of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs before the subcommittee shows that in the year 1919 there was produced on that project $11,000,000 worth of products.

Mr. HAYDEN. As I understand the contention of the gentleman from Washington, Congress has carried out about half of the project recommended by the joint committee of investigation, of which Senator ROBINSON was chairman. The gentleman claims that each of these Indians is entitled to have an irrigated allotment of 40 acres, and half of them have been provided with such allotments at a total cost of $1,600,000, and that it will take an additional expenditure of $2,500,000 to care for the remainder.

Mr. CARTER. As I recall, $635,000 was spent for water storage.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. CARTER. Spent at Lake Kechelus?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. At Kechelus and other points. If the gentleman will permit me to explain, the $635,000 provided a water right for a part of these Indians, and in the law of June, 1919, it was specified that this water right should apply to the Wapato project. Now, adjacent to the Wapato project comes the Toppenish-Simcoe irrigation project, and we made an appropriation a year ago, and the water has been filed on, and work begun so as to supply the Indians on that part of the reservation. But immediately adjacent exactly the same tribe of Indians, with the same land and of the same value, resting under the same treaty rights and same Federal statutes, we have the Indians who live along Satus Creek, for whom we have never done anything. There is flowing by and through that part of the reservation at this time ample water in the way of return flow from irrigation higher up and from tributary streams to the Yakima River—water sufficient for the needs of these Indians.

Mr. HAYDEN. I would like to ask whether the Indians are liable to lose their rights to the water for irrigation if this new work is not promptly undertaken?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That is my point. The water right is now there and available. But there are going to be irrigation activities begun, probably within the year, lower down the river, and if that water is filed on and appropriated then we will have a part of this reservation not supplied with a water right. We are carrying an obligation by our treaty and by the law of 1914, and a reiteration of a part of that law on almost every Indian appropriation we have made since, to go out and secure a water right for this part of the reservation. The water right so far has cost $635,000. The distribution is another question.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. In a minute, if the gentleman will permit. It will cost probably a very large sum in order to secure another water right if we let this slip away from us.

This bill carries $50,000 for beginning the diversion, so that we can hold onto the water rights. I know it also carries an authorization for the expenditure of a larger amount, but this amount Congress can distribute over as many years as it will. But I insist as a matter of economy and as a matter of justice to these Indians that we should conserve the water right which is now on their lands.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman considers this as a twin project to the Wapato project?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I consider it part of the Yakima project.

Mr. SNYDER. Does the gentleman consider it an Indian project?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I consider it an Indian project.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman is familiar, of course, with how many Indians there are owning farms on the Yakima project. The gentleman is advocating this one, based on the Wapato project being a success?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; but it is not an Indian project at all. It is a white man's project; and if the gentleman will permit, I will state that the number of Indians engaged is 150 and the number of whites engaged, owners, 500, and the number of whites engaged, lessees, 750. The number of acres cultivated by Indians is 5,800; the number cultivated by white owners, 28,540; and by white lessees, 34,158. Now, I am asking the gentleman if this project which he is now advocating will be equally an Indian project as this one?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I think it would be apropos here to put in the figures on that. Of this land, 32,000 acres is allotted to 400 Indians. That is 80 acres each. There are 2,145 acres that have been sold to 30 white families, so there we have the proportion.

This is almost wholly, regardless of what Wapato may be, an Indian project. There is no one connected with the Indian Service, and there is no one connected with the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I dare say no Member of Congress who is familiar with the subject who will not agree with me that the reclamation done on the Yakima Indian Reservation has been the most productive of results of any Indian project in the United States. That is the testimony, over and over again, by the Indian Department.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Was this project considered by the House when the House originally passed this bill?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Very late in the afternoon, when many Members were going out, I offered an amendment along this line. However, since then it has been considered in the Senate, and it has been considered by the committee. This was originally recommended by the department.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Was it rejected by the House before the Senate tacked it on to this bill?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It was rejected here by a group of men, perhaps one-fourth of the number who are here at this time.

Mr. SNYDER. This item came up on an estimate from the bureau. It being legislation, the Committee on Appropriations did not discuss it at all. They dismissed it without discussion. It went over to the Senate and was put on there.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has the gentleman got a copy of the bill?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I call to the gentleman's attention what seems to be a clerical error on page 58, which should be corrected, assuming, of course, that you want the Senate amendment to remain in the bill. On line 21, page 58, the word "rest" should be stricken out and the word "vest" inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I agree.

Mr. TILLMAN. With the gentleman's permission, Mr. Speaker, I move that the word "rest" on line 21 of page 58 be stricken out, and the word "vest" be substituted therefor.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes; that is satisfactory to me, if it is satisfactory to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CURRY of California rose.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CURRY of California. In the treaty entered into between the United States and the Indians in 1855 the Indians reserved the water rights in this Yakima country?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. They so understood it.

Mr. CURRY of California. Some of the Indians had these water rights, and some have not been given to them. Now, as the treaty is part of the supreme law of the land, and it was entered into with the Indians, it seems to me these Indians would be entitled to the same water rights as the others; and this really is not legislation on an appropriation bill, and if it had come in as an item from the Committee on Appropriations it would not have been stricken out on a point of order. Not only as a matter of honor the United States Government ought to keep its contract with the Indians, but we ought to be as honest in dealing with the Indians and with each other as the Government can compel the Indians and other people to be in dealing between themselves.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Let me tell you what the Indians say Gov. Stevens said to them:

> As long as the sun is in the sky, as long as the streams are still flowing, as long as the white mountains are still there, so long your rights will be maintained and be supported.

Gentlemen, it is the question to-day whether we are going to make good that treaty which we made with a helpless tribe of Indians, who surrendered millions of acres of their own land and their own rights, at the instigation of the agents of the Government, or whether we are going to make that treaty to-day a "scrap of paper" and let these Indians try to grow a crop on land as bare as the top of this table.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I yield.

Mr. FRENCH. Is not this little group of Indians, in fact, a part of a larger group that we helped a few years ago?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. They are a part of the Yakima Tribe, and we have taken care of the other group, and these are immediately adjacent. The question is whether we shall do the thing that we agreed to do for all of them or let the water rights slip away and then have this controversy come before us for years and years.

Mr. FRENCH. It is a continuation of the same project?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is a continuation of the same project.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] has control of the time. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] makes the preferential motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, the House considered this item once, and in its good judgment decided that it should not be put upon this appropriation bill. In addition to that, this is a new project, that goes right in the face of a policy adopted by the Indian Affairs Committee of not continuing this practice of reclaiming Indian land for white settlers. These Yakima Indians are not poor Indians. They are rich Indians. They have a tremendously rich property; and if this second unit goes according to the first unit, within one year from the time it is started it will be practically in the hands of white settlers. The House has approved the policy already adopted by the Indian Affairs Committee of cutting short right now this practice of appropriating for reclamation projects under the guise of projects for the supposed benefit of the Indians, when, as a matter of fact, they are for the benefit of the whites.

This whole subject should be turned over to the jurisdiction of the Reclamation Service. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] has introduced a bill in this House to take care of a situation just like this and to cover it into the Reclamation Service, where it can be developed, and where money can be provided for it.

I hope that the House will not vote in favor of the preferential motion just made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS]. This project may be very meritorious, but the House has set itself against appropriating millions out of the Treasury on projects of this kind.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, all that the very efficient chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. ELSTON] has said about this project is true. We have now already expended on irrigation projects through the Indian Bureau nearly $25,000,000. The estimates for the completion of those projects already started amount to an additional $25,000,000. Nearly all of those projects that have been started, with the exception of this Wapato project, are almost indefensible as irrigation systems, because of the fact of the dual relation between the Indian Bureau and the Reclamation Service. The Indian Bureau supervises and directs and draws the plans for these projects and the most of the work is done by the Reclamation Service, under the direction of the Indian Bureau, which, to my mind, is absolutely indefensible.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Is there any criticism of the Yakima project—that part of it which has been constructed?

Mr. SNYDER. No; so far as I have been able to discover—and I have made careful investigation—the Yakima system is the best one that we have in existence to-day; but, speaking about the treaty, the Yakima system has had more done for it in the matter of furnishing the money than has been stated here. The gentleman said $1,600,000 had been expended upon that project. He overlooks $500,000 that has been expended upon maintenance and operation. He also overlooks the fact that this is the first year since the project was started that there has ever been one penny paid back, even for operation and maintenance, to say nothing of paying anything back on the principal. Mind you, all of these projects were started under the guise of reimbursable; but, so far as this committee has been able to find after an intensive investigation covering a year and a half, not one penny has been reimbursed to the Government of the principal of any of these amounts, even on this splendid project up in Washington known as the Wapato project.

Now, what I object to here is that while this may be an absolutely meritorious project—and no man in this House favors irrigation more than I do, because my eyes were opened to that subject last summer, and I know the advantage of it—it must be done under proper regulations, and I am absolutely and unalterably opposed to this House and this Government installing so-called Indian projects which are wholly for the benefit of the white man, with the possible exception of indirectly being some little help to some few Indians. The difficulty today with all these projects that we have been able to find where there has been more than $50,000 or $60,000 spent is that there are no Indians farming them at all. The statement is made here that there are 5,800 acres in the Yakima project which are being cultivated by Indians. If that were investigated carefully it would be found that the Indians are not working them. At least that is what we found everywhere else. It was very difficult to find an Indian anywhere doing work upon a farm or anywhere else. And so, in addition to what I have said, I am opposed to this because there has been no investigation of the project on the part of anybody connected with this House or with the other body, so far as I have been able to determine. Therefore I hope this amendment will not prevail.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. How is this proposed reimbursement secured to the Government, if secured at all?

Mr. ELSTON. It is in the nature of a lien on the project itself and on the land, and as the land comes in after it is irrigated, the settlers are supposed to be in a position to repay the Government for its outlay.

Mr. DEWALT. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] just said that there had been no reimbursement whatever. Is the gentleman correct in so stating?

Mr. ELSTON. The time when reimbursement should begin, prior to a proviso put into the Indian bill last year, was practically left to the Indian Bureau to decide, and in their good judgment they had not up to that time decided that it should begin at all. That is the way the situation lay.

Mr. SNYDER. And the reason was that we believed that the return from the $25,000,000 already invested, if properly collected, would furnish the capital required for continuing the projects in the future.

Mr. ELSTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield for another question before he does that?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. The gentleman from Washington speaks of the treaty rights; what is the chairman's opinion as to the rights of these Indians under the treaty as to that water?

Mr. ELSTON. I have never heard that there was any obligation on the part of the Government to provide a project of this magnitude involving the expenditure of $2,500,000. There may be some clause in the treaty which I have no doubt has been fully met by the Government long ago in what it has done for these Indians.

Mr. DEWALT. Regardless of the cost, this treaty is a valid treaty, and the Indians should be entitled to the value of it.

Mr. ELSTON. I never heard of such a proposition in the treaty.

Mr. SNYDER. I think the gentleman is following up a wrong sentiment. I do not think he will find that the Indians are clamoring for this proposition at all. The Indians are the last ones who are yelling for irrigation.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in regard to this last suggestion that the Indians are not clamoring for this project, I refer to the hearings before the subcommittee, in which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says that the Indians are demanding this. In regard to the $25,000,000 expended at other places, that has nothing to do with keeping the treaty between the United States Government and the Yakima Indians. In regard to the question as to whether this is for whites or for Indians, I make the statement, and am prepared to verify it, that there are 400 Indians and 33 white families.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DEWALT. What I want to get at is, does this treaty stipulate that the Indians shall have a right to use this water?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the chairman will give me a half a minute's time, I will say that in 1855 irrigation was but little known, but they were given the waters of that reservation, the fish, the timber, and the game, and all those things. By the time the treaty was ratified in 1859 they were beginning to do some work on irrigation, and they have been doing it ever since. So, under the broad terms of the treaty, the waters are reserved to them. Gentlemen of the joint congressional committee went out and held extensive hearings, made investigations, and investigated the treaty and then reported back.

Mr. DEWALT. What did they report?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. They reported that they should have water sufficient to irrigate one-half of each 80-acre allotment on said reservation. Then, pursuant to that report, on August 1, 1914, the statute provides for the same thing. It says "adequate for irrigation of 40 acres on each Indian allotment."

Mr. DEWALT. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Who is to decide what is adequate—the Government itself or the Indians?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I am willing that the Government should decide.

Mr. DEWALT. It is said that $25,000,000 has been appropriated.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That is not for these Indians; that is all over the United States.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I will close with this statement. This is a new project counter to a policy adopted by the committee and counter to the suggestion that propositions of this kind be put into the Reclamation Service. That will be done if the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] passes the House. The Government can then recognize its obligations to these Indians, and the project will be in the branch of the service where it belongs.

If there is any equity to be considered in this case, there are many important projects where the equities are much stronger. There are as many as five States pressing this committee to continue work on projects already started that may deteriorate for want of further appropriations. The committee can not respond because it may involve the expenditure of many millions of dollars. Here is something new upon which we have not started. If we are going to launch out on these projects, let us go back and finish the projects upon which we have already spent money. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Washington that the House recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington) there were 23 ayes and 48 noes.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from California that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the per capita share of any of said Indians under this appropriation, and under a like appropriaton of $10,000 made for the same purpose in the act approved February 14, 1920, may be paid in cash.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment. This amendment makes no appropriation of any kind. It merely distributes in cash the appropriation already made to such of these Indians as do not wish to take land by reason of the fact that they already have land. The appropriation was made in such a way as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to purchase lands for all of the Indians. Now it appears that this appropriation need not be used for the purchase of farms for such Indians as have farms. This is to authorize the payment in money to these Indians who have farms of their quota of the appropriation. I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 109: Page 61, line 10, insert: "The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $180,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the tribal funds of the Menominee Indians of Wisconsin, arising under the acts of June 12, 1890 (26 Stat. L., p. 146), and March 28, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 51), and to make therefrom a per capita payment or distribution of not to exceed $100 to said Indians entitled thereto under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe to be immediately available."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 109, and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to withdrow from the Treasury of the United States, so much as may be necessary of the tribal funds of the Menominee Indians of Wisconsin, arising under the acts of June 12, 1890 (26 Stat. L., p. 146), and March 28, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 51), and to make therefrom a per capita payment or distribution of not to exceed $50 to such Indians entitled thereto under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. And the authority granted in this paragraph shall be effective immediately upon the approval of this act."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this amendment is to decrease the per capita payment from $100 to $50. I have a memorandum here which shows that these Indians have to their credit in the Treasury at this time $1,800,000. This per capita payment of $50 involves a withdrawal of about $90,000.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Where did the gentleman get the figures that the Menominee Indians have a million dollars and upward on hand?

Mr. ELSTON. From the Indian Bureau.

Mr. SNYDER. The report of the commissioner as of June 30, last year, shows that they had at that time only $157,000. If they have one million and upward, why is it necessary to decrease the amount of the per capita payment from $100 to $50? There is no reason in the world why they should not be paid the $100, if that is so.

Mr. ELSTON. The amendment seems proper in view of the information given to me as to the immediate needs of the Indians for cash. They do not need more than $50 per capita, and it would be better to keep the balance of the money in the Treasury for their benefit than to give them more than they require and have them waste it.

Mr. SNYDER. I have no objection to the reduction, only I wondered why. When I investigated the matter myself I found a reason for the reduction. There was on the 1st of June, last year, according to the report of the commissioner, $157,000 in the Treasury to the credit of the Menominee Indians. They first attempted to appropriate $180,000, which they did not have. Having discovered that, it appeared to me it was necessary to reduce the amount to $50. I was in communication this morning with the bureau, notwithstanding the fact that they are on a holiday to-day, and all of the money that we could find to the credit of the Menominee Indians is $157,000. If the gentleman's amendment prevails, there will be money enough to pay it.

Mr. ELSTON. I would state to the gentleman that I can not controvert the statement that he makes in regard to the amount in the Treasury, but I have memoranda which has been handed to me, and that is all I know about it.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not state that the memorandum is not correct, but that is the type of information that we get all of the time.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 129: Page 65, line 9, insert:

"SEC. 26. That section 1 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. L., p. 907), in so far as the same relates to the allotments of land to the Quapaw Indians and to restrictions against alienation of said allotments, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to provide that the restrictions which now exist against the alienation of the lands allotted to and allotted lands inherited by the Quapaw Indians named in the letter of January —, 1921, of the Secretary of the Interior, to wit: John Beaver, Mah-hunk-a-zhe-ka, now Beaver; Anna Beaver, now Bear; Arthur Buffalo, Lizzie Cedar, Peter Clabber, Minnie Greenback, now Clabber; Harry Crawfish, Thomas Crawfish, Mary Crawfish, now Skye; Francis Quapaw Goodeagle, Wat-tah-nah-zhe Goodeagle, Khah-Daah, or Grandeagle, now Quapaw; Antoine Greenback, Joseph Greenback, Ho-gom-me, or Goodeagle; Mis-kah-get-tah, Amos Newhouse, John Quapaw, Nellie J. Mr. HASTINGS. I suppose the gentleman wants to recede and concur with an amendment there by inserting the figures "15" in line 16, page 65, after the word "January."

Mr. ELSTON. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment by inserting in line 16, page 65, after the word "January," the figures "15."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves to recede and concur in amendment 129, with an amendment as follows: In line 16, page 65, after the word "January," insert the figures "15."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 68, line 1, insert:

"SEC. 27. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Clarence W. Turner and Mrs. William B. Hord, widow of William B. Hord, deceased, one-half to each, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Creek Nation, the sum of $6,967.50, being in full settlement of the claim of the said Clarence W. Turner and William B. Hord, deceased, against the said Creek Nation growing out of services performed by them under an act of the National Council of the Creek Nation approved January 31, 1895, in an effort to secure appropriation by the Congress of the United States of $600,000 of the Creek funds, the same to be made available for the immediate use of the Creek Nation, and of which amount there was appropriated by Congress the sum of $200,000 by the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stats., p. 894), the said sum of $6,967.50 having been appropriated in favor of said Turner and Hord for said services by an act of the National Council of the Creek Nation, approved November 5, 1900, but not paid."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment. It is a tribal item, payable out of tribal funds.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I shall yield to the gentleman from Michigan in a moment. Before a vote is taken on this amendment, I wish to give a résumé of the result accomplished by the House on this bill and inform the House as to the aggregate of appropriations carried in the conference report and involved in the motions made by me on the floor of the House. If the motion which I have just made is agreed to, the totals of the present bill will substantiate my claim to the House that this bill when completed would still be lower in totals than the record-breaking low bill of last year, in respect to which the Indian Appropriation Committee justly claimed a great deal of credit. Last year the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] brought into this House a bill which was the lowest bill for five years. He was congratulated upon the floor of the House by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I feel that the present subcommittee has no excuses to make in closing its work to-day. We have completed the bill and we have furnished to the House a bill carrying a smaller total than last year.

Mr. CARTER. What are the totals?

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs concurs in the statement the gentleman has made and believes every word he has said, and congratulates him upon his efforts in finally passing a bill even lower than the bill passed last year, and I think he is entitled to the congratulations of the House on his efforts.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman did not give the totals.

Mr. ELSTON. The totals are as follows:

Gratuities, $7,550,669.67; reimbursables, $1,584,985; treaty, $906,620; tribal, $2,728,974; making a grand total of $12,771,278.67, nearly $100,000 lower than last year's bill.

Some question has been made in regard to the propriety of amendments which I have proposed here. The increases involved in my motions, so far as sums coming out of the Treasury are concerned, amount to a little over $500,000. Of that sum nearly $400,000 has been for school purposes. We have used our best judgment in selecting emergency cases. That explains in a degree what has been done with the increases——

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman, of course, can not help but say that the Committee on Indian Affairs has assisted him in every possible way in keeping down the amount.

Mr. ELSTON. The Committee on Indian Affairs did not assist in carrying the various motions—at least, it opposed some of them.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman misunderstands me. The gentleman does not mean to say that at least the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has not tried in every way to keep items down in the bill, and also other members of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. ELSTON. I misunderstood the gentleman. I have had absolutely the full cooperation of the gentleman in keeping down efforts to increase the amounts in the bill.

Mr. SNYDER. That is what I want to bring out.

Mr. ELSTON. I give the gentleman credit for absolute sincerity and give him credit for a desire to protect the jurisdiction of his committee. I may differ from him in regard to the merit of many of his criticisms and strictures on the course of this subcommittee in the House. It is a mere matter of difference of opinion, where I believe the gentleman is absolutely sincere. I hope he accords me the same thing.

Mr. SNYDER. I certainly do.

Mr. ELSTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, statements have been made in the House in regard to Senate amendments in the nature of legislation. Mr. Speaker, I have here a list of the legislative items involved in my motions which have been carried in the House. There is not one of them that does not involve some necessary incident in the way of legislation for the aid and help of the Indian Service, and there is hardly one of them that the gentleman from New York himself would not have approved. There are some which he has opposed, but I believe that 90 per cent of the legislation involved in my motions would have been agreed to by the gentleman from New York had the matter came up before his committee. I will not take up the time of the House to analyze other legislative items put upon the bill. They are mostly minor adjustments in the law for the betterment of the Indian Service and are similar to amendments usually carried in the current Indian appropriation bills.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss the pending amendment, and I direct attention to line 10, page 68. It seems to me that all after the date 1895 is mere argument as to why this appropriation should pass, and while it is entirely proper to pay this claim, and I believe it to be a just claim, I do not like the idea of enacting into the statutes of the United States a statement that it is a payment for services in an effort to secure an appropriation by Congress.

It seems to me if the gentleman would concur with an amendment striking out all after "1895" in this amendment it would be just as effective.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman propose his amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur with an amendment striking out all in the Senate amendment after "1895," in line 10.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California proposed a motion to recede and concur, and——

Mr. ELSTON. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arizona to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 68, line 10, after the figures "1895," strike out the comma and insert a period, and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what it is proposed to do to-morrow?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the deficiency bill is not disposed of to-day, that will come up to-morrow. The conference report on the Diplomatic bill, I take it, will follow that.

Mr. TILSON. The day will be used in conference reports, so far as the gentleman knows?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As far as conference reports are ready, and I presume they will probably take the day. I do not know.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

JAMES W. GOOD,
J. G. CANNON,
JOHN M. EVANS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, a great many of the amendments in the bill were estimated for after the Committee on Appropriations of the House had concluded its work on the bill. After we had finished the hearings a large number of estimates went to the Senate, and we have receded on a great many of these items. They are items where there are actual deficiencies which were not considered by the House committee.

Among the principal items included in the report which we have agreed to is an item for the Indian day boarding schools and industrial schools of $290,000. This item is made necessary very largely to take care of the increased cost of coal and provisions in the boarding schools. The amount appropriated for that purpose in the Indian appropriation bill of last year was $1,600,000. The estimated deficiency was $375,000. The Senate has adopted an amendment carrying $290,000 for that purpose, and it seemed to the managers on the part of the House that if any criticism could be leveled at the item at all, it might be that the amount will be found sufficient to do the work. But in view of the rapidly decreasing price of coal I think this amount would be sufficient for the rest of the year.

The audited claims in the Indian Bureau amount to $258,585.21. They are audited as required by law, are actual debts, and there is nothing to do but to pay them, and we have agreed to that amendment.

Then, the large increase that has been added is in the Senate amendment which carries $65,575,832.03 for the Postal Service. When the Railroad Administration appeared before the Committee on Appropriations at the last session of Congress and asked for an appropriation to pay the loss growing out of Government operation of railroads, they listed as one of the assets, one of the collectible assets, $65,000,000 from the Postal Service for the increase in the cost of carrying the mails while the roads were under Federal control. Now, the trouble was that the Post Office Department did not have this $65,000,000, and therefore the Postmaster General has made an estimate that came to Congress after the House acted on the bill, and the Senate has placed in the bill the provision carrying $65,575,832.03, which will enable him to pay the Railroad Administration what it owes that administration for transportation. The House conferees were unwilling to agree to this amendment until we first ascertained the fact that the Railroad Administration would need the money. When we made inquiry we were advised that they would not only need this sum, but that it would require an aditional appropriation to enable it to pay its debts. That administration has cash assets of $200,000,000. It owes approximately $295,000,000. This appropriation will leave the administration still short of funds to pay its debts by $30,000,000. Some day, but not now, we will know the amount of losses growing out of Federal operation and control of the railroads.

Then there is an actual deficiency in the transportation of the mail for the year 1920 of $1,900,000. The amount is necessary and was estimated for after the bill left the House, agreed to by the Senate, and there seemed to be nothing to do but to appropriate the money.

There is also, for transportation of foreign mails, an appropriation of $99,500 for the year 1920. There is also carried in that bill $1,363,000 for star route transportation in 1921. The Postmaster General has requested the appropriation and says the additional funds are needed and the Senate have given it and the conferees have agreed to it. Since the bill left the House there has been a very severe storm, a tornado, out in the Olympic National Forest. The timber destroyed covers an area stretching some 35 miles in width to about 75 or 100 miles long. The timber destroyed is very fine timber. Some very large trees in great numbers have been blown down, and this forest now, according to the estimate made by the department, is in danger of a forest fire. The department requested $100,000 in order to protect the timber until they can sell it. They propose immediately to take steps to sell the timber to some commercial organization that is equipped to remove this timber that is blown down, and we have agreed to the Senate amendment.

The House bill carried an appropriation of $150,000 to prevent the spread of the gypsy moth. The Senate bill carries $300,000 for that purpose. The estimate, as I recall, was for $300,000, although it was stated before the committee that there should be an appropriation of $400,000. The committee has agreed upon $225,000 instead of $150,000 as carried by the House bill and instead of $300,000 as appropriated by the Senate.

For the control of the pink bollworm we carried $75,000 in the House bill. The Senate appropriated $100,000, and insisted very strongly that that amount would be required for the rest of the year. We have agreed on $85,000 as a compromise on that item, and by agreeing to both of these items we place ourselves rather in harmony with the provisions carried in the House bill for the same purposes next year.

For general expenses of the Lighthouse Service we carried an appropriation of $300,000 and the Senate carried an appropriation of $468,000. This deficiency seemed necessary, very largely on account of the increased cost of coal in the Lighthouse Service. Because of the fact that the stations are widely scattered all along our coast line, it is necessary to buy the coal from the local dealers, and the price this year has been increased almost 100 per cent in many instances. A large part of this appropriation was necessary because of the excessive prices demanded for coal. The House conferees in going over the hearings in this matter have come to the conclusion that perhaps our reduction was a little severe, and we have agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment, appropriating $400,000 instead of $300,000, as carried in the House bill, and instead of $468,000, as carried in the Senate bill.

The additional judgments of the United States courts amount to $3,499.93; the additional judgments of the Court of Claims amount to $65,698.94; and the additional audited claims amount to $2,613,385.33, and these we have, of course, agreed to.

The House bill carried for the enforcement of national prohibition $1,000,000. The Senate bill carried $1,400,000. The conferees have agreed upon an appropriation of $1,200,000. The Senate conferees felt that the full amount carried by the Senate bill should be appropriated. The House conferees felt that although this was a new work, which is beset with a great many obstacles, Congress should treat it just as it treats all other appropriations, and that those intrusted with the expenditure of these appropriations should also obey the law, just as all other administrative officers intrusted with the administration and expenditure of money should respect and enforce the law. It was the duty of the officers intrusted with the enforcement of national prohibition to so allot their funds, $5,500,000, so that there would be no deficiency at all. But because Congress either in its wisdom or lack of wisdom saw fit last year to reduce the estimate for that appropriation, as it reduced other estimates, in this matter the officers intrusted with the enforcement of the law first set about to violate the law and to commence to spend the money, not on the basis of the appropriation as required by law, but upon the basis of their estimates. Now, the committee was willing to help them out of the dilemma, because the committee believes that this law should be enforced; it believes that there should be a rigid enforcement of the law. The committee, however, believes also that there are a great many men not only in the bureau in Washington but throughout the various States as agents who are employed to enforce the law who are winking at its violation. They are known to the men who are at the head of the service, who are not favorable to the enforcement, and they ought to be weeded out. If they weed out these men, they will have more money in this appropriation, more money available, than they can possibly spend.

We want good service, and notwithstanding the fact that the officers intrusted with the enforcement of the law have gone beyond the provisions of the law and created a deficiency without reporting it to Congress, yet we are willing that they shall have all the money that is necessary to enforce this law in a most vigorous way, and we believe that by reducing this appropriation the enforcement of the law will be strengthened, and that there will be thrown about the enforcement of the law a healthier atmosphere than is found there now.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan.. Has there ever been a prosecution under that law which forbids the creation of a deficit?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know of a single prosecution.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is done so frequently by many departments that it seems to me it might be well to institute a prosecution, and it would save a lot of money.

Mr. GOOD. I agree with the gentleman; and I believe that one of the first things that the incoming President should do is to notify every Cabinet official that that is the law of the United States and it must be enforced. It should be enforced, but it has not been enforced, and it leaves the committees of Congress, and Congress itself, in a position where if they refuse to give the money to carry on a needed service for a portion of the year the service, no matter how badly needed it is, can not be furnished at all, and the employees will be discharged unless Congress comes to the rescue and supplies the money necessary to carry on the work.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It would not mean that all the employees would have to quit their jobs, but only a part of them, and it seems to me if we got after these men who are guilty and who are responsible for this deficit it would be a good thing to clean up in that way.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that we have done that all the way through. Where an officer did not follow the law, and spent more money than was necessary, when he came back and asked for a fund sufficient to carry on the force according to his present organization we cut the estimate and compelled him to cut the force, thereby showing him the necessity for the enforcement of that law. But take the prohibition act. If we had not given any money at all, then for the months of May and June there would not be much left.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I hope the suggestion made by the gentleman from Iowa will be carried out, and that those who are responsible for deliberately allotting this money in an improper way and deliberately creating deficits will be punished for it and wiped off the books.

Mr. TILSON. If there never has been an indictment under it, does not the gentleman think there ought to be one where by violating the law for a part of the year executive officers force Congress either to wink at that violation of the law or stop the necessary service of the Government?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As a matter of fact has there been any technical violation of the law?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I think there have been technical violations. The law provides that no executive department or other Government establishment of the United States shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract or other obligation for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations unless such contract or obligation is authorized by law. Nor shall any department or any officer of the Government accept voluntary service for the Government or employ personal service in excess of that authorized by law, except in cases of sudden emergency involving the loss of human life or the destruction of property. All appropriations made for contingent expenses or other general purposes except appropriations made in fulfillment of contract obligations expressly authorized by law, or for objects required or authorized by law without reference to the amounts annually appropriated therefor, shall, on or before the beginning of each fiscal year, be so apportioned by monthly or other allotments as to prevent expenditures in one portion of the year which may necessitate deficiency or additional appropriations to complete the service of the fiscal year for which said appropriations are made; and all such apportionments shall be adhered to and shall not be waived or modified except upon the happening of some extraordinary emergency or unusual circumstance which could not be anticipated at the time of making such apportionment, but this provision shall not apply to the contingent appropriations of the Senate or House of Representatives; and in case said apportionments are waived or modified as herein provided, the same shall be waived or modified in writing by the head of such executive department or other Government establishment having control of the expenditure, and the reasons therefore shall be fully set forth in each particular case and communicated to Congress in connection with estimates for any additional appropriations required on account thereof. Any person violating any provision of this section shall be summarily removed from office and may also be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or by imprisonment for not less than one month.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Was there not a waiver in this case?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think there was a waiver in this case at all. If there was a waiver, it was not communicated to Congress. The law provides that it shall be communicated to Congress and in that case there is a violation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In the estimates.

Mr. GOOD. In the estimate for the additional appropriations. Now, I will say to the gentleman that in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission the transportation act threw additional burdens on that commission, equal almost to its original burden. It threw upon that commission the burden of looking into the question of the issuance of stocks and bonds and things of that kind. Now, Mr. Chairman Clark of that commission was unwilling to commence that work. He not only did not waive the allotment but he was unwilling to commence the work until Congress made the appropriation for the same, and in this bill we are carrying an appropriation for that. In the case of a great many of these appropriations there are waivers, but in a great many other cases no attention whatever is paid to that provision of the law that they shall make a waiver in writing and that that waiver shall be communicated to Congress.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was under the impression that in all of these cases they did comply with the law by making a waiver and including the waiver in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows that these appropriations for deficiencies do not come in the Book of Estimates. They come in as House documents, and that is where the waiver should come; but if the gentleman will look through them he will find in many of these cases that there is no waiver communicated to Congress as required by law, and I think it should be done.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It could be communicated in the special estimate, or it could be communicated in the Book of Estimates, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word in reference to whether the prohibition unit in the Internal Revenue Bureau ought to be punished because it has permitted this deficiency. This was a new service; they were just building it up when it was discovered that the money already appropriated would not be sufficient. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue as soon as it was possible went to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and called his attention to the fact that they were spending in excess of the appropriation and that it was necessary to do that. There was no objection on the part of the chairman; at least no objection appears in the hearing, though the chairman was present when this statement was made. The necessity of the service was explained, and so was the necessity for this additional money, and thus with the tacit, if not express, consent of the chairman he went on and formed this organization. It is not a case where an advantage has been taken of Congress. There is no question as to the situation. If this appropriation of $1,200,000 shall stand, it means that about one-third of the field force, the police force that is absolutely inadequate to-day, must be discharged forthwith unless you pass another deficiency appropriation in the near future.

I have a letter from the prohibition commissioner calling my attention to the situation. It seems to me the House should understand what is going on. The chairman does not pretend that this money is sufficient and admits that many of the enforcement personnel must be discharged if this conference report is approved. Complaint is made that some of them are wet. There may be men in the service who ought to be discharged, but there is no pretense that the number of men are more than needed. Not at all; the fact of the matter is that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the prohibition commissioner insist that they have to have their present force. Everybody knows there is a constant complaint from every quarter that the force is not large enough. I want the House and the country to understand the situation. There is no pretense that they are appropriating enough for the service. They are turning it down, and propose to throw it down, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. UPSHAW. Did the gentleman go before the conferees and make a statement of the great need of this money?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I was assured that I would have an opportunity to go before the conferees and explain the situation to them. I was given no such opportunity, but instead of that they simply went on and brought in this report, refusing to give this House an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. UPSHAW. Does not the gentleman think that that is playing with fire?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not believe that the incoming administration can afford to take this stand. I do not believe that it ought to go before the country with the declaration that has been made by the chairman to-day that it is willing to have prohibition made a farce, because that is what is going to be done if this report is adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House a few days ago a deficiency appropriation of $1,000,000 was provided for. The prohibition enforcement department was asking for $1,400,000, and stated that unless that amount was appropriated it would be necessary to discharge some of the force of agents now scattered over the country enforcing the prohibition law. That argument had force in the Senate, and they adopted an amendment providing for $1,400,000 as a deficiency appropriation to carry the prohibition enforcement on from now until the 30th of June, with the same force that it now has.

It is a notorious fact that there are not enough agents to enforce the law. In many States the agents of the Government are receiving no cooperation whatever from the States. I think in 10 States they have no enforcement law compelling the State officers to act with the Federal officers in that regard. It is a farce to undertake to enforce the law with one lonesome agent traveling over one, or, in some cases, two congressional districts as they do in many parts of the United States. The enforcement of the ordinary State laws requires a sheriff in every county and a police force in every community. But here we have only enough money to provide in some instances one agent to a congressional district, and in some cases one agent to two congressional districts. It is a notorious fact that one man can not enforce the law in such a large territory.

The prohibition commissioner states that there is no question but what it is a fact that if this amount is reduced from $1,400,000, as provided in the Senate amendment, to $1,200,000, that two or three or four hundred of these agents throughout the United States must be discharged. In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill there is $7,500,000 provided for the enforcement of prohibition after the beginning of July 1 for the next fiscal year. This appropriation of $1,400,000 is for the simple purpose of keeping the present force on the same basis until July 1, and then the legislative bill for $7,500,000 is to support it for the next fiscal year.

If we reduce the amount and are compelled to discharge two or three hundred agents, the result is that for two or three months, from along about April until the 1st of July, there must be a serious reduction of the force, estimated by the prohibition commissioner at about one-third, and then after July 1 these men must be taken back or new men must be appointed in their places. So it seems to me the part of wisdom that we should keep the force intact, as it is now, so that the $7,500,000 appropriation that will be available after the 1st of July will carry on the force without any interruption as it now exists.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] states that some of these men who are in the force are incompetent, that some of them have paid no attention to their duties in some respects. That may be true, but that is not an indictment of the system; it is not an indictment of the law. If there are incompetent men, they should be fired, but that is no reason for crippling the department. We have appropriated already in this Congress $5,000,000,000 for the next year. In the next legislative year we have provided seven and a half million dollars, or 7 cents and a half for every man, woman, and child in the United States, to enforce an amendment that was put into the Constitution by an almost unanimous vote of the States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two more minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, if we are to pare expenses and are to practice economy, in which I have great sympathy, we ought not to begin economy by crippling and hamstringing a new department, which is honestly seeking to enforce an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the Speaker will recognize me for that purpose, I desire to move to recommit the conference report to the conference committee with instruction to the House conferees to concur in the amendment of the Senate providing for $1,400,000 instead of $1,200,000 provided in the conference report. This bill must go back to the conferees in any event, and there are other amendments that have to be agreed to, and there will be no loss of time in so far as the conference report is concerned by recommitting the report to the conference committee, nor so far as the passage of the bill is concerned. This enforcement division should not be curtailed and the enforcement of the law hampered, as will result if this conference report is agreed to as it now stands. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, it will be necessary to discharge some of the men who are engaged as agents and paid out of this appropriation. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SWOPE] on the floor of this House tells me that some of these agents during the recent campaign in Kentucky were out making speeches all of the time. I know that a great many of the 2,000 men who are empowered to enforce the prohibition law are not in favor of enforcing the prohibition act at all. I know and you know and everybody knows that these men are winking at the law, and every man here in the Chamber to-night knows the same thing. It is not even suggested that there be a strict enforcement, otherwise there would not have been issued permits to withdraw 40,000 gallons of spirits during the year.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I have talked with some of you who favor larger appropriations for this purpose, and I have talked with even Wayne B. Wheeler who sends his commission to this House, and you have said to me, as has Mr. Wheeler, that there are more wets than there are drys engaged in this enforcement, and yet men will nod to Mr. Wheeler, just as they nod to Mr. Gompers, and vote money out of the Treasury at their command whether it is needed or not. I have refused to do that, and I still refuse, and I say to you that if we are going to do what the people of America, the taxpayers, want us to do we will answer to but one voice, and that is the voice of our own conscience. I can not find it in my conscience, believing as I do in the enforcement of prohibition, voting for the amendment, presiding over the deliberations of the committee when the bill was before the House, believing that the law should be enforced—I can not find it in my conscience to vote to take more money out of the Treasury for this purpose at this time, when we already know that too many men are paid out of this appropriation who are winking at violations of the law. Mr. Wheeler will tell you the same thing that was told to me. He told me there were more wets down in the bureau entrusted with the enforcement of prohibition than there are drys; and yet gentlemen come here and ask us to open up the Treasury of the United States and place more money in the hands of such men.

Mr. Speaker, we took this appropriation just as we have taken every estimate that came before us. We tried to look at it in a businesslike way, believing that the law ought to be enforced. There was not a man on the subcommittee on deficiencies who was not in favor of the most vigorous enforcement of this law. That has been the position all along. There has been no other suggestion before this committee, and I resent the charge that the Committee on Appropriations or its members have not been in favor of a vigorous enforcement of this law. We have given every penny that we believe this organization can expend for the rest of this year in a vigorous enforcement of the law, but it will require the dismissal of some men who ought to be dismissed.

I move the previous question on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference with instructions to the House conferees to concur in Senate amendment No. 30.

Mr. TINKHAM rose.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Kentucky opposed to the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am opposed to it in its present form.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. TINKHAM. To offer a motion to recommit, being a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. TINKHAM. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts to offer his motion to recommit.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TINKHAM moves to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference with instructions to recede from the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 30, and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,100,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a motion to the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question, which is a preferential motion, of course.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 51.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 93, nays 205, not voting 130, as follows:

COLD-STORAGE FOODS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 9521.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9521) to prevent hoarding and deterioration of and deception with respect to cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That this act may be cited as the 'United States cold-storage act.'

"SEC. 2. Whenever used in this act—

"(a) The term 'person' includes an individual, partnership, corporation, or association;

"(b) The term 'commerce' means commerce among the several States or between any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia and any foreign nation, or between any Territory or the District of Columbia and any State, or between any Territory and any other, or between any Territory and the District of Columbia, or within any Territory or the District of Columbia, or between points in the same State but through any other State or any Territory or the District of Columbia or any foreign nation;

"(c) The term 'cold storage' means the storage or keeping of any article of food at or below the temperature of 45° above zero (Fahrenheit) in a cold-storage warehouse; but does not include the first 10 days of the time during which the article of food is so stored or kept;

"(d) The term 'article of food' means—

"(1) Meat, meat products (including all edible portions of food animals), poultry, and game whether drawn or undrawn, poultry products, game products, fish, fish products, shellfish, oysters, and clams;—if fresh, cooked, prepared, cured, or frozen;

"(2) Eggs or portions thereof;—if in shell, dried, or frozen;

"(3) Butter, oleomargarine, lard, lard substitutes, butter substitutes, and cheese;

"(4) Oils for food purposes; and

"(5) Milk, evaporated or powdered;—

but does not include any such article not intended or designed for food purposes which is plainly and conspicuously marked in such manner as correctly to show the fact in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe;

"(e) The term 'cold-storage warehouse' means any place, including a car, vessel, or other vehicle, in which the temperature is artificially cooled to or artificially maintained at or below 45° above zero (Fahrenheit); but does not include a place used exclusively for storage of any article of food for the sole use of the occupant, owner, or maintainer thereof (1) for consumption by himself or his family or guests, or (2) in his business of serving meals, or (3) in connection with his retail business only, except that such place shall, in respect to any article of food held therein for more than 30 days in connection with such retail business, be deemed a cold-storage warehouse for the whole of the period of storage therein of such article;

"(f) The term 'warehouseman' includes any person maintaining or operating a cold-storage warehouse; and any person who rents and controls a room or space therein; and

"(g) The term 'mark' includes stamp, brand, tag, and label, and the term 'marked' includes stamped, branded, tagged, and labeled.

"SEC. 3. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person to ship, deliver for shipment, sell, or offer for sale, in commerce, any article of food that is or has been in cold storage, or to hold in cold storage in commerce any article of food, or, having received in commerce, to sell or offer for sale, in the original, unbroken package any article of food that is or has been in cold storage, unless such article of food is plainly and conspicuously marked, in accordance with this act and the regulations thereunder, in such manner as correctly to show (1) the words 'Cold storage,' except that these words may be removed immediately preceding a sale for consumption before the expiration of 30 days following the date when such article of food was first placed in cold storage, (2) all the dates when put in and when taken out of cold storage, except that if the Secretary of Agriculture finds it to be commercially impracticable to mark any article of food with the exact date, the day, but not the month or year, may be omitted, in which case the date when the article of food is placed in cold storage shall for the purposes of this act be deemed the first day of the month, and (3) the names and locations of all the cold-storage warehouses in which stored, or suitable distinguishing designations thereof approved by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose.

"(b) If any article of food which is required by subdivision (a) of this section to be marked is subdivided, or is in or is placed in a container, or is transferred to a different container, the person who is liable under this act for any failure to have such article of food marked, shall mark the subdivision or the container thereof in the same manner as provided by subdivision (a).

"(c) If (1) an article of food that has not been held in cold storage is mixed or mingled with an article of food, whether or not of the same kind, that is or has been held in cold storage, or (2) the containers of such articles of food are mixed or mingled, or (3) an article of food that is or has been held in cold storage is mixed or mingled with an article of food, whether or not of the same kind, that is or has been held in cold storage during a different period of time, or (4) the containers of such articles of food are mixed or mingled; then for the purposes of subdivisions (a) and (b) of this section and for the purposes of section 6, the dates required to be placed upon the article of food, if any, resulting from such mixing or mingling, or upon the containers so mixed or mingled, and from which the 12 months' period referred to in section 6 is to be computed, shall be those of that one of such articles of food which was first placed in cold storage, and the names and locations of cold-storage warehouses shall be those of all such warehouses in which each of such articles of food is or has been held in cold storage.

"SEC. 4. If the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the proper and customary manner of handling any article of food is such that it is commercially impracticable to mark the same or the container thereof in accordance with this act, the person otherwise required under this act to have the same so marked shall furnish or display, as the Secretary of Agriculture may require, to the receiver of such article of food a written statement, or an invoice or bill of lading or other shipping document, which shall describe such article of food, shall correctly state the facts otherwise required by this act to be marked, in the manner prescribed in the regulations under this act, and shall be preserved and be subject to examination by an officer, employee, or agent duly authorized under this act, for such reasonable length of time as the Secretary of Agriculture deems necessary for the purposes of this act; except that, in the case, under this section, of a sale at retail to the consumer, the facts required by clauses (2) and (3) of subdivision (a) of section 3 may be omitted unless otherwise requested by such consumer.

"SEC. 5. Except as otherwise permitted by this act, it shall be unlawful for any person (a) to alter, mutilate, destroy, obscure, obliterate, or remove any mark required by this act to be placed on any article of food or the container thereof, while it is in commerce or, having been transported in commerce, remains unloaded, unsold, or in the original, unbroken package, or (b) to alter, mutilate, destroy, obscure, or obliterate any statement, invoice, or document or portion thereof, required to be furnished or displayed, during the time the same is required to be preserved under section 4.

"SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any person to ship, deliver for shipment, sell, or offer for sale, in commerce, or to hold in cold storage in commerce, any article of food, or having received in commerce, to sell or offer for sale, in the original, unbroken package any article of food, after the expiration of 12 months following the date when such article of food was first placed in cold storage; except (1) that the Secretary of Agriculture may in such instances in respect to frozen eggs and portions thereof as he deems advisable, extend such period of time to not more than 18 months following the date when such eggs or portions thereof were first placed in cold storage, and (2) that the above provisions of this section shall not apply to cheese held for the purpose of ripening and improving the quality thereof.

"SEC. 7. The provisions of sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 shall not apply to any article of food shipped or sold or delivered for shipment to any foreign country, if in respect to the requirements of such section the article of food complies with the specifications and directions of the purchaser or consignee in such foreign country and is not in contravention of the laws of such country; but if the article of food be not actually exported this section shall not exempt such article of food from the operation of sections 3, 4, 5, and 6.

"SEC. 8. (a) No person shall receive in commerce any article of food for cold storage after the cold-storage warehouse in which it is to be stored is found by the Secretary of Agriculture, after due notice and hearing, to be insanitary or otherwise unfit for the storage of any such article of food. Such finding shall remain in force until the Secretary shall, after further hearing, determine that such condition has been remedied.

"(b) No person shall receive in commerce any article of food for cold storage in a cold-storage warehouse if such person has refused inspection, when requested under this act, of such warehouse; nor shall any person ship in commerce any article of food if he has refused inspection of such article of food when requested under this act.

"SEC. 9. In order to carry out the provisions of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture or any officer, employee, or agent specifically authorized by him in writing for the purpose may, on any business day during the usual hours of business, enter any cold-storage warehouse which receives, or from which is shipped or delivered, any article of food, in commerce, and may inspect such warehouse and the contents thereof, and any statements, books, papers, letters, or documents relating thereto.

"SEC. 10. (a) In order to carry out the provisions of this act and to provide information for the Congress, every warehouseman shall keep such records and accounts and make such reports, in such manner or form, verified under oath or otherwise, monthly and at such other times as the Secretary of Agriculture may require, as to the amounts, kinds, and ownership of any foodstuffs received, held, transported, or delivered by such warehouseman, loans made by such warehouseman upon the security of such foodstuffs, charges made by such warehouseman for storage and other services rendered by him, and the size or capacity of his warehouse. Any information obtained by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act shall be available for the use of either House of Congress, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause such information as may be of public interest to be published from time to time.

"(b) No person shall willfully (a) fail or refuse to make full and true entries or make any false entry in the accounts or records of his business required to be kept pursuant to this section, or (b) alter, mutilate, conceal, or destroy any such account or record, or (c) make any report required under this section which is false or fraudulent in any material particular, or (d) fail or refuse to make any report required under this section.

"SEC. 11. No person shall willfully hinder, obstruct, or resist the Secretary of Agriculture or any duly authorized officer, employee, or agent in the performance of his duties under this act.

"SEC. 12. Any person who violates any provision of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, 11, or 16 shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not more than one year, or both. After judgment of any court with respect to any violation of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture may give notice thereof by publication in such manner as he by regulation may prescribe. A person shall not be prosecuted for any violation of sections 3, 4, and 6, resulting from the act, omission, or failure of any other person not acting for or employed by him, prior to the time when the article of food involved came into his possession or control, if he shows that such violation was not knowingly committed by him and also (except in such cases as the Secretary of Agriculture deems necessary and advisable and shall by regulation prescribe), establishes a written guaranty signed by such other person who shall be a resident of the United States, from whom he obtained the possession or control of such article of food, to the effect that such article of food has not been in cold storage or that if it has been in cold storage and is apparently marked or represented in accordance with subdivision (d) of section 2 or sections 3 or 4 the marks or representations are true. The guaranty shall contain the address of the person required to sign it, and such person shall be amenable to the prosecution, fine, penalty, or imprisonment which would otherwise attach to the person to whom he delivered the possession or control of the article of food.

"SEC. 13. (a) When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any person acting for or employed by any individual, partnership, corporation, or association, within the scope of his employment or office, shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, partnership, corporation, or association, as well as of such person.

"(b) If any person acting for or employed by any individual, partnership, corporation, or association, negligently or willfully omits personally to perform any necessary act or properly to supervise or apportion duties among his subordinates, in the execution of the authority or functions vested in him, and by reason of such omission a violation of this act directly results, he shall be liable to all the penal and other provisions of this act with respect to such violation; but nothing in this subdivision shall be held to relieve the individual, partnership, corporation, or association from such provisions.

"(c) The provisions of this section shall be held to extend and not to limit the application of section 37 or 332 of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States,' approved March 4, 1909, as amended.

"SEC. 14. (a) Whenever in the case of any article of food being offered for importation, the Secretary of Agriculture has reason to believe that any provision of this act is being violated with respect to such article of food, he shall give due notice and opportunity for hearing thereon to the owner or consignee, and certify such fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon (1) refuse admission and delivery to the consignee of such article of food, or (2) deliver such article of food to the consignee pending examination, hearing, and decision in the matter on the execution of a penal bond to the amount of the full invoice value of such article of food, together with the duty thereon, if any, and to the effect that on refusal to return such article of food for any cause to the Secretary of the Treasury when demanded, for the purpose of excluding it from the country or for any other purpose, the consignee shall forfeit the full amount of the bond.

"(b) If, after proceeding in accordance with subdivision (a) of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture is satisfied that any provision of this act is being violated with respect to such article of food, he shall certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon notify the owner or consignee and cause the sale or other disposition of such article of food refused admission and delivery or entered under bond, unless it is exported by the owner or consignee within three months from the date of such notice, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. All charges for storage, cartage, or labor on any such article of food which is refused admission or delivery or is entered upon bond shall be paid by the owner or consignee.

"SEC. 15. Whenever it appears that any article of food in cold storage in commerce is in such condition that it is likely immediately to become or is unsound, unwholesome, or unfit for food, the Secretary of Agriculture may cause the immediate seizure of such article of food and thereupon shall at once cause notice of the facts to be given to the United States district attorney for the district in which the article of food is seized. Such district attorney shall proceed without delay against such article of food in any court of the United States in such district for confiscation by process of libel for condemnation. If in the opinion of the court the article of food is in such condition that it is likely immediately to become or is unsound, unwholesome, or unfit for food, it shall be immediately disposed of by destruction or sale as the court shall direct, but such disposition shall not be contrary to any law of the United States, or of the State, Territory, or District where such destruction or sale takes place. The proceeds of any sale under this section, less legal costs and charges, shall be paid to the person entitled thereto. The proceedings in such libel for condemnation shall conform as nearly as may be to proceedings in admiralty and shall be at the suit and in the name of the United States. For the purposes of this section the Secretary of Agriculture may cause investigations, inspections, analyses, and tests to be made and samples to be collected of any article of food in commerce. The Department of Agriculture shall pay to the person entitled, upon his request, the reasonable market value of any such samples.

"SEC. 16. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to designate in writing specifically officers, employees, and agents of the Department of Agriculture to administer oaths for the purpose of this act. All such officers, employees, and agents are authorized and empowered to administer to or take from any person an oath, affirmation, or affidavit for the purposes of this act, or for use in prosecutions or proceedings thereunder. Any such oath, affirmation, or affidavit, authenticated by the official seal of the Department of Agriculture, shall, when offered for use in any proceeding under this act or in any court of the United States, have like force and effect as if administered or taken by or before the clerk of such court, without further proof of the identity or authority of such officer, employee, or agent. No such officer, employee, or agent shall demand or accept any fee or compensation whatsoever for administering or taking any oath, affirmation, or affidavit under the authority conferred by this act.

"SEC. 17. For the enforcement of this act, the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available until expended, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the Secretary of Agriculture (a) is authorized to prescribe and promulgate such regulations as may be necessary; (b) may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person; and (c) shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

"SEC. 18. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage; but no penalty, fine, forfeiture, or imprisonment shall be enforced for any violation occurring within 90 days after its passage.

"SEC. 19. No provision of this act shall be deemed to repeal or limit the operation of any provision of any other act of Congress, unless directly in conflict therewith.

"SEC. 20. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to certain circumstances is held unconstitutional, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to circumstances other than those as to which it is held unconstitutional shall not be affected thereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"An act to prevent hoarding and deterioration of, and deception with respect to, cold-storage foods; to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate and foreign commerce; and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9521) to prevent hoarding, deterioration of and deception in respect to cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and submitted in the accompanying conference report.

The amendment of the Senate strikes out all after the enacting clause in the House bill. The House recedes from its disagreement therewith with an amendment which is a substitute for the Senate amendment:

Section 1: This section gives the short title of the bill, "United States cold-storage act." The title is the same in the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Section 2: This section contains the definitions:

(a) The House bill defines "person" to include an individual, partnership, corporation, and association. The Senate bill varies the language describing associations. The subdivision as agreed to by the conferees retains the House language.

(b) The House bill defines "commerce" so as to include interstate and foreign commerce. The Senate amendment and the subdivision as agreed to by the conferees retains the House definition.

(c) The House bill defines "cold storage" to include all storage in a cold-storage warehouse. The Senate amendment limits such storage to storage at or below the temperature of 45° above zero Fahrenheit in the warehouse and excludes storage space used for chilling or precooling for not more than 30 days for manufacture, sale, or transportation. The subdivision as agreed to by the conferees retains the Senate provision with the exception of verbal changes and the reduction of the period of 30 days to 10 days.

(d) The House bill defines "article of food" to include all foods except liquids, no matter what their condition or form. The Senate amendment limits the definition to fresh meat, including all fresh edible portions of food animals, fresh fish, fresh poultry drawn or undrawn, fresh game, eggs in shell or frozen, butter, oleomargarine, and butter substitutes. The subdivision as agreed to by the conferees makes verbal changes and adds to the Senate list cooked, prepared, cured, or frozen meats, meat products, fish, fish products, poultry products, and game products, and also shellfish, oysters, clams, dried eggs, lard, lard substitutes, cheese, oils for food purposes, and milk in other than in liquid form.

(e) The House bill defines "cold-storage warehouse" as any establishment artificially cooled to or below the temperature of 45° above zero Fahrenheit, and excludes from the definition an establishment used exclusively for the storage of food for the sole use of the owner for consumption by himself or his family or guests, in connection with his business of serving meals or his retail sale business. The House bill also excludes refrigerator vehicles from its definition of cold-storage warehouse; but a separate definition was provided bringing "refrigerator vehicles" within the act and including in the term any car, vessel, or other vehicle. The Senate amendment excludes refrigerator vehicles completely from its definition of cold-storage warehouse, and thereby from the act, and also excludes places used for chilling or precooling for manufacture, sale, or transportation. The Senate amendment limits the exception as to places used for storage in connection with retail sale business to places so used in respect to any particular article of food for 30 days only. The subdivision as agreed to by the conferees retains the provisions of the House bill including refrigerator vehicles and not exempting chilling and precooling space and the provisions of the Senate amendment limiting the exception as to retail sale business to 30 days.

(f) The House bill defined "warehouseman" to include any person owning a warehouse or renting or controlling any space therein. The Senate amendment contained no such provision. The subdivision as agreed to by the conferees retains the House provision.

(g) The House bill defines the term "mark" to include stamp, brand, tag, and label, and the term "marked" to include stamped, branded, tagged, and labeled. The Senate amendment and the subdivision as agreed to by conferees contains this provision with verbal alterations.

Section 3: The House bill makes it unlawful for any person to ship or hold in interstate or foreign commerce an article of food that is or has been in cold storage, unless marked with the words "Cold Storage," the dates when placed in and taken out of cold storage, and the names of the warehouses in which stored. The House bill further permits the removal of the words "Cold Storage" if the article is sold to the consumer within 30 days after it is first placed in cold storage, and makes provision as to the adjustment of marks in case of the commercial impracticability in marking any particular type of food, the mixing or intermingling of the articles of food, the subdivision of an article of food, or the placing of it in a container. The Senate amendment contains similar provisions with many verbal changes, and provides that the words "Cold Storage" may be omitted in the first place, as well as removed, in case an article of food is sold within 30 days after it is first placed in cold storage. Further, the Senate amendment did not limit such sale to the consumer. The section as agreed to by the conferees retains the House provision permitting removal but not the omission of marks in case of sale within 30 days after the article of food is first placed in cold storage, and also retains the provision of the House bill limiting such sale to the consumer. The section as agreed to by the conferees also retains, with the verbal changes necessary for clarification and rearrangement, the provisions of the House bill and the Senate amendment with respect to the commercial impracticability of making marks and the adjustment of marks in case of mixing or intermingling, subdivision, or placing in a container.

Section 4: The House bill provides that in case it is found commercially impracticable to mark any article of food or container, then the Secretary of Agriculture may permit a written statement or document accompanying the article of food to state the required facts as to the times and places of storage. The Senate amendment contains a similar provision with verbal changes and the limitation that in case of a sale to a consumer the dates and the names of the warehouses but not the words "Cold Storage" may be omitted from the statement or document. The section as agreed to by the conferees retains the Senate provision.

Section 5: The House bill makes it unlawful to alter or destroy any marks upon cold-storage food while in interstate or foreign commerce. The Senate amendment has a similar provision, which is retained in the section as agreed to by the conferees.

Section 6: The House bill makes it impossible for any person to ship in interstate or foreign commerce an article of food except cheese after the expiration of 12 months from the time when it was first placed in cold storage. The Senate amendment contains a similar provision, omitting the exception as to cheese, but providing different time limitations and restrictions in respect to imported eggs. The section as agreed to by the conferees retains the House provision with exceptions as to cheese and permits the Secretary of Agriculture to extend, in his discretion, the time limit from 12 to not more than 18 months for frozen eggs.

Section 7: The House bill exempts from the requirements of the act articles of food shipped in compliance with specifications and directions of foreign purchasers. The Senate amendment and section as agreed to by the conferees retains the same provision.

Section 8: The House bill prohibits the placing of articles of food in a warehouse found insanitary by the Secretary of Agriculture, after due notice and hearing. The Senate amendment has no provision upon this subject. The section as agreed to by the conferees retains the House provision with verbal changes.

Section 9: The House bill permits any authorized officer of the Department of Agriculture to inspect a warehouse, its contents, and books relating thereto. The Senate amendment and the section as agreed to by the conferees retain the same provision.

Section 10: The House bill requires monthly reports by each warehouseman as to the amounts of food and their ownership held in cold storage by him. The Senate amendment leaves the time of such reports to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture and extends the subject matter of the reports to the charges for the warehouseman's services and the loans made upon the security of foodstuffs stored. The section as agreed to by the conferees retains the Senate provision, together with the House requirement of monthly reports.

Section 11: The House bill forbids the obstruction of the Secretary of Agriculture or his officers in the performance of duties under the act. The Senate amendment and the section as agreed to by the conferees retains the same provision.

Section 12: The House bill provides a penalty of $1,000 or imprisonment for one year or both for violation of the act, but exempts from liability any person whose act, omission, or failure in violation thereof results from his reliance in good faith upon the act, omission, or failure of any other person with respect to marks or absence of marks upon the article of food or container. The Senate amendment provides the same penalties, but requires a guaranty certificate from previous holders of the article of food, in order to be exempt from liability because of their errors as to marking. The section as agreed to by the conferees retains the provision of the Senate amendment with verbal changes, and a provision permitting the Secretary of Agriculture to omit the guaranty certificate if he deems it advisable.

Section 13: The House bill and the Senate amendment contain comprehensive provisions varying in detail and language as to the liability of corporate officers for acts of their subordinates and of the corporation itself for the acts of its officers. The section as agreed to by the conferees contains a clarifying substitute to the same general effect for both the House and Senate provisions.

Section 14: The House bill provides for the exclusion from this country of imported articles improperly marked or otherwise shipped in violation of the law. The Senate amendment and the section as agreed to by the conferees retain the same provision.

Section 15: The House bill provides for the seizure and condemnation, by proceedings in rem, of articles of food held in cold storage which are likely immediately to become or are unsound, unwholesome, or unfit for food. The Senate amendment has no provision upon this subject. The section as agreed to by the conferees retains the House provision with verbal changes.

Section 16: The House bill provides that oaths and affidavits administered by officers of the Department of Agriculture may be used in court proceedings without further proof of the identity or authority of such officer. The Senate amendment and the section as agreed to by the conferees retains the same provision.

Section 17: The House bill provides for appointments and expenditures for the administration of the act, the issuance of regulations by the Secretary of Agriculture, cooperation with State agencies, and makes an appropriation of $50,000 for the fiscal year. The Senate amendment varies the House provision in extending the appropriation to $200,000, to be available until expended, and omits a requirement that preference in appointments be given to members of the military and naval forces. The section as agreed to by the conferees adopts the Senate provision.

Section 18: The House bill provides that no penalty shall be enforced for a violation occurring within 90 days after the passage of the act. The Senate amendment and the section as agreed to by the conferees retains the same provision.

Section 19: The House bill provides that the United States cold-storage act shall not be deemed to repeal or limit the operation of any other act of Congress unless directly in conflict therewith. The Senate amendment and the section as agreed to by the conferees retains the same provision.

Section 20: The House bill contains a provision as to the separability of the provisions of the act in case of the unconstitutionality of one provision. The Senate amendment and the section as agreed to by the conferees retains the same provision.

Amendment to the title: The Senate amendment amends the title so as to refer to foreign as well as interstate commerce. The title as agreed to by the conferees retains the Senate provision.

G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
JAMES YOUNG,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, among the controverted questions in the two bills is the definition of the "articles of food." The House bill defines "articles of food" to include all foods except liquids. The Senate amendment limits the definition to fresh meat, including all fresh edible portions of food animals, fresh fish, fresh poultry drawn or undrawn, fresh game, eggs in shell or frozen, butter, oleomargarine, and butter substitutes. By excluding the cooked, prepared, cured, or frozen meats, and so forth, as suggested by the Senate, it would practically eliminate about 95 per cent of the articles that enter into cold storage. It would seem that to write a bill excluding 95 per cent would, of course, not meet the requirements. In that matter there is a compromise.

The other contention is as to the time limit. Objection has been made to the 10 days' limit for marking the goods. There seems to be a misconception as to this provision of the bill. The bill allows 10 days for marking articles of food for shipment, and if they are sold to a retailer the retailer has 30 days in which to dispose of the article without marking. If the article goes into cold storage, however, and it is withdrawn within 30 days after the 10 days first allowed, the mark may be removed.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I want to ask the gentleman a question. In case a shipment from California or anywhere in the Southwest did not reach its destination until 12 days had elapsed, what effect would this law have upon that shipment?

Mr. HAUGEN. If over 10 days, it would have to be marked unless sold to a retailer. If sold to a retailer, no mark would be required, for a retailer has 30 days in which to dispose of it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. But even if it took over the 10 days' limit to reach destination——

Mr. HAUGEN. On page 2, subdivision (e):

The term "cold-storage warehouse" means any place * * * in which the temperature is artificially cooled * * * but does not include a place used exclusively for storage * * * in connection with his retail business * * * held therein for more than 30 days.

On page 1, subdivision (c):

The term "cold storage" means the storage or keeping of any article of food at or below the temperature of 45° above zero (Fahrenheit) in a cold-storage warehouse; but does not include the first 10 days of the time during which the article of food is so stored or kept.

Hence, the producer has 10 days to ship and sell to the retailer. The retailer has 30 days to sell to the consumer; all told, 40 days before marking is required.

Section 3 provides that the words "cold storage" may be removed immediately preceding a sale for consumption if before the expiration of 30 days following the date when such article of food was first placed in cold storage. In that way 10 days are given for cooling and transportation and 30 days are given to the cold storage by the jobber to sell to the consumer with the privilege of removing the mark.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. RAKER. For instance, a shipload of oranges and lemons was sent from California a month or so ago around by the way of the Panama Canal and it reached Baltimore in 21 days. If during that time they were in cold storage, would that be applicable to this bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. We have left fruits out entirely. They are not included in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Some of the produce dealers are protesting against this provision on the theory that it would take them several days to assemble, we will say, a carload of eggs, and at the time it reached destination in Chicago, Philadelphia, or New York the 10 days' limit would have expired, so that it would be necessary for them to be marked for storage; and then it gives the wholesale purchaser an advantage, in that while he can remove the storage mark if sold within 30 days, yet the small retailer is compelled to sell those eggs as cold-storage products.

Mr. HAUGEN. Objection is made by some to all marking whatsoever. Some believe that food products should be marked the first day they enter cold storage, some that they should be marked months afterwards, and others contend all marking is unnecessary. As the bill passed the House it required the marking the first day the product was placed in cold storage. The conference report gives 10 days for shipment and 30 days for sale by the retailer before marking is required. And if the foods are placed in cold storage and are removed from cold storage within 30 days the mark can be removed, giving altogether 40 days' time in which to dispose of them.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Did not the bill as it passed the House only provide for the marking of goods after they are placed in cold storage? In other words, you could put eggs produced in the West into a cold-storage car, and they are shipped to New York, and reach New York as fresh eggs; but under this bill they are to be considered cold-storage eggs when they get to New York, because they were shipped in a refrigerator car.

Mr. HAUGEN. The New York law requires that they be marked "cold storage" on the very first day they are placed in storage. That is the objection some have to this bill. In New York it is required that they be marked from the first day, because of the difficulty experienced by inspectors in ascertaining the time that they were placed in cold storage. They contend that the only safe way would be to mark them on the first day. We have compromised, however, and have given them 10 days for shipment and 30 days for disposal; but under the State law the first day such goods enter cold storage in New York they must be marked, notwithstanding the provisions carried in this bill.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. When they are shipped in a cold-storage car, how can they be marked the instant they reach the State line?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are then in commerce. As soon as they are in cold storage it is required that they be marked. If you ship and store in Minnesota, you must mark them the first day.

That seems to be the safest way to legislate against fraud and deception. But we compromised. It was the very best we could do. I believe it is a very liberal bill. I think it as liberal as it should be. The packers contend that it requires two or three days for precooling and shipping. So if the meat is precooled and disposed of to the retailer within 10 days the retailer will have 30 days in which to dispose of it without marking.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. How are these goods to be marked when they cross the State line? They are in cold storage in the car, which we designate as a place of cold storage. Are they stamped there?

Mr. HAUGEN. The bill provides for rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary to cover such matters.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. But they must necessarily be cold-storage eggs when they enter the market?

Mr. HAUGEN. When they first enter cold storage in New York and other States they are required to be marked "cold storage."

If you will refer to the reports of the hearings before the committee, you will find the State laws require:

(P. 475.) New York, section 336. "It shall hereafter be unlawful for any person * * * in the business of cold-storage warehousemen * * * to receive any kind of food unless the said food is in an apparently pure and wholesome condition, and the food or the package containing the same is branded, stamped, or marked in some conspicuous place with the day, month, and year when the same is received in storage or refrigeration."

And also makes it unlawful to allow it—

"To be taken from their possession without first having branded, stamped, or marked said foodstuff, or the package containing the same, in a conspicuous place, the day, month, and year when said foodstuff or package was removed from cold storage or refrigeration."

(P. 467.) Massachusetts, section 4. All articles of food when deposited in cold storage shall be marked plainly with the date of receipt on the container in which they are packed, or if not packed in a container, on or in connection with the articles, except fish.

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful to sell or offer or expose for sale articles of food which have been held in cold storage without notifying the persons, etc.

(P. 468.) Minnesota, section 1. No person * * * shall sell, agree to sell, or advertise for sale any cold-storage eggs without making it known to the purchaser * * * that the eggs are cold-storage eggs, and all boxes or other receptacles in which cold-storage eggs are sold or delivered, in wholesale or retail, shall be stamped in a conspicuous manner with the words "cold-storage eggs."

(P. 479.) Ohio, section 11. All food shall at the time it is deposited in any cold-storage warehouse bear the date of such deposit plainly stamped thereon. Such food shall also bear a stamp indicating the date of removal.

SEC. 12. It shall be unlawful for any person * * * to sell or offer or expose for sale * * * any cold-storage food unless there shall be placed on each container thereof in a conspicuous place in full view of the purchaser a placard with the words "wholesome cold-storage food." * * * In addition all such food shall be marked with the date when it is withdrawn.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I observe that this bill provides for an authorization of an appropriation of $200,000 for the purpose of administering the law. Does not the gentleman think it would take a great deal more than that to administer this law, and is not this merely the beginning of future great appropriations for regulation in an extensive manner of practically a private business?

Mr. HAUGEN. The enforcement of every law requires expenditures. We can not get away from that. The question is, Is it worth the price? Are the consumers entitled to the information that this bill would give or are they to be imposed upon as they have been in the past? Are they to continue to consume cold-storage food that has deteriorated and has become unfit for food?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Does not the gentleman think that in addition to the great amount of money that the Government will have to spend in the administration of this act it will involve large expenditures on the part of the men who conduct this business, and thereby add largely to the cost of living?

Mr. HAUGEN. We are spending millions every year for enforcement of the laws. Money is required to enforce any law.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. In transit between the Pacific coast and New York it would be impossible, would it not, under the provisions of this bill to mark poultry or eggs or anything as fresh products in the New York market?

Mr. HAUGEN. The New York law and this one would require that they be marked. If the gentleman can tell me how we can move one coast closer to the other, possibly we may overcome it. I take it that 10 days will give ample time in most instances.

Mr. MILLER. Does not the gentleman know that it takes more than 10 days to ship from the Pacific coast to New York?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes, by freight; but generally it is not shipped by freight, as I understand it. It might take more than 10 days in some instances.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Does not the gentleman think a bill of this sort, if enacted into law, will add to the advantage of the great packers and impede the transactions of small people, who will not want to go to the expense involved and into the detail made necessary under administrative rules and regulations promulgated under the law?

Mr. HAUGEN. In the last few days a great interest has apparently been manifested in the farmers and the small producers. For that reason I referred the conference report to the representative of the National Dairy Union. Let me read you what he says. This letter is from Mr. Loomis, the secretary of the National Dairy Union. I believe the letter speaks for the dairy people. I take it that many of you have received telegrams from a number of dairies and creameries. The National Dairy Union speaks for the creameries throughout the United States, and it would indicate that they are satisfied with it. I do not know from where this deep interest emanated, but I do know that the dairy people's representatives are satisfied. It is so indicated in this letter, which follows:

THE NATIONAL DAIRY UNION,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1921.

Hon. GILBERT N. HAUGEN,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I looked over the report of the conference committee on the cold-storage bill with some care and can find no reason for opposing the immediate passage of this bill.

There has long been need for regulation of cold storage in interstate commerce, bringing the Federal law up somewheres nearly to the level of public protection which is provided by the better State laws, and I am certain that this bill is a step in the right direction.

Yours, sincerely,

A. M. LOOMIS, Secretary.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Is it true that under the definition of cold storage as written by the conferees in their bill, after an article has been in cold storage for eight days it may then be shipped without any regard to the provisions of this measure?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not quite understand what the gentleman is aiming at. We do not propose to prevent the shipping or require the marking of articles held less than 10 days. If an article of food is held in storage more than 10 days and is shipped in interstate commerce, it comes under the regulations of the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In section 3 of the bill, where it provides for marking, there is this provision:

Except that if the Secretary of Agriculture finds it to be commercially impracticable to mark any article of food with the exact date, the day, but not the month or year, may be omitted, in which case the date when the article of food is placed in cold storage shall for the purposes of this act be deemed the first day of the month.

What character of food is contemplated, where it says a character of food that it is found impracticable to mark the exact date upon it?

Mr. HAUGEN. Where articles are shipped in bulk. For instance, there might be a number of articles of food——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Eggs are shipped in bulk.

Mr. HAUGEN. They are shipped in cases.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In cases, yes; but in bulk.

Mr. HAUGEN. It requires that the container of the eggs shall be marked.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What character of food is referred to? I suppose the conferees had something in mind when they inserted the language. What character of food is it, where it is found impracticable to mark the exact date?

Mr. HAUGEN. For instance, in a shipment of fresh meat there might be a number of pieces placed in storage at different dates, so that it might be impracticable to mark each article.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Poultry, for instance?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; poultry.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is frequently shipped in bulk.

Mr. HAUGEN. Wherever the Secretary finds it commercially impracticable to mark any article of food with the exact date he may permit them to omit the day, but not the month or year, in which case the article of food shall be considered to have been placed in storage as of the first day of that month, instead of the exact day; but bear in mind that it is optional on the part of the person so placing it in storage.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. A case of eggs would have to be marked with the date when it was put in storage.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is there anything requiring the former to show when the eggs were laid?

Mr. HAUGEN. The bill does not cover that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The eggs might be very old when placed in cold storage. How does this prevent that?

Mr. HAUGEN. We are only dealing with cold storage in this bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I understood the gentleman to say that when the goods were put into cold storage at the end of the journey, then they were cold-storage property. Is it not a fact that they are cold-storage property if they are in transit in excess of 10 days? They do not have to go into actual cold storage to make them cold-storage property, do they?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are cold-storage products at the expiration of the 10 days. They have 10 days before they are required to be marked as cold storage.

Mr. McFADDEN. Suppose there is a shipment of eggs from the gentleman's State, fresh eggs, to New York, and it gets there in 12 days. The shipper would stand the loss because the eggs would then be sold as cold-storage eggs.

Mr. HAUGEN. They would have to be marked under the New York law and this bill. How would he stand a loss?

Mr. McFADDEN. Because they are cold storage.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; they are not required to be marked unless they have not been in cold storage 10 days or in the hands of the retailer more than 30 days. But if marked, the certificate of the date is a certificate of the quality. From now on it will not be possible to sell eggs that have been in cold storage a year or more as fresh eggs.

Mr. McFADDEN. If any of the component parts have been in cold storage in the process of manufacture, the storage record must follow clear through to the consumer. So that candy manufactured from butter and sugar must be marked clear through.

Mr. HAUGEN. Candy? No; that is not included.

Mr. McFADDEN. Not if the butter is included in it?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; if it is not mixed with any article of food that is included in cold storage.

Mr. McFADDEN. Like sausage, for instance?

Mr. HAUGEN. Sausage is a meat product and must be marked.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I notice that the gentleman stated a while ago that they had 30 days during which the cold-storage marks might be removed. And section 3 provides that cold-storage words may be omitted in the event that before the expiration of 30 days, following the date when such article of food was first placed in cold storage, it may be removed in order to be sold.

Mr. HAUGEN. And that is 30 days after the 10 days. The first 10 days' period can not be counted as cold storage.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is true; but is not that a change, is it not inconsistent?

Mr. HAUGEN. The goods are not called cold storage until 10 days have elapsed, or they are not cold storage for an additional 30 days. If they are in a refrigerator owned by a retail dealer, then no mark is required. If placed in cold storage after 10 days and removed within 30 days, the words "cold storage" may be removed.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. But later on, in section 3, you expressly provide that except that on these goods the marks may be removed immediately before the expiration of 30 days of the date when such goods were placed in cold storage. It occurs to me that there is a conflict.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; there is no conflict there, because under the definition of cold storage the goods are not in cold storage until after 10 days.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Under the provisions of this bill would it not be that the buyer of eggs from the poultry man or farmer after 10 days buys them at a price that is based on cold-storage goods? And would not the consumer who buys eggs up to 30 days have to pay the full price for such eggs as fresh eggs? In other words, the middleman gets a rake-off to which he is not entitled and which belongs fairly to the farmer.

Mr. HAUGEN. I imagine that from now on the consumer will ask for the marks and will know exactly when the goods were put in cold storage. He will know whether they have been there 30 days or 12 months.

Mr. BRIGGS. Under this provision is it not a fact that the dealer within 30 days can rub off the marks?

Mr. HAUGEN. If in cold storage, if he sells to the consumer, he may remove the marks. If in the hands of the retailer, no mark is required.

Mr. BRIGGS. If the eggs have been in cold storage 10 days, is it not true that the price the dealer will give the poultry man or the farmer for those eggs will be only the price of the cold-storage product, and then, within 30 days, sell them to the public as fresh eggs with the cold-storage mark removed?

Mr. HAUGEN. The marks indicate the date when they went into cold storage and——

Mr. BRIGGS. Why did the conferees prescribe 10 days for the dealer and 30 days for the consumer? In other words, why should the eggs remain in cold storage 30 days as far as the consumer is concerned and be fresh goods, and as far as the dealer is concerned only be fresh eggs for the first 10 days?

Mr. HAUGEN. When the bill passed the House it required the marking the first day the goods were placed into cold storage. The Senate provision gave 30 days; we compromised on 10 days for shipment and 30 days in selling by retail dealers.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the gentleman think the Senate provision is more equitable than the conference provision?

Mr. HAUGEN. Ten days seems to be all that should be required.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman give me five minutes?

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill defines cold storage as the keeping of any article of food at or below the temperature of 45° above zero in a cold-storage warehouse, and then says it does not include the first 10 days of the time during which the article of food is so stored or kept. Catch that. Cold storage—article of food in a cold-storage warehouse, which is subsequently defined not to include the first 10 days. Then it defines a cold-storage warehouse as any place where food is kept under artificial temperature of 45°, and that includes a car in transit as well as a real warehouse. It then provides that the retailer who receives the food within 30 days from the date marked upon it may remove the marks, and provides further that all the dates when put in and when taken out of cold storage shall be marked upon the food, except that if the Secretary of Agriculture finds it commercially impracticable to mark any article of food with the exact date, the day, but not the month or the year, may be omitted. The day may be omitted, but the month or the year must be marked, in which case the date when the article of food is placed in cold storage shall for the purposes of this act be deemed as the 1st day of the month.

If an article of food is placed in cold storage on the 30th day of January, in a case where it is impracticable to mark the date, it will be presumed for the purposes of this act that it was placed in cold storage on the 1st day of January, and then no part of the bill that exempts the 10 days applies, and no part of the 30-day provision applies, because for the purposes of this act it was placed in cold storage 30 days before it actually was placed in cold storage; and any article that is shipped by rail after the 10th day of the month, no matter how quickly it gets to the market, goes to the market as a cold-storage product, where it is commercially impracticable to mark the exact date on the article.

I confess I do not know just what that provision applies to, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], as far as I could gather, thought it would apply to any article shipped in bulk—poultry, not alive; butter, in many cases; eggs, perhaps; meat, perhaps. Any article which can not be definitely marked with the date because it is commercially impracticable can not be shipped a minute after the 10th day of the month without being marked cold storage. I have no doubt that that was an inadvertence on the part of the conferees. I have no doubt that they did not see that result. It is not fair to give a man who places an article in a refrigerator car on the 1st day of the month preference over a man who places his in a car on the 11th day of the month. They both ought to come under the same terms. If one is to have his goods marked cold storage, the other ought to have his goods marked cold storage, but under the terms of this bill the man who places his goods in the car on the 1st day of the month does not have to mark them cold storage, and during a 30-day period he can tear off the marks in the hands of the retailer; but if he puts them in after, then it is presumed that they have been in cold storage for 10 days before he has put them in cold storage at all. That is not fair.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McNARY presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Sam A. Kozer, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of House joint memorial No. 11 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Thirty-first Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon and filed in the office of the secretary of state February 11, 1921, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 11th day of February, A. D. 1921.

[SEAL.] SAM A. KOZER,
Secretary of State.

House joint memorial 11.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, the Senate concurring, respectfully represent this:

Whereas there is a long strip of country along the southwestern coast of Oregon that has no adequate shipping facilities and the country is greatly retarded by lack thereof; and

Whereas the people of Port Orford, Curry County, Oreg., have organized a port district and have built a wharf at Port Orford at a cost of $40,000; and

Whereas by a small expenditure of money a breakwater of approximately 500 feet in length could be built from a point near the present wharf to a point of rock in the ocean that would allow the largest vessels afloat to land at the wharf at all seasons of the year; and

Whereas there is a great demand for Port Orford cedar, and southwestern Oregon is the only part of the world where said cedar grows, and there is at present no proper shipping facilities for this and other products in said vicinity: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, memorialized to take the necessary steps to have a survey made of the port of Port Orford with the view of making said breakwater or jetty.

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Oregon be directed to transmit by mail a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oregon in Congress.

Adopted by the senate February 10, 1921.

ROY W. RITNER,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house February 2, 1921.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Oregon, in regular session assembled, respectfully represent that:

Whereas your honorable body has under consideration a bill compelling every manufacturer, or handler, or seller of woolen fabrics and woolen garments, to place thereon a tag plainly stating the exact percentage of virgin wool and also how much and what other materials enter into such cloth; and

Mr. McNARY. I present a resolution of the Lincoln Club of Jackson County, of Medford, Oreg., in relation to compensation of ex-service men of the World War, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Finance and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LINCOLN CLUB OF JACKSON COUNTY,
Medford, Oreg.

Whereas the World War, like the great Civil War, was one fought to determine whether nations conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created free and equal can longer endure; and

Whereas the millions of splendid young Americans who made it possible for the allied nations to be successful willingly offered their lives, if need be, and sacrificed business careers and chances for advancement in their chosen work; and

Whereas the difficulties of readjustment are causing in many instances suffering and privations to those patriotic young citizens: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the Lincoln Club of Jackson County, the representative Republican organization of southern Oregon, place ourselves on record as being heartily in favor of any feasible plan to recompense, as much as we possibly can, the ex-service men of the last war; that we appreciate what they have meant to America and to the world; and that we feel that all of them should have the care and protection which this great Nation can afford; and be it further

Resolved, That we favor the fourfold plan of adjusted compensation, the one most likely to furnish these men quickest and most comprehensive relief.

THE LINCOLN CLUB OF JACKSON COUNTY,

COLORADO RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask leave to present a report sent me by the State engineer of Nevada relative to a bill that was introduced by me and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, dealing with the utilization of the Colorado River. I ask to have it published in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It is not very long. I merely wish to have it appear in the RECORD for the benefit of Senators who are interested in the matter.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEVADA,
ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
Carson City, February 16, 1921.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
Senior Senator from Nevada, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PITTMAN: Attached find certain data on the Colorado River situation which may be of interest to you. Please inform me as to your progress in interesting the Senators from the affected States in forwarding our proposed measure, copy of which is also inclosed.

Memorandum relative to the distribution of costs and benefits resulting from the proposed construction of a large storage reservoir on the Colorado River.

NOVEMBER 17, 1920.

The Kinkaid Act, passed by Congress in May, 1920, entitled "An act to provide for an examination and report on the condition and possible irrigation development of the Imperial Valley in California," instructed the Secretary of the Interior to formulate a policy for this great enterprise, and particularly to make recommendations to Congress as to the extent to which in his opinion the United States should contribute to the cost of carrying out the plan; also the approximate proportion of the total cost which should be borne by the various irrigation districts or organizations now formed, or which may organize in the future and the manner in which their contribution should be made.

The Kinkaid Act carried an appropriation of $20,000 for further investigations of Imperial Valley irrigation possibilities, conditioned on provision for at least one-half the cost of the investigations being provided for by associations and agencies interested in the lands of the Imperial Valley. The Imperial irrigation district has made a contribution of $40,000, and the board of public service of the city of Los Angeles has offered additional funds that may be necessary for the adequate completion of the study in time for report to Congress during the present winter.

Borings are being made for a dam site in what is known as Boulder Canyon, a narrow granite gorge through which the Colorado River passes situated near the extreme southern end of the State of Nevada. If the foundations prove satisfactory, it is proposed that a dam be constructed at this point for a possible maximum height of 600 feet, which would provide a storage capacity of approximately 25,000,000 acre-feet—sufficient to regulate the flood flow of the Colorado River above that point and provide a water supply sufficient to irrigate all lands reached by gravity below it, either in the United States or Mexico.

The importance of the problem can scarcely be overestimated. A conference was called to consider this subject in August, 1920, by Arthur P. Davis, Director of the United States Reclamation Service. About 100 delegates were present who were in favor of proceeding with the construction of the dam if it is found feasible to build it.

The writer has been requested to prepare this memorandum for the Colorado River committee of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce as to an equitable manner of distributing the costs and benefits that might result from this enterprise.

Fundamentally the main and controlling feature of this project should be considered as the irrigation of arid lands. The power that will be produced, which will be of great volume and value, should be generated in accordance with the irrigation demands. The various irrigation districts, mutual water companies, and corporate holdings of lands situated in California, Nevada, Arizona, and Mexico, should ultimately be the owners or holders of the title to the dam and reservoir, together with its accessories.

A study should be made of the necessities of each of these various units for additional water supplies based (a) upon the amounts which they respectively now have available from the natural flow of the river, and (b) the additional amount which they will require when each is fully developed. The relation of the additional irrigation water, if any, which each of these different units will require to the aggregate regulated water needed for the entire area, including all lands in Arizona, Nevada, Colorado, and Mexico, would represent the proportionate benefit which each unit would receive from the reservoir project and also their relative contribution or liability for the cost of the work. This association of units, which could be called a conservation district, either directly or through the agency of the United States Reclamation Service, would install and operate the power plant connected with the project, wholesaling in block the electric energy so developed, both to the units themselves as required, to distribution companies, transportation companies, and to municipalities. The revenues derived from this sale of power should be considered as a credit to the enterprise which would tend to substantially reduce the cost of the irrigation water supply to the conservation district.

If this great reservoir is constructed on the Colorado River, it will practically control the danger from flood damage for the irrigated areas between such reservoir and the mouth of the Gila River. The Gila, however, would not be controlled by this reservoir, and this stream is subject to extreme and violent floods almost equal in volume to the flood flows of the Colorado River itself above the Gila. The floods of the Gila do not synchronize, except upon rare occasions, with those of the Colorado. The high-water stages of the Colorado occur in May, June, and July, which, fortunately, is the period when irrigation water is most required, while those of the Gila are apt to occur in the early spring or later in the summer.

It is suggested that the flood-protection problem for each one of the units should be separately considered and an estimate made on the cost of completing the works under present existing conditions for their protection against flood damage. When the dam is built, or at the time of its completion, a separate estimate should be made for each unit of the cost of flood protection for it with the stream regulation that will follow the completion of the dam. In the units above the mouth of the Gila this saving will be shown to be substantial, but below the mouth of the Gila it will be relatively much less, because these lower areas still will have to be protected against the erratic and violent floods of the Gila. The saving in the cost of these flood-protection works that will result from the construction of the large reservoir should be assessed against the various units and credited to the cost of the project for the benefit of the conservation district.

The problem of the distribution of the irrigation water on the various units is local and one to be solved by each one of these communities separately and administered by them individually.

These various units should be so organized as to have the power of issuing bonds. They should be called upon to contribute to the conservation district bonds in an amount sufficient to cover their benefits as outlined above. The conservation district in turn should deposit these bonds together with any securities or assets that might be available in the form of power contracts with the proper officials of the United States Government as security for funds to be advanced by the Government for the construction of the works. The contribution of the Federal Government to the enterprise would thus consist in obtaining a low rate of interest, perhaps 5 per cent, on the money that is necessary for the installation of the works.

In addition the Federal Government will be interested in obtaining a water supply for many acres of arid public lands, especially around the perimeter of the Imperial Valley and in the Colorado River Indian Reservation in Arizona. In this capacity it should contribute toward the enterprise on the ratio of the benefits received by such unit areas for a complete water supply therefor. Under the provisions of existing laws these public lands can be included in a State irrigation district, and can only be taken up from the United States subject to the bonded debt of the district in which they are situated. This offers the opportunity for the Government to obtain a refund for the moneys advanced for the irrigation and flood protection of these public lands.

According to this program the older districts on the river which at present have a fair water supply will only be assessed on the basis of such additional water as they may require for periods of the year when such supply is now insufficient, and districts that have completed their levee systems, so that they are satisfactory, as in the case of the Yuma project, will have little, if any, assessment against them for the construction of such flood-protection works.

In conclusion, the controlling feature of the enterprise should be considered as irrigation and the costs should be distributed according to benefits received.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT.

NEW YORK STATE BARGE CANAL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 161) to exempt the New York State Barge Canal from the provisions of section 201 of H. R. 10453, which were, on page 1, in lines 10 and 11, strike out "within said 30 days, or as soon thereafter" and insert "as soon"; on page 1, in line 11, after "as," where it occurs the second time, insert "is"; on page 1, in line 11, strike out "all"; on page 1, in line 13, after "canal," strike out all down to and including "buy," in line 15; and on page 2, in line 1, strike out all after "same" down to and including "final," in line 8, and insert:

Provided, That all the money obtained from the sale or lease of these boats, barges, and tugs shall be available until expended by the inland and coastwise waterways service of the War Department in the inauguration and development of other inland, canal, and coastwise waterways in accordance with the expressed desire of Congress in section 500 of the transportation act, 1920: Provided further, That not to exceed 25 per cent of the boats, barges, and tugs built or purchased for the United States, herein authorized to be sold, may be retained by the United States for the operation of other inland, canal, or coastwise routes of the United States, until such equipment can be replaced by other equipment to be purchased from funds received from the sale prescribed above.

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to exempt the New York State Barge Canal from the provisions of section 201 of the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15943) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 809) thereon.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 663) fixing the term of service of Elijah C. Putnam during the Civil War, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 810) thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 13944) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 811); and

A bill (H. R. 14063) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 812).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 5031) for the relief of the heirs of Robert E. L. Rogers; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 5032) for the construction of a bridge across Rock River at or near Shirland Avenue, in the city of Beloit, Wis.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 5033) for the relief of settlers and town-site occupants of certain lands in the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, Nev.; and

A bill (S. 5034) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey title to certain lands in the State of Nevada; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill. I do not wish to call up the report at this time, but merely submit the report in order that it may be printed in the RECORD.

CLASSIFICATION OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, on March 22 last Senate bill 4106, to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and the standardization of compensation therefor, and for other purposes, was introduced by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], of the Congressional Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries. The bill on being introduced, together with the report of the Reclassification Commission, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I was not present in the Chamber when the bill was introduced and the report of the commission presented or I should have asked that the bill and report be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, where they properly belong.

The bill provides for legislation in regard to the various branches of the civil service in the District of Columbia. I call attention to just two or three of the subjects covered in the bill. First, "allocation," providing that "the commission shall, as soon as practicable, designate the class within which the position of each employee should be placed in accordance with the duties of such position." Another subject is "amendments to classification." Another subject is "compensation." Other subjects are "efficiency ratings," "promotion appointments," "hours of service," "transfers," and other kindred subjects pertaining to the civil service.

I think it very obvious that the bill should go to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. It was not properly referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the consideration of the bill and report and that they be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall object to that request.

Mr. STERLING. Then, Mr. President, I move——

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. STERLING. I move, then, that the bill and the report be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to say that at the earliest opportunity I shall renew my motion that the bill and report be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 48, after line 16, to insert:

For the investigation and development of methods for the prevention of grain-dust, smut-dust, and other plant-dust explosions and resulting fires, including fires in cotton gins and cotton oil mills, $25,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, my inquiry has really been answered by glancing at the RECORD, although I was of the impression that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] had asked that the first amendment on page 48 go over, with the understanding that it would be taken up this morning. May I ask if the Senator from Wisconsin would object to taking the amendment up now? It would be a very great accommodation to me, I will say to the Senator, as I have an important conference waiting for me, and I should be glad to have the item now disposed of. I ask unanimous consent, with the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the first amendment on page 48 may be now considered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am willing that the item shall be disposed of this morning. I only expressed the wish that it go over until this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood from the discussion last night that the committee was willing that the amendment striking out the item should be disagreed to, and if the Senate thought proper, that the appropriation should be increased from $23,500 to $50,000. If there is no objection, the Chair will put the question on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment striking out "$23,500" and inserting "$50,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on striking out the House text as amended.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The House text now stands in the bill, with $50,000 appropriated.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 48, after line 20, to insert:

For the study of processes and methods of home tanning of lace and other leathers used on the farm, $15,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota as to the preceding amendment, the one which was just agreed to, whether there was an estimate made for the item which reads:

For the investigation and development of methods for the prevention of grain-dust, smut-dust, and other plant-dust explosions and resulting fires, including fires in cotton gins and cotton oil mills, $25,000.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I will say to the Senator there is a larger estimate than the sum appropriated. I think the estimate was for $100,000. I will look it up in just a moment.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire what lace leather is? I know there was a species of "home tanning" in vogue when I was a small boy, but that was some time ago. Since then home tanning of lace and other leathers seems to need recognition. What is the home tanning of lace leather? Who knows?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not artistic.

Mr. GRONNA. There was an estimate made for the item.

Mr. THOMAS. It is not the estimate about which I am inquiring. I want to know what lace leather is.

Mr. GRONNA. I was trying to answer the inquiry of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. THOMAS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SMOOT. I had asked the Senator from North Dakota if there had been an estimate for the item beginning in line 17, on page 48.

Mr. GRONNA. There was an estimate for $100,000 for this purpose this year. Last year's bill carried $23,500 and the House inserted a like provision in this bill for $23,500.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not mean the item in regard to dehydrating materials. I referred to the item "for the investigation and development of methods for the prevention of grain-dust, smut-dust, and other plant-dust explosions."

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that there is an estimate for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to be a new item in the bill, and I was wondering whether we were going to enter upon that line of work.

Mr. THOMAS. That is a superfluous inquiry. We are.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We have, according to the impression of the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS. We have.

Mr. SMOOT. I was fearful of it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will read from the letter of the department in regard to the item for the prevention of grain-dust explosions. This is a new item; it was recommended and estimated for, but was not included in the House bill. The department says:

Plant-dust explosions and fires have resulted in large losses of life and property. The educational work based on the department's researches, which has been carried on during the past three years in cooperation with the United States Grain Corporation, was terminated July 1, 1920. The results of the campaign were very gratifying, and during the three years that the Grain Corporation operated it suffered no extensive explosion or fire losses. The fact that at practically no time was the value of stocks in storage less than $100,000,000, and that at certain times it reached approximately $500,000,000, shows the importance of the saving thus effected, to say nothing of the safeguarding of human life.

I will say to the Senator that the estimate was for $50,000.

Mr. SMOOT. There was, then, an estimate for it?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; the estimate was for $50,000, as will be found in the Book of Estimates, on page 276. We cut that estimate in two, however, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] suggests.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the same question as to the amendment found on page 48, lines 21 and 22, reading as follows:

For the study of processes and methods of home tanning of lace and other leathers used on the farm, $15,000.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator will find the estimate on page 276 of the Book of Estimates, as follows:

For investigating the utilization of agricultural raw materials in the production of leather, tanning, and leather-making materials, and for developing and demonstrating improved methods or processes for producing leather, $15,000.

The committee changed the wording a little, but the item was estimated for.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] made an inquiry a moment ago as to what was meant by lace leather. It is leather derived from a peculiar form of tanning available for lacing belts, shoes, and so forth.

While I am on my feet I wish to call attention to the fact that I do not believe there is an item in this bill that is possibly fraught with more benefit to the country at large than the item which will enable the department to attempt to find some method by which people can relieve themselves of the intolerable burdens placed upon them in connection with the purchase of their leather and leather supplies, including shoes, and so forth. I do not believe there is a Senator on this floor who does not recognize that of all the oppressive and iniquitous combinations in this country, the shoe and leather combine is perhaps the worst. I understand that there is being worked out a system of tanning by which local and small industries and possibly the home may be afforded some kind of relief from this intolerable burden.

We were told that we had an oversupply of hides, and so we took the duty off of hides; we took the duty off of leather and shoes, but the price went up, showing that there is no relief from this iron-bound combination.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator must be mistaken about that; he can not mean that following the removal of the duty the price of leather went up.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Surely.

Mr. THOMAS. That is a political impossibility.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It may be a political impossibility, but it is a commercial fact.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado directed to me an inquiry as to what lace leather is.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from South Carolina gave me the information, which is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that this is an item in which the farmers generally are very much interested. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is very anxious to have this provision in the bill. Lace leather is used very largely in the sewing together of belts of all kinds, and is also used in mending and repairing harness. I farm on a somewhat large scale, and, of course, perhaps I use more of this leather than does the ordinary farmer; but I will say to the Senator from Colorado and to the other Senators that sometimes I use in connection with my farm work $25 worth of lace leather in a single day.

The hides that the farmers produce are worth practically nothing to them. I received an invoice of hides shipped by a farmer in South Dakota a few days ago, which I put into the RECORD, and from which it appears that the hides netted the farmer less than 1 cent a pound. Lace leather costs the farmer from $1.50 to $3 a pound. If by the expenditure of $15,000 we can teach the farmers how to tan the hides in a practical manner—and calfskins and light-weight hides are being used for lace leather—and to use them on the farm, there will be a saving of millions of dollars to the farmers throughout the country. It is a practical proposition, and I can not see why there should be any objection to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, my comment upon the item was not an objection, because I have long ago ceased to make objections to items in the Agricultural appropriation bill. I simply wanted some information with regard to the character of material which the Government is to study at a cost of $15,000 a year to the taxpayers.

Long ago we reached the point where any activity upon a farm, no matter where it may occur or what the activity is, at once proceeds with lightning speed to the city of Washington for an appropriation and for paternal investigation by the Government at so much per year. In the good old days when farming was farming, when farmers were not farmed as they are nowadays, the methods of securing for themselves needed articles both of production and of manufacture proceeded quite as well as if not better than since it has become what might be called an appropriation industry.

If it be true that the placing of leather upon the free list has resulted in its increase of price, then it must follow that the chief benefit to be derived by legislation in that regard is to put a high duty upon it and bring down the price. If that result would follow I might be induced to vote for a very high rate of protection. It is, of course, very important, if possible, to develop methods for the prevention of grain-dust and other explosions and resulting fires; but the destruction of gins and other factories engaged in the treatment of cotton by the incendiary fires that have punctuated the Associated Press dispatches for some time, and which seem to be designed to compel a restriction in cotton production, might also become the subject of investigation by an appropriate amount to be devoted for that purpose by the Congress, and which, perhaps, might also produce some very startling if not beneficial results.

I was greatly struck yesterday by a new method of securing appropriations in this bill. That is to produce some samples of the particular subject that is sought to be sweetened by an appropriation and pass them around to Senators. We had some figs and some dates yesterday, which cost the people of the United States just $10,000. Hereafter I have no doubt that when this bill is to be considered the Senate Chamber will be converted into a delicatessen store, and each Senator will have behind him his wares, goods, and merchandise to be passed around and sampled by the lawmakers, whose votes will be influenced to some degree by the palatable nature of the commodity which is sought to be protected. I hope that will not be extended to the animal department of this bill. You know we now make large appropriations for the purpose of exterminating predatory animals. There is one predatory animal whose presence in the Chamber might change its atmosphere and result in a stampede instead of an appropriation, so I hope the line will be drawn by those who desire to secure appropriations hereafter by confining the exhibits entirely to vegetables and fruits.

These two appropriations, Mr. President, will become permanent from now on. We shall be investigating and developing methods for the prevention of grain-dust and other dust explosions and resulting fires in the good year of our Lord 2222, provided always the Treasury has anything to appropriate by that time; and from now on the Agricultural Department will make a perpetual study of the processes and methods of home tanning of lace and other leathers.

It is one of those perpetual-motion investigations which has one beginning, but no end; and 50 years from now the aggregate amount of the appropriations made for these purposes, which, of course, will increase in constant progression, will be sufficient at least to make us realize that something has been done by the Government in that direction.

Mr. President, I have received a letter from a man who professes to be a farmer, and I think he makes his profession good. He seems to take a different view of the status of the farmer and of his financial condition from that which prevails in this Chamber, and which is always dwelt upon with eloquent unction whenever an appropriation is desired to assist the agricultural industry. I ask leave, as part of my remarks, to introduce it in the RECORD, together with a communication of this gentleman to the Nebraska State Journal of December 16, 1920, entitled "Ill-advised legislation." It will be a sort of an oasis in this desert of widespread and constantly increasing items of appropriation for the farmer. While it will do no good, it will serve to relieve my mind just a little.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter and communication will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

VILLAGE FARM,
Funk, Nebr., December 25, 1920.

Senator THOMAS.

DEAR SIR: I am inclosing a letter that was published in the Lincoln State Journal recently, inasmuch as so much is being said about the "distress of the farmer" which is purely buncombe. I believe you will be interested in the history contained in this letter. I want to say that if anyone will come here in this country that has been cursed in past years with almost repeated crop failures I will show him many men, renters in the past, who 10 years ago were worth practically nothing, who are comparatively rich now, and so with every farmer who made the most of his opportunities, like the laboring man, who by the big wages has gotten a taste of the better things of life and becomes discontented because he fails in the full fruition of his ambition. So the farmer, urged on by the professional agitator, is discontented because he is checked in his onward advance toward large wealth. I am a Republican, have entertained Senator NORRIS in my home, he and I once were very good friends, but I do not send this to him because he is the "farmers' friend," from a vote-getting standpoint, and facts and logic would have little weight with him. I send it to you because I have always admired your courage and fearlessness in standing against the fads and foolishness put up by the dreamers and theorists and would-be wreckers of this country. I am extremely sorry that you are not going back, as in times of stress and turmoil our country needs such men as you.

Yours, truly, L. T. BROOKING.

P. S.—This section of country I speak of lies between Hastings and Oxford, and Funk is 200 miles west of Omaha.

THE PUBLIC MIND—ILL-ADVISED AGITATION.

FUNK, NEBR., December 14.

To the EDITOR OF THE STATE JOURNAL:

With the governors and senators in our West talking about conditions being "critical" and "tragical" for the farmers, and demanding that something must be done immediately for their relief, with some of the farmers talking the same way, we may begin to wonder to what condition of mind are we drifting. When men seem to have lost either their reason or their memories.

I built the first house in our little town 33 years ago, and being in the grain-elevator business for 18 years was in constant touch with the farmers, and in conditions surrounding them. I am now trying to make a living on 6 acres of land, and in a position to prosper or otherwise, the same as the farmers, by the rise and fall of prices. I have a good remembrance of past crops and prices, hence I believe I am fairly well qualified to take an impartial view of the present conditions. I can well remember the struggle for existence the farmers of this community had, and myself as well, through the period of 1894 and 1895, years of crop failures and low prices. I can well remember the bumper crop of corn, and the disastrous hailstorm that destroyed the small-grain crop of 1896; how I bought 140,000 bushels of corn at 9 cents per bushel of that crop—1897 and 1898 came with fairly good crops, but the price was still extremely low; 1899, 1900, and 1901 came with almost total failures, much corn had to be bought at advanced prices and the freight to pay. The big crop of 1902 came and the wheat was sold at an average price of around 50 cents per bushel. The corn was frozen the 12th of September and little or none marketed; good crops followed until 1907, and from this period we had eight dry years with short crops and much corn shipped in.

This brings us up to the wet year of 1915. During all these years of short crops, with the exception of one year when wheat reached the dollar mark, price for wheat was considerably below $1, and very little corn to sell, and some years it was shipped in. Just how our farmers managed to get through all these years of failure and low prices and at the same time reconstruct this country from a country of sod houses and sod outbuildings to a country of the finest farm properties the sun ever shone upon is a story well worth the efforts of some historian to tell, but not for me to undertake in this article; but they did it, and under the most adverse conditions.

The period from 1915 up to the present I need not dwell upon, it speaks of prices; prices that in the past periods were never dreamed of even by the wildest agitator, but when we consider the crops and prices of the years up to 1915 and all that was accomplished by the sturdy industry, the undying grit and tenacity of our pioneers, and consider the good crops and in a comparative sense the fabulous prices that all farm products have been bringing for the last five years, it is beyond my comprehension how any man can be so lost to the true condition as to use the terms "critical" and "tragical."

While our crops in this section of the State for the past five years could be called good, they have been better both east and west of us, and this section can well be taken as a criterion if any real distress was apparent. Outside of some who may have mismanaged and some who may have had a large share of ill luck, the situation is not "critical" or "tragical"; it is not even serious; a large majority of the farmers will not make the usual money this year and are doomed to disappointment, but all those who have not gotten deeply in debt by buying more land and who have conducted their business in a prudent way can pay every dollar they owe and have money left. During the war the Government officials spoke in terms of billions instead of millions, and so we have gotten the habit of speaking in terms of thousands where we formerly spoke of hundreds, and sums that formerly seemed large seem very small to us now, and added to this is the politician who wants to pose as the "farmers' friend" for the votes there is in it, and knows that the shortest route to this consummation is to be constantly taking the part of the dissatisfied farmers, whether there is any basis for the discontent or not. Then we have the promoter who adds to the farmers' discontent with the hope of getting $18 for this, $10 for that, and $2.50 for the other. Surely the millennium is dawning for the farmer if he gets the one-hundredth part of what is promised him. A lot of these agitators—and some may be sincere, but, in my judgment, shortsightedly—seem to think that the only way the farmers can get justice is to organize a gigantic farmers' organization, with the express object of entirely controlling legislation. This is what the Federation of Labor has been striving for, and to which we have all so strenously objected. If carried out according to promise, we have a government by class and not a government by all the people, and threaten the downfall of our Republic or a state of class and business demoralization. No class, whether labor, farmer, or business, can be trusted with power; it at once becomes autocratic; and even the class in power would not prosper as under our present government by all the people.

If the agitator would go to work and earn an honest living without trying to make it out of the people's discontent, this period of reconstruction would work out, as water finds its level; so would prices eventually. We know there is much injustice and inequality; too many making too much and too many making too little. Some have too much and some not enough. We know all these things, and if any remedy that is safe and sane and in justice to all classes can be applied we can all favor it, but let us look with suspicion upon all agitation that tends to upset the order of things and to bring about class power. The credulous man who is in poor health and has failed to get the expected relief from his old reliable family physician falls an easy victim to the traveling quack, who has a remedy for every ill and who promises relief at so much per bottle; and so the dissatisfied, credulous man is quick to patronize the political quack who has a remedy for every economic ill, and hence the stock in trade of these political charlatans is to create discontent by enlarging upon existing evils, and many that do not exist, and I believe if these agitators did not exist there would be but little discontent at the present time; that they are the chief cause, and not because any appreciable number of farmers are in distress. I am in daily touch with many farmers, retired and active, many of them are not discontented, but inclined to compare the present prosperous times with times past, that I have mentioned.

They take a philosophic view of conditions. They are proof against the traveling charlatan and take a hard-headed, sensible view of the situation. This agitation is not caused by the present depressed prices of farm products, but was started when wheat was $2.30 and corn around a dollar. This is a very significant fact, and plainly shows the hand of the element I have mentioned. The best friend of the farmer is the man who is trying to get all classes to pull together in a united effort to keep this Nation of ours big in a big way. To keep business going, to keep labor employed, thus making a market for his products, to discourage all efforts to tear down and upset the order of things, for as all classes depend upon each other, so distress to either one reacts upon the other, who preaches contentment to him instead of inflaming his passions, who encourages him to have faith in himself and in our institutions, to have faith in the future of his business, to have faith in the men selected to handle the big affairs of the Nation, and not to put a blind faith in the ax-grinding politician and promoter who is after his earnings and who fattens upon his discontent. Let us all get rid of this "get-rich-quick" notion and settle down to business; let us try and reason out this problem in a spirit of unselfishness, as nearly all wars are the result of selfishness; so this organizing of class against class is based upon selfishness, and while many favor it who are in favor of exact justice, the level-headed man knows that class power will never stop at that and that class power means autocracy and nothing else in the practical application. I have never had any political aspirations and am not guided in my expressions by how many votes of any class that I may get, hence I am free to say what I believe to be true, and I believe that the men who are so freely expressing themselves about the distress of the farmers are not guided by the true facts, but are either political demagogues or have not gotten the real facts of the situation. I have observed that the farmers who are the loudest in expressing their discontent are the ones that have made the big money in the last five years. When this reconstruction period is over it will be found that a hundred business men will have gone bankrupt to every one farmer, we will all be thinking in terms of hundreds instead of thousands, will be burning a little less gas, will be satisfied with a little less profit, and the people of this part of the State, who changed this from a country of sod houses in a period of adversity to a country of the finest farm homes in America, will not go bankrupt, will not suffer any distress as long as we have reasonable production and prices we can reasonably expect. Some may be induced to take the medicine mixers' medicine, but in the long run his industry, his tenacity to stick and farm, his desire to own good homes for himself and stock, his capacity for economizing when necessary, is going to take him through all emergencies, regardless of all the calamity howlers on earth. I have this faith in a big majority of the farmers, whose condition is not "critical" or "tragical."

Respectfully,

L. T. BROOKING.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask that the estimate of the department be read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

LEATHER AND TANNING INVESTIGATIONS.

Page 46, between lines 22 and 23, insert:

"For investigating the utilization of agricultural raw materials in the production of leather and tanning and leather-making materials and for developing and demonstrating improved methods or processes for producing leather, $15,000."

This is a new item. It was proposed in the estimates but not included in the bill reported from the House committee.

Work on leather and tanning materials has been carried on in a small way by the Bureau of Chemistry for many years, but the desirability of making special provision for an investigation of this type is particularly important in view of the scarcity of leather and leather-making materials at the present time. The long-used vegetable tanning materials, which are direct products of the forest and farm, are totally inadequate under present conditions to supply the country's needs and others should be sought and developed. No investigations of leather and leather-making materials can be properly organized and completed which do not consider the composition and effect of the various tanning materials on the wearing qualities of leather.

Large quantities of hides, skins, and tanning materials are imported annually, much of which would be unnecessary if all the leather made in this country were of better quality. About one-third of the hides and skins used in this country are now supplied by country butchers and farmers. Owing to carelessness and lack of knowledge in curing these hides and skins, it is estimated that the farmers and country butchers lose annually $15,000,000, while the loss to the country in leather value is probably more than double that amount.

The work contemplated under this item has primarily an agricultural significance. The interests of agriculture in raw materials for leather making, in tanning, and in leather and leather substitutes are paramount, since the agricultural industry supplies nearly all the raw material and the farming population is the largest single class of consumers of the finished products. There are few industries more closely related to agriculture than that of tanning, and any research work in the field of tanning must be based primarily on agriculture. Owing to the discrepancy between the present low price of hides and the continued high price of leather, the department is now flooded with inquiries from farmers and others regarding the possibility of home tanning in a small way. The department desires, if this item is approved, to make some experiments along the line of developing processes for tanning on the farm. Whether or not such processes are practicable can not be determined without experimentation. If such a process can be worked out, it would result in a great saving to the farmers of the country, either by permitting them to do a great deal of their own tanning or by exerting its influence in maintaining a more equitable relation between value of raw material and of finished product.

Other countries have found it necessary to undertake investigations of the character proposed under this item.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I should like to say just a word in support of this item. I was one of the Senators on the Agricultural Committee who were responsible for the insertion of the item.

I doubt if there is in the bill any small item like this $15,000 which will do more practical good to the farmers than this one, and I speak as a farmer—not that I dig in the ground myself, but I have a plantation, and use a good deal of leather. On one of my recent statements of current expenses I noticed that hame strings were charged at 50 cents each—50 cents for a single hame string!—and there are a great many hame strings used on every farm every year. We use a great deal of farm machinery now, and in that machinery and connected with it are a number of belts. It is absolutely necessary to lace the leather belts with lace leather. The belts themselves are made of leather, and they are laced with lace leather. There is a very large quantity of leather used on every farm, and leather is one of the most expensive things that farmers have to buy.

There is hardly a farm that does not slaughter every year a few head of cattle for home consumption, and at the present time, when the farmers are unable to sell their hides, I see no reason why they should not tan or dress on the farm leather for home consumption. It would save them a very material sum every year. In the aggregate, on the millions of farms in this country, it is my candid belief that millions and millions of dollars would be saved if the farmers could be taught how to tan the leather at home, especially lace leather. I am certain, from my practical knowledge and experience on that subject, that it would be very beneficial; and I do not believe there is a single item in this bill that would be of more substantial, practical, everyday benefit to the farmers than this. I sincerely hope it will be kept in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any doubt but that the item will be kept in the bill. But I have not the same faith the Senator from Louisiana has with reference to its great benefits. Of course, I know, Mr. President, that under it there will be some people employed to run around the country. But the idea of appropriating $15,000 to find out some new process for tanning leather, when America is renowned the world over for the best processes of tanning leather. There is no secret about it. Everybody interested knows how it is accomplished.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would appreciate very much if the Senator would give me his recipe for doing it. I have been trying to get one. I have a number of hides on my plantation which I could not sell for anything. I do not believe I could give them away. I believe they would be in the same class as the sheep sent from Montana the other day, which netted 32 cents a head in the Chicago market after paying all expenses. I believe I would have to give my hides away in just exactly that same manner. I have been trying to get a recipe for tanning so that I could send it down to my manager, and I finally got a long document from the Department of Agriculture, which is so difficult to understand and apply that I am not going to ask my plantation manager to try to understand it.

The Senator says everybody knows how to do it. I ask him right now to please send me his recipe, so that I can use it on my plantation.

Mr. SMOOT. Everybody does not know a process by which one hide can be successfully and profitably tanned, nor will anybody ever find such a process. Mr. President, this is going back to the ages when every housewife knit her husband's socks, and darned them with the wool taken from the sheep's back, when she washed it and carded it and spun it into yarn, and then wove it into cloth and then made the cloth into suits. Nobody could possibly take one hide and make leather out of it profitably to himself or to anyone else.

The Senator is speaking of the letter from the Agricultural Department, which nobody could understand, in answer to one sent by him, a letter which will not be clarified by the item under consideration. Continue this appropriation of $15,000 for the next hundred years for the same purpose, and increase it each year if you will, and at the end of the hundred years there would be nobody in all the world who could understand it any better than the Senator does to-day. So, Mr. President, this is but the beginning of a new appropriation to employ certain people to run around the country to pay a visit to the farmer and talk as to how the weather is and how the children are——

Mr. THOMAS. Not the weather, but the leather.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the weather. Leather will be very, very far removed from the discussion that will take place. If there was any real chance of getting any benefit for the farmer or anyone else, I would not object to the appropriation. But the idea is absurd that a farmer will kill a calf and have it skinned and take that skin and try to tan it under any process that was ever known or ever will be known. Business is not carried on to-day on that scale. It would cost him more than its weight in silver dollars.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, for the information of my friend the Senator from Utah I want to inform him that there are quite a number of people in my State, and I expect a few in his State, who are doing that now. I refer to the American Indians. They know how to tan, and they are doing it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the American Indians take a buck's skin and tan it, and that is about the only thing they have ever tanned and they have given that work up lately.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the American Indian knows how to do this, should not this appropriation be made for him, and should we not set him to work on the plantations in Louisiana and in North Dakota?

Mr. RANSDELL. If the American Indian could be induced to give the recipe for tanning buckskin to the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Agriculture could issue a plain, simple bulletin, not to send men all around the country, as the Senator from Utah suggests, but just issue a plain, simple bulletin giving the home recipe of the American Indian, that would be fine, it seems to me. I know when I was a boy we used to kill a good many deer in my section, and we would get the nearest Indian to dress the deer skins for us. They were wonderfully useful. I have not seen a dressed deer skin for many years, but if I could get cow hides or calf hides dressed as well as those deer skins were dressed, it would answer my purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. No Indian ever tanned a cowhide or a calf hide. The only reason the Senator sent his deer skin to the Indian was that it did not cost him anything for the Indian to treat it, for he simply made a frame and stretched the skin to the size of the frame and dried it out. Neither the Senator nor anyone else living in his State could afford to take the time to follow that slow process. The Indian did not make a cent a day out of it. All he got out of it was that at the end he sold it for 50 cents or a dollar, and the Indian considered himself that much ahead.

The American people are not going back to the Indian style of making buckskin. No Indian ever made any leather. I know, of course, the prices charged for lace leathers, which has been referred to by the Senator from North Dakota. Mr. President, I was superintendent of a woolen mill, which had all of the machinery necessary for an 8-set mill requiring 400 employees. Some of the belts required were over 24 inches wide and all of the machinery was driven from the main shaft by belts, and the lace leather never cost us $75 for a whole year running 24 hours every day. I can not understand why the Senator was compelled to pay $25 for lace leather for a few thrashing machines running a few weeks each year.

Of course, it is perfectly useless trying to get an appropriation cut out of the bill, but I did want to say that if the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] remains in the Senate for 30 years, at the end of 30 years he will find this item in the Agriculture appropriation bill, if it goes in now, except that it will be for an increased amount.

Mr. President, on page 48 of this very bill the first item we find is:

> For investigating the grading, weighing, handling, transportation, and uses of naval stores, the preparation of definite type samples thereof, and for the demonstration of improved methods or processes of preparing naval stores, in cooperation with individuals and companies, including the employment of necessary persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $10,000.

I remember when the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] stood upon the floor of the Senate and asked for that appropriation about six years ago. He said he thought the appropriation ought to be made, and it would not take more than $10,000. As I remember, two years ago, when a similar appropriation was under discussion, he said, "Well, just let it go in once more." It went in once more. It is in again once more, and, Mr. President, as long as the Senate will vote for this appropriation it will remain in once more.

I do not know any reason why such an investigation of naval stores should be made now, nor why it should have been extended beyond the first appropriation. I can not see why we should throw $10,000 away for that purpose. I only point to this item to show that whenever an appropriation gets in the bill it will remain in, no matter whether it is necessary or whether it is unnecessary.

I am not saying this particularly as affecting the pending bill. It is about the same in every appropriation bill. This is no different from the other appropriation bills in that respect. When once the items get into the bill, Mr. President, it is almost impossible to make a change. Of course, if the Senate wants to put this item in, well and good.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the adoption of this amendment, but I can not help feeling that there seems to be a disposition among some of the Senators here to attack every little item in this particular bill. I realize as much as anyone here does that we are perhaps trespassing upon the great industries of the country if we are to teach the farmers of the country how they will be able to manufacture some of the leather to be used on the farms.

I realize that if we do that we will take from the profits of tremendous concerns, and I am not trying to prevent these huge corporations from making profits. I am not trying to legislate so as to prevent them from going on and making profits. But only yesterday we passed a bill which involves at least $350,000,000, according to the statement of the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. We had to limit the time in order to pass that little bill.

I know that the large corporations in the country will attack anything we are trying to pass in this body which affects their interests. I know there is not a single paragraph in the Agricultural appropriation bill where it affects the packers which they do not oppose. I do not guess on this, because I have talked with them.

You may ridicule a provision in the bill appropriating a small amount to teach the farmers how to tan lace leather and other kinds of leather, but let me say to you that if conditions do not change the only way the farmers will get leather will be to tan it themselves. They will not have the money to pay $3 a pound for lace leather tanned by the big packers.

Mr. President, this question deserves much more than simply ridicule. It involves the welfare of at least 7,000,000 farmers of this country, because they all use this product more or less. I am somewhat sick and tired every time an item of this kind is brought before this body to hear some of these very able Senators, who are all friends of mine, attack it by ridiculing it. I very often myself ridicule things with which I am the least familiar, but I find by a careful study of the matters which I attempt to ridicule that they have merit in them.

I have no more interest in this item than anyone else, but the Senator from Utah is attacking this proposition. In his first statement he said, "Everybody knows about it now," and then when the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], who was deeply interested in it and who is really the father of the amendment, asked him for a recipe, the distinguished Senator from Utah was unable to give it.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Mr. President; the Senator from Utah can give a recipe very easily. It used to take a year, when the people first went to Utah, to tan a piece of leather, but that was absolutely necessary, as we could not get leather in any other way, and that is the length of time it will take the Senator from Louisiana with the processes to be investigated under this appropriation.

Mr. GRONNA. Then perhaps the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Utah can get together, and if they can I will ask that this item be passed over. Perhaps we can save $15,000.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I would like action on it now. I am afraid the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Louisiana would never get together on a simple, practical little item like this. We want it for the benefit of the farmers.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] suggests to me we could not get together unless it was on sugar. I do not know about that; but if that is the case, I am glad there is one thing on which the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Louisiana can get together.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know whether we could get together on sugar.

Mr. RANSDELL. Well, I am a little disappointed then.

Mr. SMOOT. I, too, get a little tired, the same as the Senator from North Dakota gets a little tired, when he and other Senators take the floor and rant and rave about the industries of the country. As to this item, there will be no more competition with the packers than there would be for a baby a day old competing with a man in the full bloom of manhood. I do not know what the Senator from Louisiana wants to do, but if he thinks that leather is made the same as buckskin is made by the Indians, of course I have not any complaint to offer as far as he is personally concerned. His judgment may be that he can get something out of the appropriation of $15,000. I have no doubt that perhaps there will be men visiting his city and stopping at hotels and drawing $4 per diem, with a salary attached of $1,800 or $2,000. That would happen, and there is no doubt about that. So far as the results of their labors are concerned, little would come from them. I expect to live for at least a quarter of a century, but I have no more idea of ever seeing favorable results come from this appropriation than that I shall die to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 48, after line 25, to increase the appropriation for general expenses of the Bureau of Chemistry from "$944,561" to "$973,061."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 26, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Chemistry from "$1,275,251" to "$1,303,751."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 6, to increase the appropriation for chemical investigations of soil types, soil composition, and soil minerals, the soil solution, solubility of soil, and all chemical properties of soils, etc., from "$23,110" to "$33,110."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 13, after the word "supply," to strike out the word "of" and insert "and methods of obtaining," so as to read:

For exploration and investigation within the United States to determine possible sources of supply and methods of obtaining potash, nitrates, and other natural fertilizers, $86,840.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am very much surprised to see such an item in the Agricultural appropriation bill. Is not that amply taken care of by the appropriation for the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines? I know that both those branches of the Government are engaged in that work, and I can not see any possible use of the appropriation here.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, but we have our nitrate plant built now ready to operate. However, the item went in once and it must remain in the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If it were not otherwise provided for I should say that the appropriation was a most commendable one, but we are engaging in a branch of work here, embarking the Agricultural Department in a line of investigation, that is certainly not appropriate at all to its functions and is peculiarly appropriate to the functions of the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Department of Agriculture have been making investigations in the same field. They were instructed to do so. In 1916 they made a report on the fertilizer situation and the report ought to be on the desks of Senators to-day, just submitted by the Department of Agriculture, showing the sources of supply and the materials entering into commercial fertilizers. They are actually making experiments.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Geological Survey have issued numerous bulletins concerning the supply of potash and nitrates in the country, many of which have been referred to from time to time on the floor here. Bear in mind, I commend the investigation as one that ought to be encouraged, but we are certainly embarking the Agricultural Department in investigations that are particularly appropriate to mining operations.

Mr. FLETCHER. In some respects it pertains to mining operations, but in other respects I think the investigation does not, because the Agricultural Department is making experiments now in the matter of developing potash, nitrates, and acids for reducing potash into sulphate of ammonia, ammonium potash, and so forth. I think they are doing a very important work in that line. I believe it will be well to keep it up for the present at least. I am sure that it is a splendid work.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, there was an appropriation carried several years ago in the Agricultural appropriation bill to enable the Department of Agriculture to determine the commercial value of kelp on the Pacific coast. They have made extensive investigations and their reports from time to time have given to the public full knowledge of the possibility of the different processes of obtaining potash from the kelp weed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from South Carolina will permit me, that is entirely proper. Kelp is an agricultural product, it is a plant, and the chemists of the Bureau of Agriculture might very properly take into consideration the question of how they could extract from plants this useful basis of fertilizer. That, I think, might find some justification, but it is proposed here to conduct explorations for the purpose of locating deposits, mineral deposits, deposits of nitrate and of potash. I am a little surprised that phosphates, in which the Senator from Florida would be interested, are not included in this, except in the basket clause, as well as nitrates and potash. It seems to me that an appropriation to determine the availability of kelp, a plant, as a source of material for fertilizer would form no justification whatever to carry on mining explorations for the purpose of locating other sources of supply.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not understand that this means an investigation of the mining possibilities. As the Senator from Montana knows, the sources of supply of these ingredients are limited. Nitrates and potash are items that are not found in any great abundance like the phosphates are in the great mines in Florida and Tennessee. No investigation would improve that situation, because they are easily obtainable and in almost inexhaustible quantities. But the other two ingredients are more or less difficult to find.

As to the potash situation, I understand there is quite a source of potash obtainable from the by-products in the process of manufacturing sugar. There is also a considerable quantity of potash discovered in the process of reducing coal to coke. There are vast fields open for investigation in the legumes. As I understand the proposition, it is not to restrict nor to any great extent to go into the question of our mineral supplies, but it is the broad question of ascertaining where the supply may be obtained from other than and including that if they shall find it is profitable to do so.

I think the Senator from Montana will appreciate the fact that this is a field that is germane to the Department of Agriculture and in no sense would it necessarily duplicate the work of the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines and Mining. It leaves it open for them to find the ingredients, whether from a vegetable source or a mineral source, as they may have opportunity so to do. The kelp beds, the legumes, and other sources that would not fall within the field of the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines and Mining should be left open. In my opinion the appropriation should be granted.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from South Carolina correctly understands the situation if he intends to convey the impression that the appropriation means any work in connection with the study of the process of obtaining potash from kelp. That is covered by another item in the bill. There is a plant now operating in the State of California. Ample appropriation has been made for the study of that source, I am informed, at the top of the next page of the bill. I think the appropriation in the item under discussion is not even used for the purpose of studying the habits of the nitrates that may be obtained from leguminous plants. I think it is used perhaps in connection with some other department of the Government to ascertain and locate and work out certain mineral deposits in the Western States that may contain these elements. For instance, in the State of Utah and in the eastern part of the State of Oregon and in other Western States there are large deposits containing some of the nitrates, and I know that the Government, through this department, has been working with those minerals to ascertain if it is feasible to use the rock product and elements as a plant food. I think to that extent only is this contemplated, and I think the appropriation should be made for the very great service that the department is rendering the Government in that line.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question at all that it is a duplication of work. The work ought to be done by the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey. Those are the agencies that have the whole subject matter in charge. Potash deposits are frequently found on public lands, for instance.

Mr. FLETCHER. Neither of the services actually makes experiments, as I take it. They merely locate deposits and map and plat them, and that sort of thing, and show where the product possibly can be obtained, but the Department of Agriculture has a bureau which actually experiments with these different elements to determine the commercial value of the product.

Mr. SMOOT. The Bureau of Mines make experiments in every way, shape, and form. In the West they have a little experimental plant built in the State of Utah. There was a company formed in Utah for the purpose of extracting potash from the waters of the Great Salt Lake. I think they spent about $600,000, but potash has dropped so now in price that all of their investment is lying idle. There is not a thing being done at that plant. Unless the price of potash increases, of course, they will lose all their money.

The Bureau of Mines was created for the very purpose of working out plans for the extraction of valuable minerals, and they are doing it successfully. They are doing it as far as nitrates are concerned. No one can secure title to a piece of land containing nitrates unless he complies with the laws of the United States. Not only that; a patent will never be issued, but a lease might be secured, but not until an examination and ascertainment is made of the value of it for minerals, and that examination is made by the Geological Survey. We have nearly all of the lands of the West classified now as to whether they are grazing lands or whether they are mineral lands, or whether they are agricultural lands, and each class can only be utilized by complying with the laws affecting each class of land.

The Bureau of Mines, I understand, have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars for the investigation of certain rock deposits in New Jersey for the purpose of demonstrating the feasibility of extracting potash from the same. They had all sorts of experiments made, and I know they have done similar work as far as the West is concerned. Take the item of extracting oil from shale. Who is doing that work? The Congress is appropriating the money and giving the authority to the Bureau of Mines to do the work, and I think the Bureau of Mines is doing the work just as well as it is possible to be done. They have spent thousands of dollars in experimenting in extracting oil from shale. They spent thousands and tens of thousands of dollars in developing the nitrate deposits in America.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that Congress for many years has appropriated large sums of money for experimental plants to develop the potash industry, and especially the extraction of potash from kelp. This year there is no appropriation for that purpose, except $5,000 to take care of the machinery. If the Senator will permit, I wish to show to the Senate the large sum of money that is being saved. The only paragraph of which I know in this bill that contains any reference to this particular subject is this item.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that thoroughly. Let me ask the Senator, before he interrupts me, why is not the department asking for an appropriation for investigations in regard to extracting potash from kelp?

Mr. GRONNA. I want to say to the Senator that they are asking for an appropriation for that purpose. In the Book of Estimates, on page 169, it will be found that the department has made an estimate for $208,500 for that purpose. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that there was an appropriation in 1919 of $127,600 for that purpose; in 1920 there was a like amount; in 1921 there was appropriated $192,900, and this year the estimate is for $208,500. All these paragraphs have been combined; there is only this one appropriation of $86,000, and an appropriation on the next page, which the Senator will observe, of $5,000. That is only to take care of the machinery in the kelp plants. It seems to me that the least we can do is to give the department this one appropriation, for they certainly must have it.

I wish to say to the Senator that I have gone into this question quite thoroughly. The Department of Agriculture has some very able and distinguished scientists who are now working on the question of developing potash, and no one knows better than does the Senator from Utah how important that question is.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but the Senator from Utah also knows that the Geological Survey has the best scientists that it can get in the world, and so has the Bureau of Mines, and they are doing exactly the same work.

So far as the extraction of potash from kelp is concerned, I am very glad that that appropriation has been eliminated. They have succeeded in producing potash from kelp, which is a vegetable substance, and nobody objected to that originally being in the Agricultural bill; but this item proposes to have the Agricultural Department enter the domain of the Bureau of Mines and of the Geological Survey.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator from Utah object to the appropriation? It is a House appropriation. The only amendment which the Senate committee made was to insert certain words.

Mr. SMOOT. When the time comes I hope that some Senator will move to strike out the whole provision.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I call the Senator's attention to a report which was just laid on our desks in reference to this subject?

Mr. SMOOT. I have a copy of that report.

Mr. FLETCHER. I knew the subject was going to come up this morning, and I asked to have the report distributed. It is a report from the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Senator will find, on page 16, just what has been done by the Department of Agriculture under the heading:

IV. A report on investigations made and results since the publication of Senate Document No. 262, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, on January 26, 1916—

I find this statement:

When President Taft took cognizance of American dependence on Germany for all of the potash entering American fertilizers through serious difficulties which had arisen regarding contracts and prices between American manufacturers and the Government-controlled potash syndicate in Germany, Congress granted an appropriation for the Bureau of Soils to make investigations of the fertilizer resources of the United States, including a search for potash.

Following that is a statement which shows that they have done a very important work.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; they claim that they should have credit in connection with the work done at Searles Lake and also in connection with the extraction of potash from the salt waters of Nebraska; but I want to say to the Senator that they have done nothing in that respect that the scientists in the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines have not done.

Mr. FLETCHER. I take it they use all the information they can get from the Bureau of Mines and from the Geological Survey as well as from all other sources.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the trouble about it. There should be but one Government agency for the collection of this information, and there ought not to be any other source. There should be no further appropriations other than for that one source which should collect the information.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does not the Senator from Utah think that the matter of fertilizer is one which peculiarly pertains to the Department of Agriculture, determining the source of fertilizers, the elements which enter into plant food, and the way to develop them and to make them available for the producers of the food of the country on reasonable terms? That, it seems to me, belongs to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah believes that the great bulk of potash produced in the United States—and this statement will be true as to the future—has come from the extraction of potash or nitrates from the rocks which are found in the everlasting hills of the West. That whole question is in the hands of the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines. They have the scientists there, and they pay them for the purpose of making these investigations.

It seems to me that this work should not be placed under the Department of Agriculture, for the scientists in that department who have been educated to study questions relating to plant life, growth, and development, and other matters connected with products of the soil are not the proper ones to handle it. It takes men who have studied for years and years along a particular line, who have studied the geology of the country, and more than likely have spent their early lives in the mines of the West. It takes practical men, and when such men are hired by the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines, if we can not get the information from them, there is no need of the Government expending money to have a duplication of the work in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, reference has been made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the report just issued by the Department of Agriculture pursuant to the resolution of the Senate No. 435, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain as nearly as possible, and to report to the Senate as soon as practicable, the following: The amount of commercial potash, nitrogen, and phosphoric acid available for fertilizer purposes, and the price of each of these articles as compared with the prices for 1913, as shown by data in the office or that can be secured without material expense.

Reference was made then to the report at page 16, from which I read, as follows:

The Bureau of Soils made a thorough investigation of surface indications of potash salts and nitrate of soda deposits in the Western States and a more general investigation of the salt deposits of the Northern States. These surveys, with the exception of Searles Lake and some of the smaller lakes, gave indications of no workable deposits of potash salts occurring as such or of nitrate of soda. The bureau reported, however, on the possibilities of the commercial production of potash from the giant kelps of the Pacific coast, the deposits of Searles Lake, Calif., the saline lakes of western Nebraska, the dust from cement mills and from blast furnaces, the feldspars, green sand marls, wool waste, alunite, beet-sugar waste, and distillery waste. The bureau pointed out that the commercial success of extracting potash from all of these sources at prewar prices depended upon the utilization of by-products.

Mr. President, if the Department of Agriculture did make any such investigation as that, the money expended on it was practically thrown away, because the Geological Survey had years ago undertaken and carried out with its able corps of assistants exactly that kind of an investigation. It has located as accurately as it can all of these deposits in the Western and Northwestern States, and the information they have obtained is available to any Member of Congress in bulletins of value published by the Geological Survey.

Now, with reference to Searles Lake, the deposits there have not only been made the subject of repeated reports by the Geological Survey, but investigations by Congress have been conducted time and again as to that remarkable deposit, and the information thus derived is available.

Mr. SMOOT. And special legislation was passed by Congress in order that the salt deposits there might be worked.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Precisely, and we need only to turn to the reports of the Bureau of Mines and of the Geological Survey to ascertain from that source that this work is being conducted by them. I refer to the last report of the Geological Survey, and I find among bulletins published during the year just passed, Bulletin No. 715-A, Potash Deposits in Spain, by H. S. Gale. A memorandum says:

Potash was discovered accidentally in the salt deposits of the Province of Barcelona, in the northeast corner of Spain, in 1912, though the salt deposits themselves had been known for a hundred years.

The memorandum proceeds with a brief description of what is contained in the bulletin.

Then, Bulletin 715-B, The Potash Deposits of Alsace, by H. S. Gale.

That bulletin describes the potash deposits of Alsace.

Turning now to the report I read as follows:

Field studies of reported deposits of potash and nitrate in the Pacific Coast States and in the Southwest, by H. S. Gale, L. F. Noble, and G. R. Mansfield, not only contribute to our knowledge of the potash and nitrate resources of the United States but combine to form an analytical determination of the physiographic, climatic, rock soil, and water conditions that control the mode of occurrence of nitrates and potash salts in the western Pleistocene and Recent lake basins.

Then turning to the report of the Bureau of Mines, on page 55 it appears that they are considering methods of securing potash. I read:

At the Berkeley station a study of methods used in potash recovery at Searles Lake was completed and a report was prepared.

At the Salt Lake City station laboratory experiments on the recovery of potash from the low-grade alunite ores of southern Utah showed that concentration and recovery by calcination, leaching, and electrical precipitation was feasible. The Aluminum Potash Co. continued experimental work in the station laboratories, using the bureau's furnace, leaching plant, and electrical treaters.

So, Mr. President, the whole subject is being taken care of, and there is no occasion whatever, so far as I can see, of making this appropriation and turning the work over to the Agricultural Department.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to refer to the report to which the Senator from Florida has called our attention. If the Senator from Florida has read the report, he knows that while in this bill the appropriation for the extraction of potash from kelp is cut out, this report asks that it be continued; and what is the result? I ask Senators to read the report in full, but I want to call the attention of the Senate particularly to page 17:

When it was found that the giant kelps of the Pacific coast carried a high percentage of potash salts, surveys were made by the Bureau of Soils of the kelp beds lying in that coastal region of the United States and its Territory, Alaska. The enormous tonnage found represented a source of potash of great potential value. This material offered the possibility of valuable by-products obtainable with potash. Upon the outbreak of the war the facts established by the department were taken advantage of by private enterprises and a considerable number of plants were erected on the west coast, principally in southern California and Puget Sound, for the manufacture of potash from this material.

Potash now has declined in price. It went sky-high during the war. It was not a question of what the purchasers would pay; it was simply a question of getting the potash. The price went so high that they could extract it from the salt waters of the great Salt Lake, they could extract it from the brackish waters found in Nebraska, they could extract it from kelp, and they could extract it from almost any article in which potash was found, because when it was extracted the price of potash was so high that there was hardly a limit to the price paid.

I continue:

At the same time Congress appropriated money for the erection and operation by the Bureau of Soils of an experimental and demonstrational kelp-potash plant with a view to determining the commercial feasibility of producing potash and the by-products which can be gotten from kelp, and with the hope that this information could be established in time to enable the private concerns operating to so develop their processes that they could continue the manufacture of potash from kelp upon restoration of normal conditions.

As far as the price of potash is concerned, it is nearly back to normal conditions, and that develops the fact that they can not extract potash profitably from this source.

The early termination of the war made this impossible, but subsequent experiments in this demonstrational plant have established by-products of sufficient value to carry the manufacturing cost of the potash. The results as they now stand show the commercial feasibility of extracting potash from kelp with by-products and selling the potash, where freight rates are not prohibitive, in competition with potash from any other sources.

While it is felt that the commercial feasibility of recovering by-products of sufficient value to carry the cost of extracting potash has been demonstrated, it is the desire of this bureau to continue the operation of this plant until the efficiency of these processes has been increased to the point where the economic features will persuade outside concerns to reenter the industry.

Then they ask for an appropriation. In this bill that appropriation has been cut out, and the appropriation that is left in the bill simply means a duplication of the work in the Bureau of Mines and in the Geological Survey.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a word more has been said on this subject by Dr. Whitney, who is Director of the Bureau of Soils.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me a moment? The Senator from Utah says that the provision for continuing this kelp plant has been cut out. Is not that a mistake?

Mr. GRONNA. There is no appropriation for the continuation of the kelp plant. There is only an item of $5,000 in the bill to take care of the machinery, but the $208,000 asked for was cut out by the House.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, of course this appropriation for the care of the machinery is only to care for it until an opportunity is had to dispose of it. The situation, I take it, is that private enterprise is now invading the kelp field. There are manufactories of very considerable extent, one very large one at San Diego, Calif., and they conduct extensive operations. They have machines by which the kelp is cut out in the ocean, loaded by machinery upon scows, and transported to the plant; so that private enterprise is now engaged in the experimentation and development of this source of supply of nitrate, and it is not necessary for the Government to carry it on any longer.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that may be true. That perhaps was the attitude of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That is the reason why the appropriation was cut out, and the $5,000 carried for maintenance; but, as showing the limitations which the Senator from Utah has placed upon this item, I want to call the attention of the Members of the Senate to Dr. Whitney's testimony before the House committee:

There is the investigation of garbage as a source of fertilizer. Through the work of the Bureau of Soils city garbage has come into quite a prominent place as a fertilizing material. We contributed quite materially to that. We are still looking for deposits of nitrate of soda in this country. We have not very much reason for believing that we will get workable deposits, but we should continue the search. We are still looking for possible deposits of potash, and we are working on phosphates and the economic use of our phosphate-rock deposits. That is being carried on now under the item for fertilizer resources. These investigations have gone so far, they have gone to the point where they are about ready to be taken up by commercial interests. Because we have them in definite shape we want to have an appropriation now to finish the work.

There is a clear, positive statement of the Chief of the Bureau of Soils that this work is getting so nearly completed that it embraces subjects far afield from what the Senator from Utah was discussing. I think it would be a mistake, in the interest of the agricultural people of the country, to discontinue further investigation of this subject, which is so very important to the farmers of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. Is it not true that the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey do not handle at all the work to which he has referred?

Mr. McNARY. That is precisely my understanding; and all the private concerns engaged in the manufacture, distribution, and sale of fertilizer will profit by the investigations made by the Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, of course the question addressed to the Senator from Oregon by the Senator from Georgia draws out only a kind of a general statement; but what is the fact? This is an appropriation to locate sources of supply of potash and nitrates. The Geological Survey is undoubtedly conducting investigations for the purpose of locating those sources of supply.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In minerals.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; in minerals.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But not generally, outside of what would fall within the scope of geological and mining work.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; that is not quite true, I am able to say to the Senator, because the Bureau of Mines are obliged to carry on experimentations with respect to the manufacture of coke, and they are conducting experiments for the purpose of utilizing the gases escaping from coke ovens, and they are conducting experimentations in relation to smelting, for the purpose of utilizing the gases contained in the fumes that go up from the smelters, and all that kind of thing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As I understand, a line of work is being done by the Agricultural Department in this respect which the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey do not handle, theirs being more technically mining and mineral investigation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is what I am looking for. If there is any such thing, I should like to know it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is what I was asking the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the Senator from Oregon gives the testimony of the Director of the Bureau of Soils, who tells just exactly what they are doing. He tells in the report to which I have invited your attention. Now, if there is any line of investigation, any field that they can occupy, that is not occupied by the other governmental establishments, I should think we ought to have it.

I referred to the report made by the Department of Agriculture just a day or two ago, to which the Senator from Florida has referred. They tell us in that report that they are conducting investigations in the regions out in the West and in the Northwest where it is supposed that deposits of potash and of nitrates might be found; and apparently the only other source suggested is the fumes arising from coke ovens and from smelters of various kinds, and that investigation undoubtedly is being conducted by the Bureau of Mines.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, would it be appropriate at this time to move to strike out the paragraph?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the committee amendments are first to be considered.

The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 50, line 23, after the words "agricultural lands," to insert "in the national forests," so as to read:

For examination of soils to aid in the classification of agricultural lands, in the national forests, in cooperation with other bureaus of the department and other departments of the Government, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 20, to increase the appropriation for general expenses of the Bureau of Soils from "$314,375" to "$324,375."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 21, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Soils from "$393,615" to "$403,615."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 24, after the word "nuts," to strike out "$178,500" and insert "$188,500, of which $10,000 shall be immediately available," so as to read:

For investigations of insects affecting deciduous fruits, orchards, vineyards, and nuts, $188,500, of which $10,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the committee if there is any special purpose for which this $10,000 is to be used; and I will state to the Senator the reason why I ask the question.

I have received several telegrams from people in my State, and in other States in the West interested in apple production, in which they refer to the cutting out by the House of an appropriation of $10,000 to take care of the codling-moth situation, and I wondered if the $10,000 which the committee has put in here was intended to take care of that situation?

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Oregon will answer.

Mr. McNARY. It was the intention of the committee to care for the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington at another place, under the general subject of the destruction and study of the habits of moths, I think on page 54.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I remember that I spoke to the Senator with reference to taking care of this item there, yet when I saw the language in this place—"for investigation of insects affecting deciduous trees, orchards, vineyards, nuts, and so forth"—and then saw this appropriation of $10,000, to be immediately available, I wondered if the committee, in considering the matter, was really intending to take care of that situation by this appropriation. I thought it would be a very good place to do it, and a very proper way to do it.

Mr. McNARY. I can say to the Senator from Washington that the committee thought it should be inserted on page 54, after line 16, which deals with the prevention of the spread of moths. That covers the subject of the gypsy moth and the brown-tail moth, and it was thought the codling moth might well come in there, and out of that appropriation, without increasing it a dollar, three pests would be cared for.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a notation made of that kind, and that is where I was intending to offer an amendment until I saw this provision.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator having this matter in charge if the increase of $10,000, which is made immediately available, is not to cover a deficit that has already been made?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have the notes of the department here as to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator read them, please?

Mr. GRONNA. Which particular item is it to which the Senator refers?

Mr. SMOOT. For investigation of insects affecting deciduous fruits, orchards, vineyards, and nuts, at the bottom of page 52.

Mr. McNARY. That is for peach blight.

Mr. GRONNA. That is an additional amount for peach blight. It is for an insect investigation in the South and in California, wherever they raise peaches.

Mr. SMOOT. I expected that was what the money was to be used for; but what I wanted to know was whether this $10,000, to be made immediately available, is not to take care of money they have already expended over and above what was appropriated last year?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if I may interject, I understand it is not for that purpose, but it is to be available immediately to be used for the extermination of the peach blight, which affects the tender leaves of peach trees along early in the spring, after the blossoming period; and that season is approaching in the Southern States and in California. The money was to be made immediately available, on the passing of this measure, so that it could be used in experimentation and study of the destruction caused by that blight.

Mr. GRONNA. I might say to the Senator from Utah that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] introduced a special bill appropriating $10,000 for this purpose. But I will read what the department has to say on it:

It is understood that this item has already been covered by an amendment to H. R. 15812, an amendment introduced by Senator HARRIS, of Georgia, for investigation of peach insects in Georgia. An appropriation was originally requested by the department in order to undertake work against the plum curculio in Georgia. The situation is acute, and unless energetic measures are taken to meet it the pest will undoubtedly cause serious injury to the Georgia peach-growing industry.

So it can not be said to be a deficiency at all. It is for new work.

Mr. FLETCHER. Was not the estimate $198,500?

Mr. GRONNA. That is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we ought to increase it by $10,000.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been increased by $10,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This additional $10,000 was added to meet a recommendation of the Department of Agriculture on an appeal from the agricultural department of Georgia to give active help at once to meet insect attacks upon peach orchards. This provision making it immediately available was, I think, inserted at my request in the committee, and it was done in compliance with the request of the State authorities. The Department of Agriculture recommended it and the department of Georgia had brought to their attention the necessity for immediate action, the loss last year having exceeded $2,000,000.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand it, the work must be done now or there will be no crop this year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not go into it technically, but I read the appeal from the State and I read the report of the Department of Agriculture, and was satisfied it was entirely meritorious.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, all I wanted to know was that this $10,000 was not added to the appropriation and made immediately available to cover a deficit. I will say to the Senator that that often happens. Departments spend all their appropriations, then they find themselves short ten, twenty, thirty, forty, or fifty thousand dollars, and in some appropriation made for that same specific purpose in the coming fiscal year they say so much shall be appropriated and made immediately available.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was not the case with reference to this appropriation. I presented the evidence from the agricultural department of the State and the peach growers' association, and I also called attention to the recommendation of the Agricultural Department here. They asked for more, but the view in my own State was that $10,000 was all that could be used. They have raised a fund for the purpose also. The peach growers have raised a fund, and by supplementing that with the appropriation of $10,000 the work can be done.

Mr. GRONNA. It is not for a deficiency; it is for new work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 3, after the words "chinch bug," to strike out "$175,660" and insert "$200,000," "Provided, That not less than $50,000 shall be used for investigating methods for the control and eradication of the grasshopper;" so as to read:

For investigations of insects affecting cereal and forage crops, including a special investigation of the Hessian fly, grasshopper, and the chinch bug, $200,000: Provided, That not less than $50,000 shall be used for investigating methods for the control and eradication of the grasshopper.

Mr. POMERENE. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how he expects to control grasshoppers?

Mr. GRONNA. This is not a new question to those who have been unfortunate enough to have grasshopper... Instead of $50,000, we ought to have $200,000.

Mr. POMERENE. I am calling attention rather to the phraseology than anything else. I believe in the eradication of the grasshopper; I believe in doing anything to destroy him, but why the word "control"? I move to strike out the words "control and," so that it will read: "Methods for the eradication of the grasshopper."

Mr. GRONNA. This is the language which is always used to provide appropriations for controlling and eradicating insects and pests. It is not new language at all. Of course, I have no serious objection to the Senator's amendment, if you can eradicate them. That is the only way you can control them.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I take issue with the chairman. I think it is proper language. When you control a pest you localize it, or keep it within a zone. That is all "control" means. If you can keep it in a particular district, so that it will not spread, you are controlling it, and the prevention of its spread is sometimes the most effective way of eradication.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows that we appropriated $500,000 for the control and eradication of the corn borer, and no one found any fault with that. We are appropriating a large sum of money this year for the control of the corn borer.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not know whether the word "control" is proper or whether it was used. I am not finding fault with the appropriation here; I am simply calling attention to the phraseology.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope the Senator will withdraw his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not care anything about it, either one way or the other.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we have a great many grasshoppers in the State of Utah, and the only way to get rid of them is to get the men out to fight them and eradicate them. You can not do it by appropriating money and talking about it. You must just get out a machine and go to work in the field at the proper time, when they come, and drive them in the creek and drown them, or else drive them into a trench and cover them over, or catch them and burn them up. Those are the only methods by which you can eradicate them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 10, after the words "Argentine ant," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$175,000," so as to read:

For investigations of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, etc., and the cigarette beetle and Argentine ant, $175,000, of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 12, after the word "forests," to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$65,000," and also the following proviso: "Provided, That $25,000 shall be used for preventing and combating infestations of insects injurious to forest trees on and near the national forests, independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States, counties, municipalities, or with private owners," so as to read:

For investigations of insects affecting forests, $65,000: Provided, That $25,000 shall be used for preventing and combating infestations of insects injurious to forest trees on and near the national forests, independnetly or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States, counties, municipalities, or with private owners.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee, I would like to inquire why this amendment is inserted?

Mr. GRONNA. I will ask the Senator from Oregon to explain it to the Senator from Delaware. It was his amendment.

Mr. MCNARY. I offered the amendment in the committee for the purpose of meeting a very serious situation which obtains in the Pacific Coast States. Recently a new bug has appeared in the forests, known as the pine beetle. It is found in the national forests to a very large extent. I have sufficient data to convince the Senator from Delaware that this beetle is doing more to destroy the mature and partially mature forests of the West than any other insect or any other cause, save the loss by fire.

A few years ago this beetle was not known, but now it is a very common infestation; in fact, 15 per cent of the trees of the forests of the West are infected with this disease. Private industry is doing a tremendous lot to control the disease and to eradicate it. This appropriation is to be used in cooperation with private institutions, individuals, and States in the eradication of the pine beetle upon Government land.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The language is:

That $25,000 shall be used for preventing and combating infestations of insects injurious to forest trees on and near the national forests.

It struck me, upon the reading, that this was a proposition to appropriate Federal money to protect forest trees of private individuals, and why should the Government do that?

Mr. MCNARY. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that the term "national forests" does not include the Indian reservations and other places owned by the Government. In the southern part of Oregon are to be found some of the finest agricultural lands in the world. That is found not in the national forests but on the Indian reservations, and I think the Senator can recall, on a moment's reflection, how near an Indian reservation comes to being governmental property.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, yes; but may I ask the Senator if it is the purpose of this amendment to have the money spent only upon forests that are on Government property?

Mr. MCNARY. The Senator must well know, on further reflection, that when the private interests are spending more money than the Government to prevent the spread from the forests owned privately to the Government forests it becomes a national enterprise.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I did not catch that.

Mr. McNARY. I say, private interests are spending thousands of dollars to eradicate and control the pine beetle and other pests which affect the forests, and if it is discovered on private property, the Government will join with the private individuals to prevent it from spreading to the Government forests.

In the fire-prevention provision of this bill, and all other agricultural appropriation bills which have come before Congress for years, the Government, in cooperation with the States and individuals, has expended thousands of dollars to prevent the spread of fires on private lands; upon the theory that that is protecting directly the national forests, and protecting one of the great resources of the country. So, in this instance, when there is infestation on private land located near Government land, it is proper for the Government to cooperate with the individuals to prevent the spread of this injurious beetle to the Government forests. It is an assurance against great destruction, and that is the reason upon which a provision of this kind is founded.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I can very readily see, then, some rather plausible reason for the insertion of the amendment. When the Senator stated to me that the forests on which it was proposed to spend the appropriation were forests upon Indian reservations, and therefore upon Government property, and the appropriation therefor eminently proper, it seems to me he was not exactly representing the whole situation, because it turns out upon further inquiry from the Senator that it is contemplated that some of the money shall be spent to do work upon private property. There may be some justification for that in the reason the Senator has suggested, namely, that the private property is contiguous to the Government-owned property.

Mr. McNARY. Let me call the Senator's attention to an appropriation which follows, a part of which is undoubtedly used in his State, for preventing the spread of moths, $400,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But the sum appropriated in the amendment to which I am referring is only $25,000.

Mr. McNARY. I am calling the Senator's attention to an item on page 54, to prevent the spread of moths, all of which money is used in the Eastern States on privately owned lands, the appropriation being $400,000. Has the Senator any objection to that item? Does he desire to change the policy of the Government?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator certainly can not understand English if he confuses such language as that. The language in the paragraph on page 54, starting with line 16, is:

> To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths, by conducting such experiments as may be necessary to determine the best methods of controlling these insects.

Whereas the amendment he is seeking to have incorporated asks the United States Government to spend money to fight, by fumigation or whatnot, insects on private property.

Mr. McNARY. I will state to the Senator from Delaware that if he understood the proposition he would not make that statement.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand what has been referred to.

Mr. McNARY. That provision refers to localizing the gypsy moth, which is infesting privately owned shrubbery and trees in the East and is something to be eradicated by spraying, but no one is advocating the saving of the wonderful forests in the West by spraying.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not know the method. The Senator is proposing an appropriation of $25,000, not to study methods of exterminating the pest, but to spend $25,000 to prevent and combat the pest. If this were an appropriation of $25,000 for the purpose of investigating methods of exterminating the pest, then the appropriation would be in entire harmony with the whole scheme of the pest investigation.

I will state what prompted me to make the inquiry. There is an item in the bill "for investigations of insects affecting deciduous fruits, orchards, vineyards, and nuts." My contention is that the amendment under consideration should be worded the same, and not "for preventing and combating infestations of insects." There is another item for the investigation of insects affecting truck crops, and an item for the investigation of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, and so forth, but when we come to the amendment under consideration we find "that $25,000 shall be used for preventing and combating infestations of insects." In the other cases the appropriation is for studying methods to combat, but when we come to these insects attacking the forests we are asked to appropriate money not for the purpose of investigating methods to combat the insects, but to appropriate $25,000 for the purpose of preventing and combating infestations and to provide that the Government may do so independently or in cooperation with States, counties, municipalities, or private interests.

Therefore, it occurs to me that this particular appropriation is somewhat out of line with the whole series of appropriations. I can see why the United States Government, if it has a valuable forest or reservation, should in the protection of its property perhaps go on the property of private individuals and spend some money combating the advance of an insect which, if it comes over on the Government property, will cause an impairment of Government values there. But at the same time the Government is protecting its property, it is doing a benefit to the private individual who owns the adjoining property, and why should not that private individual pay something, too?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think, if the Senator will reflect, he will find no objection whatever to the appropriation. Out West we are obliged to combat destructive forest fires. There is a forest fire raging in the vicinity in which I have some property, for instance. It is not on my property at all, but it may reach there, and so I join with all my neighbors and we throw in together and establish a fund and go out to put out that fire. It is not raging on our properties or on the property of any of us, but nevertheless we have contributed. So the Government of the United States contributes jointly with the States and individual owners of property to extinguish forest fires lest they should destroy property of the Government.

So with the insect pests. They spread, they multiply, they are upon property adjacent to the national forests, property regarded as highly valuable. If they are allowed to spread without restriction, they will undoubtedly eventually embrace and include in their devastations the forests belonging to the Government upon the forest reserves. Why is it not entirely proper for the Government to make an appropriation to join with sums appropriated by the owners of private lands and by the States, the owners of lands also, to combat this peril?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will say that exactly the last reasoning of the Senator has occurred to me, and I do not take issue with him, but I wish to call the Senator's attention to one fact. This is not a proposition that the Government must, if it does anything at all, cooperate with these particular bodies, because the language is that the Government may independently of private owners do this work. I say, regardless of the high opinion I have for the Senator's judgment, that if the United States Government is going to go out and clean up the forest lands of private parties of an infectious insect, that while it is protecting itself and benefiting itself, it is doing a great good to the private party and it ought to be a cooperative scheme. Therefore I desire to move to eliminate from the amendment the words "independently or," and make it purely a cooperative situation.

Mr. McNARY. If that amendment should prevail it would prevent the Government from exterminating the beetle on its own land.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let the Government fight it when it gets on its own lands, then. If private parties have forests and will not help the Government exterminate the beetle until it advances, then let it eat up the private forests and let the Government fight it when it gets on the Government property.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to state to the Senator from Delaware that it affects thousands and millions of trees on Government lands of the West to-day, and in fighting the amendment he is causing a great loss to the country.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am not attacking the amendment. I am sure the amendment will go through, regardless of what I may say or do. The Senator stated that private parties have spent a great deal of money in this work. What I object to is that they do not spend it in cooperation with the Government.

Mr. McNARY. That shows the Senator's spirit. A spirit is found in the West in all these cooperative movements which can not be found in all the States of the East. I have a letter from the Klamath County Chamber of Commerce, in Oregon, where Government timber is located, from which I read:

> The timbermen state that investigations covering this country show that from 1 to 10 per cent of the standing timber is being destroyed and that the ravages of this pest are rapidly gaining. For instance, in 10 years preceding 1918 there was perhaps 6 per cent of the timber killed, while during the last 2 years the amount has been increased to 15 per cent. The timbermen state that they are willing to take care of the destroying of this pest on their own land, but that this work is almost useless unless they receive the cooperation of the Government on the Government lands and on the Indian reservations and the national forest reserves.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the chairman of the committee if the appropriation is estimated for?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that I find that there was an estimate for $67,000. I wish to ask the Senator from Delaware if it is his understanding that the amount appropriated for the eradication of the corn borer is not expended on private lands and that it is only for the study of it and not for the actual eradication of the insect?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The language of the corn-borer appropriation is:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the spread of the European corn borer, and to provide means for the control and prevention of spread of this insect throughout the United States, in cooperation with the States concerned, including employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $275,000.

The language there is "in cooperation with States concerned." I am asking that this appropriation be put on the same basis. Let it be done in cooperation with private owners. I am not opposing the idea of the appropriation going through, but let it be put on the same terms with other appropriations in the same category. I object to the words "independently or" in this particular appropriation.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator must know that this is a different situation. A large portion of the appropriations will, of course, be expended in the national forests, but suppose there is vacant Government land adjoining a national forest not owned by individuals but owned by the National Government? That would not be a national forest; and there are hundreds of thousands of such cases as that. I am really surprised that the Senator from Delaware should criticize the language. Of what value would it be to the forests if the Federal Government should destroy the insects in the national forests and then have them attacked again by the same class of insects located on the lands surrounding them, either other Government lands or privately owned lands?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is entirely proper, I will say to the Senator, for the Government to be allowed to spend money on the forests and upon Indian lands owned by the Government adjoining forest reservations. I would not object to a change to that effect.

Mr. GRONNA. What about Government lands?

Mr. WOLCOTT. What I am objecting to is that the language leaves it open for the Government of its own accord to spend money to eradicate the pest on privately owned lands. That is all I am objecting to. I want to make it so as to keep it particularly within the idea that the Government shall make expenditures on its own property, or, if it does it on property owned by private individuals, they shall bear some part of the expense. Therefore I move to strike out the words "independently or."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I believe——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not know the Senator from North Dakota had the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to suggest that it does not seem possible that a case could arise where there would not be cooperation in this work, for an individual owning a forest adjoining a national forest or a Government reservation would certainly be willing to cooperate with the Government to the extent of his own labor and time anyway. This leaves it wide open for the Government to say what sort of cooperation it will require. I do not believe the Senator from North Dakota would find that striking out the words "independently or" would hamper the operation of the section.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have some further amendments which I desire to offer if the amendment to the amendment now being considered should be adopted.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Delaware is evidently not familiar with the conditions in some of the Western States. There are still Government lands, and perhaps on some of those Government lands are homestead settlers, but the land still belongs to the Government until the claims have been proven up.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the fact that eliminating the words "independently or" from the amendment would not prevent the employment of these funds for combating pests on other Government-owned land; that is to say, on Indian-reservation land.

Mr. GRONNA. But a national forest is one thing and Government land is another.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand, but the elimination of the words I am suggesting would not prevent the employment of this money for combating pests on Government lands at any time.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that it might if the lands were held by homestead settlers.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the title to the land which the homestead settlers occupy is still in the Government, then, I say to the Senator, he is wrong in his point of view, because the language of the amendment is:

* * * for preventing and combating infestations of insects injurious to trees on and near the national forests.

I have moved to amend by striking out the words immediately following "independently or"— in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government—

And so forth.

The money may still be spent "in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government" under the express terms of the amendment. So, with all due deference to the Senator's judgment, I think he is in error when he thinks that eliminating the words which I suggest to strike out would prevent the expenditure of money on other Government-owned lands within the national forests.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have the highest regard for the Senator from Delaware; I know he is a good lawyer, and, as a common, ordinary hayseed, I dislike to oppose him or to put up my judgment against his; but I am more familiar with this situation than is the Senator from Delaware.

Let me say to the Senator from Delaware that we are appropriating in this bill $400,000—for what? For the control and eradication of insect pests on Government land? No; but on lands in the New England States for the control and eradication of the gypsy moth and the brown-tail moth. The bill also carries $100,000 for the white pine blister rust. Where is white pine blister rust found? In the New England States. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate increased the appropriation for white pine blister rust to $214,000. So I will say to the Senator that I hardly think we can split hairs as to the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" when it comes to small appropriations of $25,000 for the protection of national forests. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Delaware will be voted down, and that the committee amendment may then be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. In the next item, beginning in line 19, on page 53, when it is in order, I propose to submit an amendment increasing the appropriation from $110,000 to $150,000. I am calling attention to the clause now, and I will ask the chairman of the committee in the meantime to consider the amendment which I intend to propose. I think a mistake has been made by confining the appropriation to the sum of $110,000. As I have stated, the amendment is not now in order, but when it is in order I am going to move to increase the appropriation from $110,000 to $150,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only committee amendments are in order at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that, but I wanted to give the notice of my intention to move to amend the text of the bill in that respect at the proper time.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 54, line 2, after the word "subtropical," to strike out "plants" and insert "fruits, including plants," and in line 5, after the word "Board," to strike out "$51,500" and insert "$60,000," so as to read:

For investigations of insects affecting citrus and other tropical and subtropical fruits, including plants, and for investigations and control of the Mediterranean and other fruit flies and the camphor thrip, in cooperation with the Federal Horticultural Board, $60,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like a word of explanation regarding the proposed amendment which has just been stated, from which it appears that some insect is interfering with the production of camphor.

Mr. GRONNA. I will ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to give a satisfactory explanation of the amendment to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the insect referred to in this amendment, the camphor thrip, is one which threatens the young camphor trees as they grow up. It is something on the same order as the white fly, the black fly, and insects of that kind, which attack the leaves and the body of the young trees. The camphor industry has gotten to be quite an important one. As the Senator from Colorado knows, we have been very largely dependent on Formosa and Japan for camphor.

Mr. THOMAS. We produce it now synthetically.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is now being produced synthetically to a considerable extent; but in Florida we have several groves of 2,000 or 3,000 acres, and I believe one contains 10,000 acres, where they are producing the trees. They clip the young growth of the tree each year and distill from that the gum. They do not cut down the tree, as is done in Japan, and distill the tree itself, but they clip off the young growth each year and distill that, so as to make the camphor gum. That has got to be quite an important industry. The camphor thrip is an insect which has appeared and which is seriously threatening the growth of the industry. The State, I will say to the Senator from Colorado, and private industry are cooperating with the Government. A very small portion of this appropriation goes to the investigation of the camphor thrip. I think the estimate was for $66,500 for the items covered by the paragraph.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not objecting to it; but I was a little curious to know what it meant.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the estimate was for $66,500. I will ask the chairman of the committee if he does not think we ought to increase the appropriation to $66,500? The committee has only raised the House appropriation by $8,500.

Mr. GRONNA. No; I do not think we should increase the appropriation. The committee considered this matter very carefully and was unanimously of the opinion, as I remember, that the $60,000 would be sufficient for this year.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am willing to abide by the judgment of the committee, although I really think they should have made it $66,500.

Mr. THOMAS. It seems to have been a narrow escape for me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 54, line 10, after the word "insects," to strike out "$52,330" and insert "$70,000: Provided, That $17,000 shall be used for investigations of the blow fly and screw worm," so as to read:

For investigations, identification, and systematic classification of miscellaneous insects, including the study of insects affecting the health of man and domestic animals, household insects, and the importation and exchange of useful insects, $70,000: Provided, That $17,000 shall be used for investigations of the blow fly and screw worm.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 15, to increase the appropriation for general expenses of the Bureau of Entomology from "$795,670" to "$906,180."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 22, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Entomology from "$1,599,940" to "$1,710,450."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 11, after the word "appropriated" in line 10, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$7,500"; and in line 11, after the word "expended," to insert "of which $2,500 shall be used for the construction of new buildings," so as to read:

For the improvement and maintenance of the game preserve in Sullys Hill National Park, in the State of North Dakota, including the construction of all fences, sheds, buildings, corrals, roads, shelters, and other structures which may be necessary for the protection of game or for the use of visitors, in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated, $7,500, the same to be available until expended; of which $2,500 shall be used for the construction of new buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 20, after the words "ground squirrels," to insert "jack rabbits"; and, in line 24, after the word "animals," to strike out "$452,240" and insert "$550,000," so as to read:

For investigating the food habits of North American birds and other animals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry; for investigations, experiments, and demonstrations in connection with rearing fur-bearing animals; for experiments, demonstrations, and cooperation in destroying mountain lions, wolves, coyotes, bobcats, prairie dogs, gophers, ground squirrels, jack rabbits, and other animals injurious to agriculture, horticulture, forestry, animal husbandry, and wild game; and for the protection of stock and other domestic animals through the suppression of rabies in predatory wild animals, $550,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 7, to increase the appropriation for general expenses of the Bureau of Biological Survey from "$714,755" to "$815,015."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 8, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Biological Survey from "$795,825" to "$896,085"; also on page 59, line 14, before the words "of class 4," to strike out "4" and insert "5"; in line 15, before the words "of class 1," to strike out "13" and insert "14"; and in line 17, after the words "in all," in line 16, to strike out "$51,220" and insert "$54,020," so as to read:

Salaries, Division of Accounts and Disbursements: Chief of division and disbursing clerk, $4,000; supervising auditor, $2,250; cashier and chief clerk, $2,250; deputy disbursing clerk, $2,000; accountant and bookkeeper, $2,000; clerks—2 of class 4, 5 of class 3, 7 of class 2, 14 of class 1, two at $1,000 each; messenger, $720; messenger boy, $600; in all, $54,020.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think it is about time to stop increasing the number of employees in the departments. In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, in which the salaries of a great majority of the employees are provided for, we tried to begin to retrench a little and cut off employees where that was possible, and in no case did we add to their number. I know, of course, that the head of the Division of Accounts and Disbursements will ask for more clerks and will continue so to do just so long as the Government lasts; but really does not the Senator believe that we ought to decrease the number of employees in the District of Columbia? There are about 87,000 of them now, whereas before the war the number ran from forty to forty-three thousand.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am in perfect accord with the Senator from Utah, and he knows from my work on the Committee on Appropriations with him, that I make every effort possible to save every dollar that can be saved; but this item—and I want to be frank with the Senator—is for Mr. Zappone. He can not possibly do the work unless the additional help is given him. I sent a special representative to his division, and I am absolutely certain from the information that was brought to me that the additional employees are necessary. They were estimated for, but were not allowed in the House. I hesitated, and the committee hesitated, to insert the provision, but after investigation it was found that it was necessary. I do not believe it is economy to deny the head of this division the proper help; I believe it is rather in the interest of economy to grant him what he needs. The Senator knows that there ought to be a reorganization of all the executive departments and that it is a difficult matter for us to .it in these particular places; but until the general reorganization is brought about we must give the head of this division the help which is absolutely required.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, nobody wants to deprive any department of the help that is really required, but that does not mean to give them what they ask for. If we gave all the departments of the Government the number of clerks which they ask we would have 150,000 employees in the District of Columbia. We will never get rid of any of them so long as we continue to appropriate for them; that is one thing sure. I thought now that conditions are getting back to normal, the war having been over for two years and a half, that we ought, while providing an adequate number of employees, to make those who are employed do a fair day's work.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to say for Mr. Zappone that during the present winter he and and his force have, to my knowledge, worked as late as 2 o'clock in the morning. I know that to be a fact.

Mr. SMOOT. Was that for once or more than once?

Mr. GRONNA. Oh, no; that happens very frequently. There is a tremendous amount of work for these men to do.

Mr. SMOOT. What has caused that extra work, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. GRONNA. There is nothing new about it. These men have been overworked not only during this session of Congress, but during the last session of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. I am going down to that division of the department, for I should like to see it.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope the Senator will do so.

Mr. SMOOT. If what the Senator says is true, it is the only place under the Government departments that I know anything about where the employees are overworked.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows I would not state it if it were not so.

Mr. SMOOT. I take the Senator's statement for granted, and that is the reason I am going down there, because I should like to see one department of our Government whose clerks are overworked. I do not know but that it would take my breath away to find such a condition. I know that I got a letter the other morning saying that when I entered one of the departments the other day a man who stood at the door immediately telephoned to every division there, "Get to work, and be at your typewriters. Senator SMOOT is coming."

Mr. President, I know one division of our Government where it is absolutely true that the ladies of the department made their trousseaus in the office during working hours. If the work is to be done in the same way that it is now going on, and there is to be no change, we might just as well make up our minds that we can double the number of employees. Washington is a delightful place to live in. Girls receiving salaries of sixteen and eighteen hundred dollars, with a $240 bonus, have plenty of time to go to the theater and do fancy work during working hours. Who would want to give it up?

I am glad, however, to hear the Senator from North Dakota say that in this division it is different. I think if they are we ought to make special provision for them and give everyone of them a chromo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 59, line 20, in the items for salaries for Division of Publications, to insert "assistant editor, $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 17, to increase the salaries for the Division of Publications from "$252,180" to "$254,180."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 20, after the numerals "$11,380," to insert "of which sum $3,000 shall be used for salaries of employees engaged in the distribution of bulletins," so as to read:

For extra labor and emergency employments in the District of Columbia, $11,380, of which sum $3,000 shall be used for salaries of employees engaged in the distribution of bulletins.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that I have to ask a question about this amendment, due to the fact that I could not attend the later meetings of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. What is the nature of the work of these employees with respect to distribution? The amendment says "engaged in the distribution of bulletins."

Mr. GRONNA. This does not increase the appropriations, as the Senator will observe, but it is for the purpose of furnishing extra help to distribute the bulletins. As it is to-day, what may be called picture shows have been held. I have no objection to that if it does not cost too much money and if it is for the purpose of educating the people throughout the country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. These people are employed in the District of Columbia, however, are they not?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; these people are employed in the District of Columbia, and for that reason the committee saw fit to direct that so much money shall be used for this particular purpose, because we thought it would be of more benefit to the people all over the country to get these bulletins, and to have the extra help required to distribute them, than to have these shows that I have mentioned.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I see. Then, as I understand, these people would be employed in keeping track of the mailing lists, folding, and sending out bulletins?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; that is what the amendment is for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 61, line 24, to increase the total appropriation for Division of Publications from "$380,110" to "$382,110."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 12, after the words "District of Columbia," to strike out "$61,500" and insert "$81,500," so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to enforce the provisions of the above acts and the act approved May 8, 1914, entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture," relative to their administration and for the administration of agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the island of Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States, including the employment of clerks, assistants, and other persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere, freight and express charges, official traveling expenses, office fixtures, supplies, apparatus, telegraph and telephone service, gas, electric current, and rent outside of the District of Columbia, $81,500.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator why that increase is granted

Mr. GRONNA. The increase is to take care of certain matters in the dependencies. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] can explain the need for it better than I can. Some of it goes to the island of Guam, I believe, but I think most of it goes to the Virgin Islands. I will turn to the estimates.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not understand that most of it goes to the Virgin Islands.

Mr. GRONNA. I refer to the increase.

Mr. KENYON. The appropriation was raised last year to enlarge the experiment station in the Virgin Islands. I do not remember now whether it was $5,000 or $10,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 68, line 24, to increase the appropriation for general expenses of the States Relations Service from "$4,640,980" to "$4,660,980."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 25, to increase the total appropriation for the States Relations Service from "$4,837,300" to "$4,857,300."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 3, before the word "draftsman," to strike out "one," and in line 11, before the word "mechanician," to strike out "one," so as to read:

Salaries, Bureau of Public Roads: Chief of bureau, $6,000; purchasing agent, $2,500; draftsman or clerk, $1,920; clerks or editorial clerks—1 $1,600, 1 $1,200; clerks or photographers—1 $1,440, 1 $1,200, 1 $1,000; clerk or instrument maker, $1,200; clerk or skilled laborer, $1,000; instrument maker, $1,800; model maker, $1,800; clerks—1 $1,900, 4 of class 4, 7 of class 3, 3 at $1,500 each, 6 of class 2, 9 at $1,320 each, 7 of class 1, 4 at $1,100 each, 2 at $1,000 each; mechanician, $1,680; mechanics—1 $2,100, 1 $1,800, 1 $1,500, 1 $1,200; skilled laborer, $1,200; skilled laborer or mechanic, $840; laboratory aid, $960; telephone operator, $720; mimeograph operator, $840; 2 laborers at $900 each; messengers or laborers—2 at $840 each, 2 at $660 each, 4 at $600 each; 4 messengers, laborers, or laboratory helpers at $720 each; fireman, $720; messenger boys—3 at $600 each, 8 at $480 each; 11 charwomen at $240 each; in all, $114,460.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is not the word "one" necessary there? It says in the case of the first amendment "draftsman or clerk," and I notice that a number of them read in the same way.

Mr. GRONNA. That was a mistake of the printing office. We just struck out the word "one."

Mr. SMOOT. I presume it will amount to the same thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 70, line 11, to increase the appropriation for inquiries in regard to systems of road management and economic studies of highway construction, operation, maintenance, etc., from "$50,000" to "$61,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 9, to increase the appropriation for investigating and reporting upon the utilization of water in farm irrigation, including the best methods to apply in practice, etc., from "$62,440" to "$72,000."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the $72,000 appropriated for investigating and reporting upon the utilization of water in farm irrigation belongs under the Bureau of Public Roads? This appropriation and the one at the bottom of page 71 and the one at the top of page 72 are all printed under that heading in the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. In the totals, too.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and they are in the totals.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that it seems that these items have been carried under the heading "Bureau of Public Roads."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the director of the bureau supervise this work in farm irrigation?

Mr. GRONNA. I presume he does.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is he supposed to know about it?

Mr. GRONNA. It would take quite a while to tell the Senator what he is supposed to know about it. The Senator was present last year when the Agricultural bill was taken up, and he will remember how very much the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was interested in this very item. He considered it very valuable and of very great importance. I confess that I do not know as much about it as other Senators do, but it is not a new item. It has been carried in the bill for a number of years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I realize it is not a new item.

Mr. McNARY. I think the criticism of the Senator from New York goes to the propriety of carrying it under this head.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. I want to know who supervises this work.

Mr. McNARY. It comes under the Bureau of Public Roads. That may be unfortunate. It is for arid lands, where water is not available. We often impound water in large reservoirs in the mountains. It is for the purpose of discovering water veins and bringing them to the surface and irrigating dry lands. It is an increase of $9,560 over the House appropriation. A wonderful work is being done in some of the semiarid States, and it was thought that it should be continued. Possibly it is unfortunate that it comes under this head, but it would be more unfortunate, in my judgment, knowing something of western conditions, if this item should be decreased or omitted from the bill. But I repeat that I think the objection of the Senator from New York is as to its location in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. All this money is spent under the Bureau of Public Roads. It is only another example of the duplication of work that is going on. I do not think Senators know that we have 27 engineering divisions in our Government instead of having one. I hope the reorganization commission will rectify some of it, but I do not know how long, even if it is rectified, it will remain so. Somebody on the Committee on Agriculture thought they wanted a little more money for the utilization of water on farms in farm irrigation, and this is about the only place they could put it in this bill, and therefore it went in under the Bureau of Public Roads.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Utah, who certainly is conversant with western irrigation projects, if he thinks the chief engineer of the Reclamation Service should do this work on farms rather than the Bureau of Farm Management in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. SMOOT. This subject ought to be under the Interior Department. All of it ought to be appropriated for under that department and all of it ought to be done by one engineering board.

Mr. McNARY. That may be true, but it is not so handled.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it is not, and that is why I am complaining about it.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator want to stop a good and meritorious work simply because it is not classified as he thinks it should be?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I want to take it out of this place and put it where it belongs, not having two different bureaus, with different employees, making different reports about the same project. The Senator from New York is perfectly right in asking the question as to why this is under the Public Roads Bureau. It never ought to be there. It ought to be under the Interior Department, and the appropriations ought to be made under that department, and they should be increased, if necessary, to cover the work; but the work should be done under the control of one department.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, perhaps both the Senator from New York and the Senator from Utah are right, that it ought to be done in the Department of the Interior; but it is not done there. This is an increase of only $9,560 over the bill as passed by the House, and I want to read what the department has to say with reference to this item:

The States are also contributing funds and cooperating with the department, and this fact is indicative of the practical value of these investigations to the States which have to depend largely upon irrigation for the production of foodstuffs. The Department of Agriculture is the only Federal agency engaged in research work in irrigation practices and methods. Studies of the movement of soil moisture so far made have revealed the fact that there is a great dearth of information regarding this subject. These investigations, the results of which are of such great practical value to the irrigation farmer, should be resumed and extended. In the past several years an investigation of the flow of water in various forms of irrigation conduits has been made to determine the friction losses, the results of which have had valuable application to irrigation systems. These studies so far have covered irrigation canals, wood pipe, and concrete pipe, and should be enlarged to include various kinds of metal pipes and flumes. Problems in the handling of silt-laden irrigation water and the removal of silt deposits should be investigated, and greater attention should be given to the proper design and economical operation of pumping plants.

I think that is a justification for it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can go now to the public-document room and get reports from the Reclamation Service, from the Forest Service, and from the Geological Survey, and in those reports will be found statements that they are making just such examinations as are recorded here. Who is there from the West who does not know that the Forest Service have had men taking the flow of the streams every day in the month for years and years past? Who is there who does not know that the question of the friction caused in a water power pipe line is not being considered by the Reclamation Service, and also now by the Water Power Commission?

Mr. GRONNA. This is for the whole country.

Mr. SMOOT. So are the other appropriatoins for the whole country. It can only apply, however, where there is irrigation.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator where he wants it placed in the bill, then, if it is in the wrong place?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not in the proper bill. But I am not going to propose a change now. I hope, however, that some time or other we will have a complete reorganization and prevent the granting of appropriations to three or four different departments to do exactly the same work. It is too costly. If the Senator ran his farm or his bank or his business that way, he would go broke; and there is no difference between the business of a Senator of the United States and the Government of the United States, except as to the size and the resources. I want to say that the way we are going now, Mr. President, in dividing up the work that ought to be done by one department into four or five, perhaps the Government will go broke in the end.

Mr. McNARY. Let me ask the Senator from Utah, is there any means available for this in the reclamation fund? What is the purpose of that fund? It is to bring water on the land, and not to study these farm problems, which properly come under farm management.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, every reclamation project is gone into thoroughly before it is ever recommended by the Reclamation Service. They stay upon every stream, they gauge it for years and years. I can go into the Reclamation Service to-day and find a record of the flow of every stream they have ever recommended for reclamation projects for the last 20 years.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah shows again that he is not familiar with the purpose of this amendment. I think I know as much about one subject as he does, and that is reclamation, and how it is practiced in the West; and I say to the Senator with absolute confidence and certainty that there is no work done by the Reclamation Service comparable to this work outlined here, which carries $72,000.

Mr. BORAH. What is this work?

Mr. SMOOT. To determine the flow of water.

Mr. McNARY. Let the Senator from Utah tell the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. McNARY. I have yielded to higher and more experienced authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply desire to say, Mr. President, that the chairman of the committee read a statement from an official of the Government what this appropriation was for and what was to be done with it, and that showed that it was for ascertaining the flow of water in the streams; and I say that not only does the Reclamation Service collect that information and have it at the disposal of every citizen of the United States who may ask for it, but so has the Forest Service and so has the Geological Survey.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Reclamation Service collect this data outside of the arid region?

Mr. SMOOT. This is only for irrigation purposes. It says:

For investigating and reporting upon the utilization of water in farm irrigation.

So it could be only where there was irrigation.

Mr. BORAH. There is no motion to transfer it, is there?

Mr. SMOOT. No; not at all.

Mr. McNARY. Farm irrigation, as it is practiced, includes grouping of farms into units known as irrigation districts. That is one kind of farm irrigation about which these studies are made. This item includes farm irrigation on the farm as a unit, where the water can not be brought upon it through reservoirs or conduits, but must be had through springs or through the piping of water from the direct flow of rivers and streams or the boring of wells. It is a different proposition, not comprehended in any way under the general scheme of reclamation by the Secretary of the Interior or his subordinates, and is properly a function of the Department of Agriculture, in my judgment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the sundry civil appropriation bill which has just passed this body there was an appropriation made specifically for boring wells in the arid States of the West. The first appropriation made for that purpose was in the State of Nevada, and the appropriations have grown from that time, so that it covers all of the intermountain States—that is, the semiarid States of the West. The money is being used for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 11, to insert:

For supervising the preparation, distribution, and use of picric acid, trinitrotoluol, trojan powder, and such other surplus war explosives as may be made available for use in clearing stumps and stones from agricultural land, independently or in cooperation with agricultural colleges and other agencies, and for investigating and reporting upon the results obtained from the use of the explosives, $15,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill why the word "preparation," in line 12, was inserted?

Mr. GRONNA. This item was inserted at the request of the Senators from Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan. As I understand it, there are large quantities of explosives owned by the Government——

Mr. THOMAS. That is the reason why I am making the inquiry. What is the need of the Department of Agriculture preparing as well as distributing and using?

Mr. GRONNA. They have to be prepared especially for this purpose. As I understand it, they will be used for blowing out stumps in what we call the cut-over land in those States, and possibly for blasting rock.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not objecting to the appropriation, but the word "preparation" seems to me to be broad enough to include the manufacture of these explosives, which, of course, is beyond the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department, or it ought to be. The distribution and use of picric acid is all right. The preparation of the acid is the equivalent of its manufacture, or it can be so construed, and it will be so construed if you give the department half a chance.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. GRONNA. I will read from the department's report, if the Senator will permit me:

The War Department has a surplus of approximately 12,500,000 pounds of picric acid, which is available for distribution by the Department of Agriculture. This explosive is suitable for land-clearing operations, in that it is both effective and safe to handle.

Mr. THOMAS. I am entirely in favor of the amendment so far as the purpose goes. I shall not make any objection, but I think the word "preparation" ought to be eliminated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move to strike out that word?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I move to strike out the word "preparation," in line 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee. It will be agreed to in the absence of objection.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I must object to that. I desire to be heard on it before it is passed upon, and wish to express briefly my objections.

That, I think, is a very important item. I happen to know something about it. I know that the Bureau of Roads has been conducting very important investigations along the line of those provided for in the committee amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator understands that I propose to strike out only one word?

Mr. MYERS. I understand, the word "preparation"; but I assume that the bureau has gotten up the amendment and worded it as it thinks will fit its needs, and as the Bureau of Public Roads has had considerable experience along this line and knows what its needs are for the future it seems to me it would be unwise to interfere with the wording of the amendment. I do not know just how they desire to prepare the explosives, but if they think there is some preparation necessary for the investigations it seems to me it would be wise not to limit them. I do not want the amendment to be adopted unanimously without objection. I wish to vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to strike out the word "preparation."

Mr. MYERS. I call for a division.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 72, line 19, to increase the appropriation for general expenses of the Bureau of Public Roads from "$329,500" to "$365,060."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 20, to increase the total appropriation for Bureau of Public Roads from "$443,960" to "$479,520."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 10, before the words "custodian of supplies," to strike out "one."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 11, to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to read:

That not less than $40,000 shall be used for a study of the methods of prevention of losses by deterioration, decay, and freezing of fruits and vegetables in storage and in transit in refrigerator cars, heater cars, and ocean vessels, including demonstrations of such methods, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 6, after the word "received," to strike out "in interstate commerce"; after line 8 to insert "or at points which may be conveniently reached therefrom"; and in line 13, after the word "certificates," to insert "covering interstate shipments," so as to read:

For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and certify to shippers and other interested parties the quality and condition of fruits, vegetables, poultry, butter, hay, and other perishable farm products, when received at such important central markets as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time designate, or at points which may be conveniently reached therefrom, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, including payment of such fees as will be reasonable and as nearly as may be to cover the cost for the service rendered: Provided, That certificates covering interstate shipments issued by the authorized agents of the department shall be received in all courts of the United States as prima facie evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained, $175,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the chairman of the committee believe that that amendment ought to be agreed to, striking out the words "in interstate commerce"? In other words, would it not have to be in interstate commerce before we would have any power over it?

Mr. GRONNA. There are times when shipments are made only within the States.

Mr. SMOOT. Within the State it would be intrastate commerce.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think we have any right to do that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest to the Senator from Utah that it is not an exercise of power or of right. It is simply an investigation on the part of agents of the department. We are not attempting to interfere with the commerce, except to give a certificate as to the condition in which the product may be. We are not confining the activities of the agents of the Department of Agriculture to interstate or intrastate work, so far as that is concerned. I do not think there is any question of power involved.

Mr. SMOOT. The only question in my mind was whether there was a power involved or employed.

Mr. GRONNA. I can read what the department has to say about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not say that it is not proper. All I say is that if there is a power or even an implied power involved, then it would be wrong to strike out the words.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I suggest to the Senator that in the amendment in line 13, on the same page, relating to certificates which are authorized to be issued, the committee have amended it so that it only covers interstate shipments?

Mr. SMOOT. I think that amendment clears up the one under consideration.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a full explanation if the Senator wants to have it read.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the succeeding amendment will clear it up, although I should like to have the Senator read the explanation and see what it is.

Mr. GRONNA. I read from the report of the committee as follows:

The language of this paragraph has been amended by striking out the words "in interstate commerce," in lines 6 and 7, and inserting the words "or at points which may be conveniently reached therefrom," in line 9, and the words "covering interstate shipments," after the word "certificates," in line 13.

The words "in interstate commerce" are recommended to be omitted and "covering interstate shipments" added for the following reasons:

(1) The food products inspection service is permissive and in no way regulatory or mandatory. On this account it in no way interferes with the rights of the citizens of any State. Inspections are made only upon application by interested parties, who gladly pay for the service in order to secure a disinterested statement of the true quality and condition of the product in dispute. No one is compelled to request inspections. Those who have no need for such a service or who do not seek it are not required to accept it.

(2) The fundamental purposes of the inspection service are to facilitate the distribution and marketing of farm produce and to the settlement of disputes as to the quality and condition of the produce and hastening the release of cars used in transporting it. When the service is restricted to interstate shipments, these purposes can be accomplished only in a partial way.

(3) When the service is once established in a market, practically no additional expense is necessary to make inspections of intrastate shipments. The present restriction decreases the fees received and proportionately increases the cost per car inspected.

(4) This service was intended for the protection of all producers who ship their products to distant markets and desire to have the benefit of a reliable disinterested report on their condition upon arrival at market. By restricting inspections to interstate shipments many producers are denied a highly useful service for which they are willing to pay. The reason for such discrimination is not obvious when no such limitation is applied to most of the other activities of the department, through which valuable services are rendered to producers and others.

The insertion of the words "or at points which may be conveniently reached therefrom" is desired in the interest of efficiency and convenience. Many inspections can be made at small towns at short distances from large central markets. A service of this character would be a great accommodation to shippers, although in most cases it might not be desirable formally to designate such points as important central markets at which inspections could be made.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will permit me, after reading the full paragraph of the bill and noticing the amendment in line 13 of the same paragraph, and taking the two together, it seems to me it is all right.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is the very point to which I wished to call the attention of the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. No matter what question arises, that takes care of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, turning back for a moment to the amendment on page 74, line 11, there is a proviso that not less than $40,000 of the previous appropriation shall be used for the study of the methods and prevention of loss by deterioration, decay, or freezing in fruits, vegetables, and so forth, in storage and in transit. On page 24 there is an appropriation for the investigation and improvement of fruits, the study of the behavior of fruits during the processes of transportation, marketing, and while in commercial storage, $83,200. That would seem on the face of it to be a duplication of appropriations for practically the same purpose. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to that fact. If it is intentional that they should be duplicated, of course, that is a different matter.

Mr. GRONNA. I will ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to explain it, as the increase was made at his request.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Colorado is not questioning the increase. He is calling attention to what he thinks is a duplication. I did not clearly catch his statement, however.

Mr. THOMAS. The proviso beginning on line 11, page 74, seems to cover, although in different phraseology, the same purpose for which the appropriation is made on page 24, beginning with line 4, extending down to line 16.

Mr. GRONNA. The item on page 24 is for the investigation and improvement of fruit, and the method of fruit growing, harvesting, in cooperation with the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates. Is that the item to which the Senator refers?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; and then it is followed by the words "studies of the behavior of fruit during the processes of transportation, marketing, and while in commercial storage." The language is different, but the purpose seems to be the same.

Mr. GRONNA. It is for this particular purpose, as I understand it. On the Pacific coast a carload of fruit is loaded, we will say at Seattle. As I understand it, a great deal of that fruit is lost either through chilling or freezing. The appropriation is to be used purposely to study and find out what kind of cars, what kind of lining of cars, and what kind of equipment should be used in shipping the fruit from the West over the Rocky Mountains to the East.

Mr. THOMAS. The purpose may be a good one, and I am not quarreling with that, but I do not think we should make a duplicate appropriation for the same purpose and cover it under a different phraseology.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the provision on page 24, I think, was changed when the word "transportation" came out?

Mr. THOMAS. It was changed by the transposition of the word "transportation" to another place in the sentence.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not remember just what the language was as changed.

Mr. THOMAS. I can give it to the Senator from memory. The word "transportation" was stricken out where it now appears and then inserted after the word "storage" so as to read, "while in commercial storage and transportation."

Mr. WARREN. No; the words inserted were "also the effect of transportation," after the words "commercial storage."

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think it applies to a different proposition. It is for a specific purpose. The language on page 74 is more of an enumeration, specifying the particular things that they have in mind to guard against. It may be that the general language might be construed of course to cover it, but there is a great deal of that in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. The word "behavior" on page 24 as applied to fruits and vegetables of course is susceptible of wide application.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that is true.

Mr. THOMAS. But it is certainly wide enough to include any of the specific purposes for which the $40,000 appropriation is made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is either wide or narrow, if anyone wishes to place a narrow construction on it.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; but the department never puts a very narrow construction upon an appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree with the Senator in that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I take this opportunity to point out something in the structure of this bill which, I think, is exceedingly faulty. The Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates is not supposed to be a scientific bureau; it is not supposed to carry on scientific investigations. It was established by Congress to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distributing, and so forth, of farm products, and to collect, publish, and distribute by telegraph, mail, and otherwise timely information on the market supply and demand. It is a statistical bureau. Now we find, however, that on page 74 the bureau is directed to go outside of its sphere as originally intended and to make studies of chemical reactions of fruits and vegetables while in transportation. That duty belongs to the Bureau of Plant Industry, and this appropriation should not be here—it should be under the Plant Industry Bureau—for it is the Plant Industry Bureau that employs the chemists and the laboratory experts and the so-called scientists, all of whom are called "doctor"; but the men under the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates are statisticians; they are reporters of market conditions. They are not supposed to go into laboratories and inspect a rotten apple to find out how it became rotten in transit. That is a chemical undertaking, and should be under the Plant Industry Bureau. We are building up here another bureau of scientific investigation under the heading "Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates," although we already have a bureau of scientific investigation in the department as it is.

I think it very unfortunate that the other House appropriated $326,000 under this heading. It should go under the other heading. Certainly to increase the appropriation $40,000 and simply employ a new group of scientists to investigate the very matter that, according to the Senator from Colorado, is being investigated by another branch of the service is a foolish waste of money. I have no objection whatsoever to the purpose of the appropriation.

Mr. GRONNA. I hardly think the Senator from New York will criticize the whole paragraph because the paragraph is very plain. It reads:

> For acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distributing of farm and nonmanufactured food products—

Of course, it would be proper to criticize the proviso.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The proviso is what I am criticizing.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator, I think, referred to the whole paragraph. Of course, the Senator knows that this is a very important provision?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. GRONNA. It has to do with the furnishing of crop and market reports, especially as to vegetables. While we are discussing this question, for the good of the order—for that seems to be what it is—I was about, if the Senator from New York is through, to read a letter which I received this morning from one of my constituents. It is a criticism of the work done by the Bureau of Markets, and calls attention to the fact that only certain stations are designated for the purpose of inspection. My correspondent calls attention to certain towns in Illinois. I desire to have the letter read, because it bears directly upon the subject, and I ask that the Secretary read the letter, because he reads so much better than I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

GRAND FORKS, N. DAK., February 18, 1921.

Senator GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In our business of shipping potatoes, of which we ship between 500 to 1,000 cars each season, we run across many people who take advantage of the market and refuse potatoes on arrival if the market is less than when they purchased them. Then, again, there are others who refuse potatoes because they think they can buy them at a reduction.

Under the Bureau of Markets there has been established what is known as the inspection bureau, which keeps inspectors at the larger trade centers, and which will send inspectors out from these trade centers to inspect potatoes at various points they name. They put out a list of what they call "designated points," to which inspectors will be sent from their regular established office in trade centers.

We do a very large business in the State of Illinois. We run across considerable trouble there. Last fall we had a car refused at Lincoln, Ill., a station about 25 miles north of Springfield, directly intermediate between Springfield and Chicago. The inspection bureau would send a man to Springfield but not to Lincoln, although to reach Springfield he had to go through Lincoln. To go to Chicago he had to go through Lincoln from Springfield.

To-day we have three cars that we have had refused at Decatur. Decatur, by the way, is one of the largest potato markets in the United States. We wired an inspector to go to Decatur from Chicago to inspect these cars. We are advised, as we were last fall, that Decatur is not a designated point, therefore they can not send an inspector; but they would send the same inspector through Decatur to Springfield, a distance of 45 miles farther. To-day we are doing as we did last fall—diverting the cars from Decatur to Springfield, at an expense of about $40 per car.

The object of this letter is to call your attention to the ridiculous ruling of the Bureau of Markets. There is no reason why they should send a man to one point in Illinois and not to another. It is ridiculous that we should have to send a car from Decatur to Springfield to have it inspected. It can not possibly make a difference in the service as long as they have to send an inspector from Chicago.

I feel justified in calling your attention to this and request that you use your best efforts to apply intermediate points between the inspector's office and the designated markets as places where inspections may be made, and that inspections be applied much as freight rates are. For instance, the rate to Chicago on a car of potatoes by the Chicago & Northwestern is 48 cents per hundred. This is a terminal rate, but the same rate applies not only to Chicago but to all intermediate points between Chicago and St. Paul. The same action should be taken as regards inspections, and the rule should be made, and made promptly, to serve shippers justly and equitably, that inspectors may be sent from Chicago to Springfield or any intermediate points, where the time for the inspector to be away from his office would not exceed the time necessary to go from Chicago to Springfield.

Now that the potato movement is in full swing, we would urge that you take this up immediately and see if we can not have some remedy.

Yours, respectfully,

O. J. BARNES CO.
By O. J. BARNES, President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, again for the purposes of the RECORD—I do not mean to detain the Senate unduly—let me call the attention of the Senate to a provision on page 75. Let us remember that we are appropriating money for the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates, but we find there this proviso:

That of the sum thus appropriated $30,000 may be used for testing the waste, tensile strength, and bleaching qualities of the different grades and classes of cotton.

Surely that belongs under the Bureau of Plant Industry; it has no business here. We are building up another bureau of plant industry under the heading of "Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the Senator surely is mistaken as to that, for the reason that the item is for the purpose of determining the relative value in the market of the different grades of cotton. It should not come under the heading "Bureau of Plant Industry." The same cotton plant produces different grades of cotton, arising from the fact that the cotton is gathered at different times and that which remains in the field any length of time has a different color from that which is promptly harvested. It is desired to make tests, so as to ascertain whether or not the tensile strength of the cotton, which may be somewhat discolored, its bleaching qualities, and its market value are not equal to those of the cotton of the better quality. So this item pertains exactly to the Bureau of Markets, and has nothing to do, as the Senator seems to intimate, with developing a plant that will produce different grades. It has to do with the market value of the article, as expressed in the different grades, some of us believing that there was no appreciable difference on account of the accident of color or of foreign matter in the cotton, as to its tensile strength, its bleaching qualities, and its cloth-making qualities.

I should like to say to the Senator that we had a preliminary investigation of some of the grades in connection with which the dealers had made quite a difference, but as tested out by the Government it was demonstrated that in tensile strength, in bleaching qualities, and in yarn-making and cloth-making qualities the alleged inferior cotton was equal to what were claimed to be higher grades, for which there was a better price obtained.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator from South Carolina is right, then there are some items under the head of the Bureau of Plant Industry that ought not to be there.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not know as to that; I have not investigated that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am trying to get similar items under one head——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand; but I merely wanted to correct the Senator as to the cotton items.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And to protest against the duplication of work and the needless spreading around of the different pieces of work.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to page 24. There we direct the Bureau of Plant Industry to study the behavior of fruits in process of transportation. Of course, if they are in process of transportation they are on the way to market. Therefore, according to the Senator's contention, that work should be done by the Bureau of Markets, because it affects the market value of the fruit.

Again, on lines 20 and 21 of the same page, we provide that the Bureau of Plant Industry shall study the behavior of vegetables in the process of transportation and marketing. Either those two items should be placed under the heading "Bureau of Markets" or the two items which I have pointed out, on pages 74 and 75, should be put under the Bureau of Plant Industry.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As to the item on page 24:

For the investigation and improvement of fruits, and the method of fruit growing, harvesting, and, in cooperation with the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates, studies of the behavior of fruits during the process of transportation, marketing, and while in commercial storage—

The first part of that paragraph, the Senator from New York must admit, rightfully comes under the heading "Bureau of Plant Industry." If I understood the Senator from Oregon correctly, he stated that certain diseases were sometimes made manifest in the processes of shipment, and it was to study, as I understood him to say, the appearance of that fungus, the brown and black rot that occurred in this fruit. I want to give my understanding of this, for the Senator from New York is a member of the committee, and I am also a member of it. The point made by the Senator from Oregon was that there is no dispute about the first part of the paragraph to which the Senator from New York refers, on page 24, belonging to the work of that bureau.

Mr. WADSWORTH. None at all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Oregon called the committee's attention to the fact that certain fungous diseases made themselves apparent during the time of shipment, and that he desired to have the Bureau of Plant Industry clothed with the power of investigating the reasons for it and all that was necessary to find out just what might be done to prevent the appearance of that disease in transportation.

The language may be somewhat unfortunate, but I understand that to be the object, and it seemed to me that this was a very pertinent place for it to appear. As to its being a duplication of the other work, I do not see any analogy whatever. Just what lines did the Senator say were a duplication on pages 24 and 75?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The direct duplication is between page 24 and page 74; but there is another item on the bottom of page 75, which, while not duplicated elsewhere, seems to me to provide for work which ought to be done by a scientific bureau. We have a number of scientific bureaus in the Department of Agriculture, but now we find that the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates is gradually absorbing scientific investigational functions.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, there is no scientific work whatever connected with the testing of bleaching qualities. That is a mechanical process. There is no scientific work at all on an electric device for testing the tensile strength of the fiber. It is just like weighing a pound of meat or a pound of butter. You have your instrument; you put upon it yarns of so many counts, and have the weights put upon it, and it automatically registers the breaking point; so that all you have to do is to get the scientists to make the standard, and then the test is made, and there is no science in it. It is simply testing the intrinsic commercial value of the material and the work of giving us that information belongs entirely to the Bureau of Markets.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is perfectly correct as to the item on the bottom of page 75, but not correct as to the item on page 74. That I think, is an out-and-out duplication of work.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from Utah point out to me where he thinks there is a duplication? I should like to say that I think duplications in our departments ought to be corrected wherever possible, and for that reason I am asking him to point out in what particulars he thinks these two items are duplications.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will read the proviso beginning on line 11, page 74, down to and including line 15, and then read the provision on page 24, beginning with line 4 and including line 8, as amended, I think he will see that there is no question but that there is a duplication there; and, furthermore, I think the objections of the Senator from New York apply to these provisions. There will be built up in the Bureau of Markets a scientific personnel in these two cases. It will be exactly that. It can not help but be that if the work is to be done. If the Bureau of Markets do not give any more correct information upon these items than the Senator from South Carolina thinks they have given on the cotton crop, I do not think we ought to rely upon them at all, and I think if we did we would be running into an alley with nothing but a blank wall at the end of the alley.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate, but I want to say for the RECORD that in reading this paragraph on page 74 I can not understand how anyone can question the fact that that work belongs to the Bureau of Markets, for it says that no less than $40,000 shall be used for the study of methods of prevention of losses.

Mr. SMOOT. By what?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. By deterioration and decay. It does not enter into any scientific field. Suppose you are shipping a carload of watermelons and you find that by piling them up on each other, not crating them, they break down and are ruined. You have not scientifically investigated anything. You have investigated the mechanical process by which this loss was incurred. Therefore, if you can find some carriage that will prevent it, you have prevented the loss.

Mr. SMOOT. Suppose it were a case of grapefruit or a case of apples, and they were not piled up on each other and the dimensions of that case were regulated by law. Suppose the law said that it must be just so long and so wide and so high. The only way to find the cause of deterioration or decay would be to make a chemical analysis, and they would have to have a specialist for that purpose; and that is what this provides for.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. But it says here—

Methods of prevention of losses by deterioration, decay, and freezing of fruits and vegetables in storage and in transit in refrigerator cars, heater cars, and ocean vessels.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think that is entirely pertinent to the work of the Bureau of Markets, in so far as they can find what has been the cause by virtue of improper crating, by virtue of improper refrigerating, and all of the incidents that would help the producer or the shipper to know what were the causes. I think that comes clearly within the purview of the work of this bureau, and I think there is no duplication of work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 75, line 22, before the word "may," to strike out "$25,860" and insert "$30,000," so as to read:

For investigating, demonstrating, and promoting the use of standards for the different grades, qualities, and conditions of cotton, and for investigating the ginning, grading, stapling, baling, marking, compressing, and tare of cotton, $38,400: Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $30,000 may be used for testing the waste, tensile strength, and bleaching qualities of the different grades and classes of cotton in order to determine their spinning value and for demonstrating the results of such tests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 15, after the word "agencies," to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$350,000," so as to read:

For collecting, compiling, abstracting, analyzing, summarizing, interpreting, and publishing data relating to agriculture, including crop and live-stock estimates, acreage, yield, grades, stocks, and value of farm crops, and numbers, grades, and value of live stock and live-stock products on farms, in cooperation with the States Relations Service and other Federal, State, and local agencies, $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 15, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That not less than $100,000 shall be used for collecting and disseminating to American producers, importers, exporters, and other interested persons information relative to the world supply of and need for American agricultural products, marketing methods, conditions, prices, and other factors, a knowledge of which is necessary to the advantageous disposition of such products in foreign countries, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, including the purchase of such books and periodicals as may be necessary in connection with this work.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the proposed amendment is one of the most desirable, one of the most needed, and one which will prove perhaps the most beneficial of any proposition which this measure contains.

Heretofore the information which has been gathered and disseminated by the Agricultural Department has informed consumer of the probable extent and amount of the crops, but it has not given any reciprocal information to the producer, who gropes in the dark, so to speak, as regards markets, the demand for products here, there, and yonder, and the probable effect upon his produce of corresponding production in other parts of the world.

This is something for which the public money can be well expended. Inasmuch as I have been prone to object to a great many of the appropriations in this and preceding Agricultural bills—objections which I think are well founded—it is a source of pleasure for me to be able to give my unqualified approbation to an object such as is here sought to be subserved. I am satisfied that it will be productive of immense benefit, and I certainly would not complain if the amount appropriated for the purpose were much in excess of what is stated.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I fully agree with the Senator from Colorado as to the wisdom of securing this information, but here, again, we are duplicating the work that is done by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, for which we appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars; and in the hearings before the Appropriations Committee on the sundry civil appropriation bill we found that they were doing the exact work and collecting the information that we anticipated the Tariff Commission were collecting, and it was shown that the Tariff Commission came to that bureau and secured the information upon which they based some of their figures and reports. The very information asked for by this amendment is already collected and can be secured from that bureau, and it is a mere duplication of work.

I know that the work ought to be done; I know that this information ought to be in the possession of the Government; but if the testimony that has been given to the Committee on Appropriations is to be relied upon that information is being collected from all parts of the world to-day by our commercial attachés. If it is not being collected, what are they doing, and why are we spending the hundreds of thousands of dollars in salaries paid to them and expenses for the purpose of collecting all information that affects our foreign trade?

I do not know whether the chairman of the committee has had his attention called to that matter or not.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, Mr. President; I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, and I remember very well when that matter was taken up; but the Senator, I believe, will agree with me that the amount appropriated in the other appropriation bill is for manufactured products.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe I am safe in saying that 90 per cent of that money is not used for agricultural products.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not say what it is used for, but it is not for that purpose; it is for all purposes.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not say it is for that purpose, but I do say that not to exceed 10 per cent of it is used for any such purposes as we are providing for here.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not deny that they claimed that this information that they were collecting affected all of the foreign trade of the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator. I am not in disagreement as to what is claimed for it; but the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has explained this paragraph much better than I can, and I am very glad to have his approval of it. The committee thought that they really had done good service in being able to work out this proposition.

The Senator from Utah knows that there was a large estimate for this particular work; that is, for the Bureau of Markets the estimate was $590,741. The House allowed $250,000 only. The Senate committee increased that $100,000 and inserted this particular provision, and I am very glad to have the absolute approval of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and also to have the partial approval of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I said in my opening statement that this information ought to be collected, but if the testimony before the Appropriations Committee was correct we have this information. The Senator from North Dakota was present, I think, when it was testified before the committee that the information which we thought the Tariff Commission was collecting as to this foreign business was really being collected by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Mr. GRONNA. I am sure the Senator will admit, because he is always fair and reasonable, that, if we do have it, the language in this provision is so broad that there will be no necessity for the expenditure of any money for obtaining that part of it. There will be no duplication.

Mr. SMOOT. There certainly will be duplication and extra expense, if we send men to foreign countries and at the expense which it takes to send them there, and pay them, together with what has to be paid for their keep when away from Washington, to collect this information. If they are going to collect any they ought to be there to collect it all, and that is what we have the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for. I have not any doubt but what this money will be spent, even if it is necessary to send them on a junketing trip, before the end of the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does it not involve to some extent rather strengthening our representation on the International Institute of Agriculture? There is an agency for gathering information as to the world supply of various products, the prices, conditions, and that sort of thing.

Mr. SMOOT. We make another appropriation for that. That is an institute which has headquarters in Rome, and Mr. Lubin was there for years, but he is now dead, so we have to send somebody else there.

Mr. FLETCHER. Now we are simply paying the salary of one man in that position.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am very much interested in the Department of Commerce, which has commercial attachés to furnish information to the people of this country. I do not agree with the Senator from Utah that they gather the information provided for under this provision. I agree with the Senator from North Dakota, who is a member of the committee, who recalls that tradesmen of the United States, members of the chambers of commerce, urged appropriations in order that they might get this information, so that they would know what could be furnished, how it would be furnished, and all about it, but nothing as to farm products.

Mr. SMOOT. All foreign commerce, farm and everything else. If we go on this way we might just as well give notice to all of the departments of the Government, "If the Appropriations Committee will not give you what you want, come to the Committee on Agriculture, and you can get it." I do not think that would be proper; I do not think it would be right.

Mr. President, in what I have said to-day I have an object in view. I think that when the next Secretary of Agriculture is inducted into office he ought to go through the appropriation bill before making estimates for the next year—that is, I mean for the fiscal year following the one for which this bill provides—and ought to take everything out of it that leads to a duplication of work done in other departments. I am going to ask the new Secretary of Agriculture that that be done, and then let all of the departments understand that they can only secure an appropriation from one committee, and let it be understood that it must be in one appropriation and for one specific purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the Senator will carry out that theory with respect to Army appropriations, because the Appropriations Committee to-day is spending money for the Army, and so is the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely; and the Senator knows that. Many a time, if we did not have a member of the Military Affairs Committee as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, there would be brought into this Chamber duplication after duplication, as the Senator from New York knows. We have tried to work together, and tried to eliminate those duplications, as far as the Military Affairs Committee and the Appropriations Committee are concerned.

Mr. GORE. I want to suggest to the Senator from Utah that he offer an amendment to this bill requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to submit to Congress a report at the next regular session embodying that information.

Mr. SMOOT. I think more than likely when the time arrives for the making of the next appropriation bill the commission on reorganization may have made some kind of a report, and I express the hope that the Senate will support the recommendations of that commission wherever they eliminate duplication of work in any of the departments of the Government. That is all that commission will undertake to do, and before a recommendation is ever made to Congress the members of that commission have to make a study of it. They have to go into the details of it. They have to themselves know whether it is a duplication of work, and if I had my way that commission would work in full accord with the head of every department of our Government. But whenever it is found to be a fact that there is duplication of work in any form whatever, then that ought to be eliminated from the Government appropriations.

Mr. GORE. I suggest to the Senator from Utah that we had better undertake to eliminate this service and lop off these powers pretty early in the next administration before the pride of power on the part of the heads of departments attaches.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a very wise suggestion on the part of the Senator from Oklahoma, because past experience has demonstrated that after they get in and really find out how many employees they have they will keep every single one of them. They are just as tenacious about keeping their employees and their authority as an individual would be if he owned an interest in a great corporation and desired it to be not only as large as it was but to increase every year.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] taking this matter up with the Secretary of Agriculture and providing against a duplication of work in any bill that may be presented to the next Congress. I am in favor of that. I do hope that the amendment to this bill offered by the committee, which has been supported so ably by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], will be adopted, because this work ought to be done. The present provision in the law which has been referred to does not extend to this character of work, and I trust this amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think the statement of the Senator from Utah as to what he intends to do shows a mighty good purpose. I want to suggest that in doing that the Secretary of Agriculture should go outside of his department and get about three men who are not interested in the work of the department, as departmental work, and have them suggest a reframing of this bill, because he will never do away with these duplications if he leaves it largely to the chiefs of the bureaus, as he will have to do unless he goes outside of the department.

But this is what I rose to call attention to. The Committee on Agriculture has condemned this provision on page 76, the first part of the paragraph, for collecting and filing and getting estimates, and so forth. The Committee on Agriculture itself has condemned that provision and the Senate has indorsed that condemnation. We passed a resolution the other day directing the Committee on Agriculture to investigate and ascertain the amount of wheat and cotton and things like that on hand throughout the country, and the reason for it was that the estimates and reports and the work of the department are not reliable—are not worth anything, and if it had been discussed by those in favor of the resolution before the Senate as they discussed it with me, they would have denounced in unmeasured terms the work of the department. They said it was not reliable, could not be depended upon, was not worth anything, and therefore it was necessary for the Agricultural Committee to investigate it. Yet here we are appropriating $350,000 for doing that work. We will probably have another resolution of investigation at the end of the year to find out the amount of these things on hand.

I do not share to a certain extent the opinion of the work of the department in this respect the Committee on Agriculture apparently had and that the Senate apparently had, but I do doubt its correctness and reliability.

Mr. McNARY. I want to say to the Senator from Washington that his inference is too broad. I do not know any member of the Committee on Agriculture who has criticized these departments or duplicated the reports they have sent in. If any members of the committee have done so, it has been as individuals. This item has been carried for a number of years, and been extended by reason of the provision found in line 15. The question someone raised here the other day, speaking as a Senator, was that he wanted the Agricultural Committee to investigate the sources upon which these estimates were made. But no member of the Agricultural Committee, or the committee itself, has ever duplicated the work of this department or any of the departments connected with and doing this great service to American farmers.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I may have made the statement a little too broad. I believe that resolution was not referred to the Committee on Agriculture. But, Mr. President, I find members of the Committee on Agriculture are supporting that resolution on the floor of the Senate. There was not one of them who questioned the desirability of having this investigation made, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] stated to me that this work of the department, and these reports they were getting out, and the information they had, were not reliable at all. I agree with him. I do not think they were, and I do not think we will get any more reliable information by the investigation of the committee, as far as that is concerned.

I am not opposing this proposition. I just wanted to call attention to the resolution of investigation, and I presume we will have another one at the end of the coming fiscal year, condemning the information furnished by the department under this appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, this is another occasion when a Member of the Senate is not well informed on the matter to which he speaks. Those of us who have been affected, and have investigated, find that the statistics affecting one particular thing are gotten up by every department, and come in different phases, and the Senator was speaking about my offering a resolution and inveighing against the Bureau of Markets. That was only a part of the source of information. The Bureau of the Census was the particular one I had reference to. The Census Bureau is charged with gathering the statistics as to the supply and distribution of wheat and other grain, and of cotton.

I asked for their sources of information as to the world's supply and the American supply. They gave me their estimates and the sources of their information. The Bureau of Markets comes along and makes an estimate of the supply, but not of the distribution, and the two are more or less conflicting. Both of them, I believe, were incorrect. The sources of information might have been satisfactory to them but were not to me. I do not believe they were satisfactory to the members of the Agricultural Committee, although I do not know.

I have nothing to say about this particular department, because they were not charged under the law with gathering the figures as to the supply and distribution of any particular crop in a statistical way, but the Bureau of the Census was, and it was their method and the result of that method that I called into question, and incidentally the Bureau of Markets only in so far as they pertained to it.

I thought the other day when the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] was discussing the matter that he had an idea that the Bureau of Markets were the ones who gathered the information and disseminated it, when as a matter of fact it is the Bureau of the Census. I said the other day, and repeat now, that we ought not to have duplications along such lines of work but should have one department to do a specific work and hold them responsible for that specific work.

In conclusion I wish to say, as to the criticism of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] about duplication of work, that whatever pertains to the agricultural interests of the country ought to be carried in an agricultural bill, and if some of the departments duplicate the work that rightfully belongs to the Department of Agriculture, that other department ought to be cut out and there should not be a restriction of the work of the Department of Agriculture. The thing he criticizes is about us demanding that, if we are to give to the world the products of this country, then we should know what are the market conditions that the producers of the country have to meet. It is restricted to agricultural products, the production and the effect of the supply in the world of those things that we have to meet in competition, and therefore rightfully belongs in this bill. If there is any criticism as to duplication, let it go out of the other department that is duplicating the work of the Agricultural Department and leave the Department of Agriculture equipped to serve the farmer.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What the Senator says confirms me in the belief that I did know what I was talking about. The Bureau of Markets is called the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates. That does not confine it to potatoes or corn or barley or rye or oats. That includes wheat and includes cotton. They have been getting out their reports. I have seen what is called the Crop Reporter coming out from time to time. It purports to give estimates, and so forth, and I have not any doubt that it is all compiled under the language of the bill. The language of the bill is just as broad as it could be made for the collecting of such information.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Washington will allow me, they give out estimates, but that is not the question that I was complaining of most, nor was it the basis, particularly, of the resolution that I offered. The Bureau of the Census is one that gives out an official report of the supply and distribution of the standard crops in this country. I have in my desk their annual report. The Bureau of Markets is practically in its beginning. The Census Bureau has been established for years and years.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The other reports are just as official as the reports gotten out by the Bureau of the Census. They are both provided for by law. The language has been carried in the bill for some time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They do not pertain to the same subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They may cover the subject. Here is the way it reads:

> For collecting, compiling, abstracting, analyzing, summarizing, interpreting, and publishing data relating to agriculture, including crop and live-stock estimates—

If that does not cover wheat and cotton and all that sort of thing and estimates for them provided by law and make the reports just as official as any reports of the Bureau of the Census, I can not understand language or the effect of legislative provisions. It continues:

> acreage, yield, grades, stocks, and value of farm crops, and numbers, grades, and value of live stock and live-stock products on farms.

I do not complain if the Senator has no confidence in the reports. What I complain of is that we will appropriate two or three hundred thousand dollars for getting the reports, and then probably spend one or two hundred thousand dollars for the Committee on Agriculture to go around over the country and show that the reports are no good.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; I did not have a word to say about the particular item that the Senator has read. They estimate how much, and that is all right, but the Bureau of the Census is charged not only with estimating how much we make but how much we consume, how much the world consumes of that article, what stock is left over after one consumption year to be carried into the next consumption year, and then as to the world's supply of a like product and how much of that is carried over, including American production. This only pertains to our domestic crop as to production, estimate of production, and so forth.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If that is correct, then we ought to do away with the item entirely and let the Bureau of the Census furnish the information, or else we ought to take away the right of the Census Bureau to do that and let the other organization do it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Just how far they duplicate is a matter that the Senate ought to correct. I agree thoroughly with that. I think the Department of Agriculture ought to get the ginners' report for cotton, the thrashers' report for wheat, and then give out the bulletins stating how much has been produced, how much consumed, how much exported, and how much of the world production of like things have been imported into this country, consumed abroad and here, and what is the probable supply, in order to enable farmers of the country to govern themselves in the production of the crop. I do claim that that duplication ought to be cut out. The Census Department ought to quit this work or the Department of Agriculture ought to quit it. I agree thoroughly with the Senator in that respect, but I claim that the Census Bureau has not given us a satisfactory account.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the reason why it ought to be cut out.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not quarreling with that. I am stating that there has been, in my opinion, a disastrous result, either from this duplication or a lack of money or something else, in getting the proper figures and putting them in proper shape.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, lack of information about the various provisions in the Agricultural appropriation bill, I think, is responsible for the attacks that are being made upon them by various Senators. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] does not seem to understand that the matter of gathering certain statistics of farm products is different from the reports of the amount of cotton ginned. The Bureau of Markets looks out for places in the country where certain products are demanded and for places in the country where certain farm products are grown. The Bureau of Crop Estimates estimates the number of acres planted in certain crops, grain or cotton, and it estimates the size of the crop according to the information that it obtains. The Census Bureau reports the amount of cotton coming into the market that has been produced by the cotton farmer, hauled to the gin, separated from the seed, and the lint packed into a bale. The ginner's report accounts for this cotton. That is what we had in mind the other day when we supported the resolution to gather the information about the amount of cotton on hand in the United States, all kinds of cotton, unspinnable cotton, linters, and spinnable cotton.

The Senator from Washington has this matter all confused in his mind when he reads the provision about the Bureau of Crop Estimates and the Bureau of Markets. They are two separate departments. One gives information as to the marketing of the products and the other estimates the amount of acres planted and the size of the crop to be produced, and I repeat all this is separate and distinct from the gathering of reports as to cotton ginned. I hope that some time during the discussion on the bill we will get the matter clear in the mind of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to call the Senator's attention to a fact that he apparently does not know, and that is that the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates is one bureau, and that the one bureau not only looks after markets but the making of crop estimates.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator is mistaken about that. The Bureau of Markets may be connected with the Bureau of Crop Estimates, but there is a bureau that looks after the estimating of crops separate and distinct from the Bureau of Markets itself.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee why the appropriation is made for the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates as one bureau? Why does he not designate it as two bureaus if there are two bureaus?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Washington that the chairman of the committee did not draw the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask the chairman of the committee if there are two bureaus.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Esterbrook, if I may name the man——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not care anything about the names of the men. I want to know where the appropriation is in the bill for the Chief of the Bureau of Crop Estimates.

Mr. McNARY. Page 72, line 22.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is for the Chief of the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates. I want to know where the appropriation is for two bureaus under this head of Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates. That is what I want to know, and why it is not called bureaus if there are two bureaus.

Mr. GRONNA. There is a division. One is a division and the other is a bureau.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, well, that is a different proposition. There is only one bureau.

Mr. GRONNA. There is a division, if the Senator will permit me to answer. If not, of course he can go on.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to have the Senator answer me. I want to know.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will give me time, I will answer him.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am asking the Senator if there is one bureau or if there are two bureaus?

Mr. GRONNA. There is one bureau known as the Bureau of Statistics. There are two divisions, the Division of Crop Estimates and the Division of Markets.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator from Alabama will listen to this explanation. The chairman of the committee says there is only one bureau.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is true.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I said.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But there is a division which does the work of crop estimates.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, there may be two divisions or four divisions or five divisions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Their work is entirely different.

Mr. HEFLIN. It is a matter of construction.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator said there were two bureaus.

Mr. HEFLIN. I may be mistaken about the two bureaus, but there is another division in there that has to do with crop estimates, separate and distinct from the Bureau of Markets.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not dispute that, but it is all under one bureau and under one head.

Mr. HEFLIN. I believe that the Senator is about to get this matter straight in his mind.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, it is all agreed that there is one bureau and two divisions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Good.

Mr. HARRISON. So the Senator from Washington is right and the Senator from Alabama is right.

I want to read the provision which the Committee on Agriculture has unanimously reported and which, it seems, every Senator on the floor is in favor of, merely to call the attention of the Senate to it before we finally vote upon it:

Provided, That not less than $100,000 shall be used for collecting and disseminating to American producers, importers, exporters, and other interested persons information relative to the world supply of and need for American agricultural products, marketing methods, conditions, prices, and other factors, a knowledge of which is necessary to the advantageous disposition of such products in foreign countries, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government.

We are trying here to help the American producer to obtain data and information to enable him to sell his goods, wares, and products in foreign countries; in other words, to help promote, in our export trade, the sale of our agricultural products. I am a little amused that some Senators should favor this provision under the peculiar circumstances which have developed at this session of Congress. I can understand how we may save $100,000 in the event certain contingencies arise. If the so-called emergency tariff bill should become a law and a sufficient number should be corralled in the Senate and in the other House to override the President's veto, for which Senators on the other side of the aisle are praying, we would not need make this appropriation, because if that bill should become a law other countries would set up such methods of reprisal that we would not have any export trade and we could not ship anything to them. For instance, if that bill should become a law, placing a duty on wheat of 40 cents per bushel, and thereby making Canada mad with us and causing the Canadians, then, to place an embargo on the goods which our farmers may raise in this country for export to Canada and sale there, we would not need to go into Canada to collect any data and disseminate them among the agricultural producers of the country in the hope that they could sell anything in Canada, because if we are going to place an embargo, as we propose to do in that bill, of 40 cents a bushel on wheat imported from Canada into the United States, naturally, if we read correctly what the newspapers say, Canada will place an embargo against our shipments, not only of agricultural products but of manufactured products into Canada. The same thing would apply touching farm products being exported to Argentina, to countries in Europe, and to other countries. Therefore, if the so-called emergency tariff bill should become a law, we could save this $100,000; it then would not be needed at all, because the collection of data for the American producers to enable them to send their farm products to foreign markets for sale would not be necessary.

Of course, we all believe that the emergency tariff bill is a failure. I understand the conditions bear out that statement; that Senators on the other side of the Chamber have already given up all hope of it ever becoming a law. A few weeks ago Senators on the other side of the Chamber got very enthusiastic and persistent and insistent about passing the bill in a few days. First, they tried to have a day set for a vote on it.

Then, when they could not do that they tried to cram down our throats a cloture rule for the second time in the history of the United States Senate and to pass the bill right through. However, they could not get a two-thirds majority, and the effort to secure cloture failed; but eventually the bill did pass. One week from to-day the bill passed the Senate of the United States. It is now in the hands of the Senator—I think I am correct in giving the names of the conferees—from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who showed so much enthusiasm for the bill, who was so persistent in forcing it through the Senate, who believed in it so whole-heartedly and sincerely; of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and other Senators, whose names I do not at the moment recall, and who have been in conference on the bill since last Wednesday—seven days ago. The end of Congress is approaching, only a few more days remaining. Those Senators have known all the time that unless the bill got to the President within a certain date—10 days before adjournment—he might kill it by a pocket veto; that it had to get to him by a certain time in order, if he should veto it, that the Senate and House might try to pass it over his veto. But they are afraid that the Senate and the House might pass the bill over the President's veto. So the Senator from Pennsylvania, the Senator from Utah, and the Senator from North Dakota—I think they are the conferees on the part of the Senate—for a week have sat in conference, holding the bill away from the Senate and the House, keeping us from taking action on it, in order that the President might either approve it or veto it.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HARRISON. I shall conclude in a moment.

So if the emergency tariff bill should become a law there will be no need for this $100,000 appropriation; but if it should not become a law, then it would be a wise measure, and the appropriation should be voted.

Now I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Mississippi that he is bringing news to this side of the Senate when he says we do not want the emergency tariff bill to be passed. I am inclined to doubt his authority as to that, because of his observation to the effect that we shall not need to protect our foreign markets if the bill be passed. I have heard that same cry whenever we have passed a protectionist tariff bill; it is not new at all. It has always been said, "We can not trade with other countries unless we buy of them and let them have free access to our markets," and so forth. That is not very persuasive after all these years, when we have been fortunate enough to be able to accumulate sufficient money and credit to carry on a World War involving the expenditure of these billions of dollars.

Mr. HARRISON. But the party of the Senator from Wyoming never had the audacity to impose such high tariff rates as are proposed in the emergency tariff bill. That bill, for instance, proposes a duty of 40 cents a bushel on wheat, and the Senator's party has never before thought of imposing a duty of over 20 cents a bushel on wheat. On wool—and the Senator is well versed on the question of wool—we find that in the Payne-Aldrich bill there was only a duty of 11 or 12 cents a pound on wool and not 45 cents a pound as is proposed in the emergency tariff bill.

Mr. WARREN. That is true, but in the arrangement of proportions a different tariff is called for.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is bound to admit that while one rate may be a matter of protection the other one operates as an embargo. I will not take up the time of the Senate by reading the quotations, but I have here articles from Argentina and Canada and other countries which show that they are going to retaliate by placing an embargo against the products and goods and wares shipped from this country into theirs if we pass the emergency tariff bill.

Mr. WARREN. No one who knows the Senator from Mississippi believes that he is cowardly enough to think that a tariff to last for a few months will put us in that position.

Mr. HARRISON. I sincerely hope not.

Mr. WARREN. He has too much courage for that. I am willing to admire the readiness with which he enters into these political matters whenever we talk about tariffs, and so forth, but when the time comes we shall have that all out as to our not being able to sell, and we shall have the same old threat.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think that this matter is remaining in conference too long, it having been there a week, notwithstanding the fact that it was proposed so enthusiastically and persistently a short time ago to cram it down our throats by a cloture rule here.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator himself has served for many weeks on conference committees in connection with legislative matters. I know that I have been very many times. We are in conference now on three different bills, and we have been in conference for several days and nights. There is not any outcome yet, but I think we shall have one.

Mr. HARRISON. If the other side are not going to give us another chance to vote on the emergency tariff bill, very well. I merely thought I would call the attention of the Senate to these glaring features; that is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 77, line 8, to increase the appropriation for general expenses of the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates from "$1,339,560" to "$1,439,560."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 8, to insert:

That hereafter the powers conferred and the duties imposed by law on the Bureau of Statistics and the Bureau of Crop Estimates of the Department of Agriculture shall be exercised and performed by the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 22, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That any moneys received from or in connection with the sale of cotton purchased for the preparation of practical forms of the official cotton standards and condemned as unsuitable for such use may be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, for the purchase of other cotton for such use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 17, to increase the appropriation for administration of the United States warehouse act from "$65,000" to "$100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for completion of wool work, on page 79, after line 9, to insert:

And to continue, as far as practicable, the distribution among the growers of the wool clip of 1918 of all sums heretofore or hereafter collected or recovered with or without suit by the Government from all persons, firms, or corporations which handled any part of the wool clip of 1918, which said regulations are hereby legalized, ratified, and confirmed as fully to all intents and purposes as if the same had by prior act of Congress been specifically authorized and directed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates from "$2,939,444" to "$3,074,444."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 15, after the word "purposes" to strike out "$115,400" and insert "$125,000," so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of April 26, 1910, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded Paris greens, lead arsenates, other insecticides, and also fungicides, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 17, to increase the total appropriation for enforcement of the insecticide act from "$146,910" to "$156,510."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 19, to increase the appropriation for cooperative fire protection of forested watersheds of navigable streams from "$125,000" to "$625,000," so as to read:

Cooperative fire protection of forested watersheds of navigable streams: For cooperation with any State or group of States in the protection from fire of the forested watersheds of navigable streams under the provisions of section 2 of the act of March 1, 1911, entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," $625,000.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly on this item. I do not think the bill contains a more deserving or more meritorious provision than this one. I shall attempt to condense what I have to say into a few words so that I shall not weary the Senators present.

The estimate of the Department of Agriculture as to the amount necessary to perform efficiently the work required was $1,000,000. In the House the amount was decreased to $125,000, a sum comparable to that which was used last year. When the matter came before the attention of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I offered an amendment increasing the appropriation $500,000, making the total appropriation $625,000, which was adopted by the committee.

Mr. President, I think it is generally conceded that the prevention of forest fires is the most important test of forestry to-day. It is going to be impossible to initiate and carry into execution a reforestation policy that does not embrace the subject of forest-fire prevention. It will be observed that this item contemplates cooperation with the several States; and it is to that subject and that particular phase that I want to address myself at this time.

During the past fiscal year the Forest Service cooperated with 25 States in the protection of approximately 150,000,000 acres of State and privately owned land from forest fires. As against the Federal appropriation of $100,000, the expenditures of the cooperating States aggregated $860,000, making a total of nearly $1,000,000, and the expenditures of private forest owners within these States aggregated about $700,000. The Federal Government thus furnished but $100,000 for the protection from fire of the State and private forests of the country out of a total expenditure for this purpose of $1,660,000. The States themselves spent over eight times as much as the Federal Government for the protection of this splendid resource.

By the terms of the law the expenditure in any State may not exceed the State expenditures for the same purpose. In fact, Federal expenditures were uniformly very much less than State expenditures. The Federal Government's maximum expenditure during the fiscal year in any one State was $10,432, in Maine, as against an expenditure by the State of $116,844. It spent $5,150 in New York as against a State expenditure of $132,528, $25,450 in Montana as compared with a State expenditure of $51,549, and $6,067 in Minnesota as compared with a State expenditure of $104,096, and in my own State the Government spent $6,306 as compared with a State expenditure of $28,787.

In the case of every cooperating State appeals for additional aid were made and had to be rejected because Government funds would go no further. This fund is expended only in accordance with a specific plan for fire protection which meets with the approval of the Forest Service, and the actual use of the money is checked up in the field by inspectors from the Forest Service. The money is spent exclusively for personal services, for patrolmen, lookout watchmen, and rangers in accordance with the fire-protection plan of the State concerned.

The 25 States with which the Forest Service has cooperated contain 65,000,000 acres of forest land which are still largely unprotected. There are 14 additional States, with which there has been no cooperation hitherto, which contain important forest areas aggregating 110,000,000 acres now almost wholly unprotected. In the 39 States, all told, where the prevention of forest fires is an essential public activity, there are approximately 325,000,000 acres of timbered and cut-over lands requiring protection from fire as a first essential to a continuous supply of timber for the United States. The estimates submitted by a large number of States show that this land can not be protected on an average for less than 2½ cents per acre yearly, or an aggregate of $8,125,000. As against this requirement the sums available from all sources, public and private, aggregated during the last fiscal year about $1,625,000; and in this the Federal Government was represented by an appropriation of but $125,000.

The private expenditures for the protection of forest lands are increasing from year to year; and can be largely increased if public agencies take the lead in organizing forest protection over large areas and then encouraging private owners to participate in its cost on a just basis.

The protection of forest lands from fire is an activity whose cost should be shared by the public and the private landowner. The private owner has a direct interest in the protection of his property, particularly lands containing merchantable timber. But the private owner can not equitably assume the full burden of protecting his property from the forest-fire hazard which goes far beyond the immediate boundaries of his land and to which the whole community contributes. It is not only the duty of the public to assume a share of the protection of forest lands from fire corresponding broadly to the fire hazard which is of general or regional origin; but the public has a very large interest in maintaining the productivity of forest lands as a means of perpetuating one of our basic natural resources. This interest is shared alike by the local public, represented in the State, and by the Nation at large. Our densely populated agricultural and industrial States are dependent upon other States for their supply of timber. They have a very direct economic interest in maintaining the supply of timber being grown elsewhere on the areas logically adapted to that purpose.

It is therefore just and desirable that the National Government should share in the cost of fire protection, not relieving the owner of the land or the State from their responsibilities but sharing the enterprise with them, and by its participation encouraging them to do a great deal more than they otherwise would.

An expenditure of $625,000 by the Government is about one-third of the cost of protecting these forest lands from destructive fires. It is considerably less than the States are now appropriating for this purpose, and will undoubtedly be much less than the State appropriations for the purpose during the next fiscal year. The benefit of this appropriation is not merely the additional funds which are available and which make it possible to extend fire protection over much larger areas, but Federal participation enables the Federal Government, as in the construction of public roads, to fix the standards and to maintain the work done with State funds as well as with its own at high efficiency. The money asked for will be spent in the 25 States which have previously qualified for Federal cooperation and in as many of the 14 additional States having important forest areas as meet Federal qualifications. In no case will Federal expenditures exceed those of the State itself, and in no case will Federal money be spent in a State unless the Forest Service is satisfied that the State laws and administrative system are adequate to get good results in the protection of forest areas through the investment of Federal funds.

This appropriation does not mean that the Federal Government relieves the owner of valuable timber from protecting his property. In the allotments to the States the chief emphasis is placed upon using the Federal funds so as to extend the protection organization of the State to culled, logged-off, and other denuded areas which contain little or no timber of present commercial value and whose owners have the least incentive to incur the cost of protection. These are the very areas whose protection is of the utmost importance in the general public interest, because upon them must we depend for our supply of timber after the present virgin forests are exhausted.

Mr. President, we have used up three-fourths of our original forests, and the supply of timber remaining is becoming less and less adequate for the requirements of the country, both in quantity and in location. Sixty-one per cent of what is left lies west of the Great Plains, whereas the bulk of lumber and paper consumption is east of the Great Plains. I might state here that over 50 per cent of the standing timber to-day is found in the three Pacific Coast States and 61 per cent is found in that great western country lying west of the Mississippi River. Our eastern forested States one after another have been cut out, and ceased to be important producers of timber because their virgin forests have been but very partially and inadequately replaced by second growth after logging. With the exhaustion of these old sources of lumber, paper, and other forest products and with the increasing distance which lumber must be hauled from the sawmill to the consumer, much of it now across the width of the continent, there is a growing scarcity of forest products, which in no great length of time will become critical. Markets may fluctuate one way or another owing to financial and other temporary conditions, but behind it lies a steady decrease in the supply of timber, which has a very vital bearing upon our national housing situation, our national paper situation, and many industries which use lumber in manufactures; and I might say, Mr. President, that the statistics show that one in every twenty persons in this country finds his livelihood in occupations directly connected with lumbering or in industries that are associated therewith.

The greatest cause of this situation is forest fires. We have enough land unfit for agriculture to grow all the timber which this country requires; but a large part of it has been made idle through destructive methods of logging and particularly through repeated forest fires. There are 81,000,000 acres of such land to-day that are unproductive, as far as timber crops of economic value are concerned; and forest fires are largely responsible for their condition. We still have upward of 200,000,000 acres of forest land which has been cut over, but contains cull or second-growth timber or is partially stocked with young trees. The small timber and young growth on this enormous area is a forest asset of the utmost value. A considerable part of this area lies in thickly populated States within a stone's throw of large centers of timber consumption. And yet enormous acreages of such young forest are being destroyed by fire every year.

The private owner can be relied upon, by and large, to protect timber areas which have present commercial value; but these enormous stretches of young forest growth which will not mature without protection and of devastated land which can not be restored to forests without keeping fires out can be protected only by aggressive public action. The protection of these 315,000,000 acres adequately represents the greatest single forestry problem in the country, and of itself will go a long way toward assuring a future supply of timber.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this point to insert in the RECORD a list of States showing cooperative expenditures for the fiscal year 1920 from Federal appropriations and appropriations by the States for protecting forested watersheds of navigable streams from fire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Cooperative expenditures, fiscal year 1920, from Federal appropriations and by the States for protecting forested watersheds of navigable streams from fire.

Mr. McNARY. I also ask permission to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement of additional States which should undertake forest-fire protection with Federal cooperation, but which to-day are not cooperating with the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Additional States which should undertake forest-fire prevention with Federal cooperation:

South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as a final word, much could be said upon the newsprint paper shortage, which is a serious problem to-day, and a committee of which I was a member undertook last year to study and prescribe a remedy; and much could be said about the threat of a great timber shortage in this country. I am not going to speak upon that general subject, but have limited my remarks to that phase which concerns cooperation of the States in the prevention of fires.

It may be said that this increase from $125,000 to $625,000 is a very large increase. In comparison with the expenditures of the States doing the same kind of work it is indeed a very modest increase, and is only one-half the sum asked by the department. Further, Mr. President, this is not a direct tax upon the Treasury of the country. None of this money, in fact, is directly appropriated for the splendid purpose for which it is intended, for the reason that the work of the Forest Service shows a very large profit each year, and this sum of money simply comes out of that fund.

To-day I was supplied by the Bureau of Forestry with a statement showing that the income derived from the forests in the last year—that is, the Government forests—was $4,793,482, whereas the total expense of protecting this great valuable natural resource was $1,773,409, leaving a profit of $3,000,000 to the Government. I sincerely hope, Mr. President, on behalf of the people who are interested in the protection of forests, that the Senate will agree with the action of the Senate committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McNARY. I shall be happy to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the splendid speech of the junior Senator from Oregon, and I am thoroughly convinced as to the merits of the proposition which he presents. I want to ask the Senator if this amount is as much as the department estimated would be necessary to do this work?

Mr. McNARY. The department estimated, I am pleased to tell the Senator from Alabama, $1,000,000. The House allowed $125,000. I asked the Senate committee to add a half million, so that the total amount is $625,000 against an estimate of a million dollars made by the department.

Mr. HEFLIN. It strikes me that if the Government derives more than $3,000,000 profit from its national forests, the Government ought to expend whatever amount of money is necessary to protect these forests from destruction by fire. I feel like voting not only for the proposition carried in the bill but, if the other amount is really needed, I think that it ought to be granted. We ought to provide whatever is necessary to protect our national forests from destruction by fire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 17, to insert:

Field station, Woodward, Okla.: For the establishment in connection with the Woodward, Okla., field station of a live-stock department, through which experiments and demonstrations in live-stock breeding, growing, and feeding, including both beef and dairy animals, may be made, $10,000.

Mr. GORE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the conclusion of the words just read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the words "ten thousand dollars" insert a comma and the words "of which said sum the Secretary is hereby authorized to use not exceeding $3,000 for the purpose of building additional sheds, stalls, and pens for the protection and care of said animals."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, has any estimate been made for that appropriation?

Mr. GORE. The amendment I offered, I will say to the Senator, does not increase the amount reported by the committee.

Mr. THOMAS. I am asking in regard to the committee amendment.

Mr. GORE. This appropriation was made last year; but no provision was made for the construction of sheds, and so forth, and this is simply to continue it. It was not deemed advisable, as I am informed, to embark on the plan without the necessary sheds for the protection of the animals. There is a dry-farming station there, and this is supplemental to that.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think that quite answers the question. The question is whether an estimate has been made for the appropriation carried by this amendment.

Mr. GORE. I could not answer that question. The chairman of the committee probably can.

Mr. THOMAS. I was asking the chairman.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not remember whether there was anything said about the buildings. The amount carried in the bill was estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 23, after the name "Alabama," to insert "and other States," so as to read:

Control and prevention of spread of the Mexican bean beetle: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the recent introduction and rapid multiplication of the Mexican bean beetle in the State of Alabama, and other States, and to provide means for the study, experimentation in eradication, and for the control and prevention of the spread of this insect in that State and to other States, in cooperation with the State of Alabama and other States concerned and with individuals affected, including the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $100,000, of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, after line 14, to insert:

Purchase of farm loan bonds: The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized from time to time during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1921 and 1922, respectively, to purchase at par and accrued interest, with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, from any Federal land bank, farm loan bonds issued by such bank.

Such purchases shall not exceed the sum of $100,000,000 in either of such fiscal years, shall be made only upon the recommendation in writing of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and the bonds so purchased shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum.

Any Federal land bank may at any time purchase, at par and accrued interest, for the purpose of redemption or resale, any bonds so purchased from it and held in the Treasury.

The bonds of any Federal land bank purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury and held in the Treasury under the provisions of this act, three years from the date of purchase shall, upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury, be redeemed or repurchased by such bank at par and accrued interest.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, of course that language, in the same amount, is carried in another bill which has passed the Senate and which is now in conference. The conferees have met, and the conferees on the part of the House have stated they were unable to accept it without submitting it back to the House as legislation. It has gone back to the House, and it will come out within one or two days. I take it for granted that we do not expect to carry the same legislation in two bills, and in more than the amount here stated.

Mr. GRONNA. If the item is agreed to in the legislative bill, of course it will come out of this bill.

Mr. WARREN. Then I understand if the bill comes out of conference containing that provision, on notification of the conferees to the Senator from North Dakota, this item will be taken out?

Mr. GRONNA. It will be eliminated.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if this amendment is subject to a point of order I shall make one against it. I make it on the ground that no estimate has been made for the item; also, that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Before the point of order is ruled on, I want to suggest that the rule says that where an item in an appropriation bill has been reported by a standing committee of the Senate it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. It is general legislation.

Mr. SWANSON. It simply carries out the present law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is entirely new matter, and the point of order is sustained.

The next amendment was, on page 89, after line 10, to insert:

Purchase of seed grain for drought-stricken areas: That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the crop of 1921, to make advances or loans to farmers in the drought-stricken areas of the United States, where he shall find that special need for such assistance exists, for the purchase of wheat, oats, and barley for seed purposes when necessary, to procure such seed and sell same to such farmers. Such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, including an agreement by each farmer to use the seed thus obtained by him for the production of grain. A first lien on the crop to be produced from seed obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor. The total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed the sum of $300. All such advances or loans shall be made through such agencies as the Secretary of Agriculture shall designate. For carrying out the purposes of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000,000 immediately available.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall knowingly make any false representation for the purpose of obtaining an advance, loan, or sale under this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill if this amendment is a duplication of the bill passed a few days ago?

Mr. GRONNA. It is exactly the same language that was in the bill that was passed last Monday.

Mr. THOMAS. If that bill is accepted by the House, this will go out?

Mr. GRONNA. This provision will go out if that passes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The total for the estimate is changed on lines 14 and 15. After the numerals insert the following words:

and an authorization for the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase farm loan bonds, $100,000,000, during the fiscal year 1921, and $100,000,000 during the fiscal year 1922.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the consideration of committee amendments, except those passed over. The Secretary will state the first amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over is on page 7, passed over at the instance of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. In the changing of the totals on lines 20 and 21 the amendments were passed over relating to general expenses of the Weather Bureau.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I offer to be inserted at that point. The Senator from Utah has approved the amendment, and I know of no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 3, insert the following paragraph:

For the maintenance of a printing office in the city of Washington for the printing of weather maps, bulletins, circulars, forms, and other publications, including the pay of additional employees when necessary, $11,450: Provided, That no printing shall be done by the Weather Bureau that can be done at the Government Printing Office without impairing the service of said bureau.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire how the printing has been done in the past.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe it has been done by the Weather Bureau. The Senator from Utah is quite familiar with this matter. I have the estimate here. It is rather lengthy, but I shall have it read. I think perhaps that will give the information desired. I will ask the Secretary to read what the department has to say with regard to it.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

This item was eliminated through a point of order when the bill was under consideration in the House. The point of order was raised by Mr. KESS, as he regarded a change in the language of the item necessary to avoid conflict with the provisions of section 11 of the legislative, executive, and judicial act approved March 1, 1919.

The Weather Bureau plant is admitted to be indispensable to the work of the bureau, and it is essential that the appropriation carried by the item be restored. A slight change in the language of the proviso will meet the wishes of the Joint Committee on Printing and also make the proviso conform to that passed by the House as an amendment of Representative Barnhart, then chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, during a debate on the bill for 1915. The amendment was agreed to by the Senate with the words "in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture" added. It is this added language that is now suggested omitted. The proposed language of the proviso is as follows:

"Provided, That no printing shall be done by the Weather Bureau that can be done at the Government Printing Office without impairing the service of said bureau."

In view of the authority conferred upon the Joint Committee on Printing by the provisions of section 11, it is believed that the omission of the words mentioned will in no way restrict the Secretary of Agriculture or the Chief of the Weather Bureau in the supervision and administrative control of this plant, nor will it in fact increase the powers of the Joint Committee on Printing, which are now very specifically defined in section 11 and other laws.

From conferences with members of the Joint Committee on Printing, it is the understanding of the department that the modified provision is not objectionable to them. Therefore, the restoration of this item in the following language is recommended, to be inserted on page 7, between lines 3 and 4:

"For the maintenance of a printing office in the city of Washington for the printing of weather maps, bulletins, circulars, forms, and other publications, including the pay of additional employees, when necessary, $14,450: Provided, That no printing shall be done by the Weather Bureau that can be done at the Government Printing Office without impairing the service of said bureau."

The amount submitted is the same as was included in the estimates, but $3,000 in excess of the item as reported to the House. The increase of $3,000 is needed for the purchase of supplies, equipment, and repairs, due to expanded costs. There has been no increase in this subappropriation for six years.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the amendment be read.

The Assistant Secretary again read the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The totals will be changed to correspond with the amendment just agreed to. The next committee amendment passed over will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 16, under the heading "Bureau of Plant Industry, salaries," the amount passed over was where the committee proposes to insert in line 7, after the numerals "$3,000," the following:

One administrative assistant in seed and plant distribution, $3,000.

The amount was reduced by the Senate from $3,000 to $2,500.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the increased salary for Mr. Jones.

Mr. GRONNA. The present law allows a salary of $2,500. This would provide an increase of $500.

Mr. SMOOT. With a great deal less responsibility.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amount has already been reduced to $2,500 by the action of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. So I understood.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the record will show that I asked, before the final vote was taken, that the matter be passed over, and I understood the chairman of the committee that it would be passed over and taken up later, before a final vote was had upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair was not here at the time. He knows only what the RECORD shows.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the RECORD will show that fact.

Mr. SMOOT. In order that the Senator may have a chance to have a vote upon it, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the reduction was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote rejecting the amendment of the committee inserting "$3,000" at the end of the clause is reconsidered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the action of the committee ought to be sustained, because the matter was gone into thoroughly. I have said all I care to say about the work of this officer. Evidence of the estimate which the committee places upon him is recorded in the action taken by the committee, and I sincerely hope that $3,000 will be retained, as well as the official.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to add to what the Senator from South Carolina has said, that for a number of years the seed appropriation has gone out of the bill in the Senate almost every year. There has been only one exception that I remember for six or seven years. When the appropriation for the purchase of free seed went out, the appropriation for Mr. Jones went out with it. It as uniformly returned to the bill in conference.

Of course, the conferees were powerless to increase the salary of Mr. Jones. He is an old, faithful, efficient, and, I may add, a very obliging employee of the Government. I think many Senators will bear testimony to his character and reputation in that respect. It has been impossible to increase his pay under the parliamentary situation in which we have found ourselves year after year. It is possible that the seed appropriation may return in conference. I hope not. But we have arranged it so that Mr. Jones will remain in office in any event, charged with other duties of less responsibility. I hope the slight increase in his compensation will be made as a reward for his long and faithful service.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to say just one word more. I appreciate fully the contention made on the floor of the Senate about the great number of employees who may not be essential and the contention against the raising of salaries. There is little encouragement to an employee of the Government who is faithfully serving the Government, giving efficient service, using thrift and all the ability that he has to render that service, and who then receives no recognition at the hands of those who have charge of the affairs of the Government.

The Department of Agriculture complain that in their scientific work they can not keep the efficient scientific men who are rendering such splendid service, because the Government can not and will not meet the competition of private interests, whereas the interests of the Government are paramount to any private interests. Here is one man who has proven himself capable and efficient, tried for years and never found wanting, and we have the opportunity of giving him the pitiful sum of $3,000 a year, and yet there is a question as to the wisdom of that proceeding. It is small encouragement for men to give efficient work when those who have met the requirements that have been placed upon them efficiently have this kind of treatment at our hands.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to add merely one word. I am not going to say anything about Mr. Jones. We have many hundreds and thousands of employees who are just as loyal as Mr. Jones. He has been drawing $2,500 a year for years and years. Among the duties devolving upon him was the distribution of valuable seeds, millions of packages of seeds. I have no doubt that the seed provision is going to remain out of the bill if the bill becomes a law at this session of Congress.

Now, we are taking away from Mr. Jones at least three-fourths of the responsibility that was placed on him previously, and increasing his salary $500—I should say increasing his salary $260, because with the salary of $2,500 he gets a $240 bonus, making $2,740. The increase of salary now is to $3,000, which, of course, under the law, would carry no bonus, and therefore the increase is $260 instead of $500, as stated.

So we have been treating this employee like we have been treating everybody else in the Government service. I can not see any reason why, now that this immense amount of work has been taken away from him, three-quarters of all of the responsibilities that the man has had, his salary should be increased. It is for that reason that I hope that the $3,000, as reported by the committee, will be reduced to $2,500.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will let this go to conference. If I am appointed a member of the conference committee, I will assure the Senator that if the congressional seeds provision does not go back into the bill, the salary of Mr. Jones will not be increased over $2,500, but if it does go back, which we hope it will not, then I hope we can have the $3,000 provision remain in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. With that understanding, I shall not object.

Mr. GRONNA. I move that "$3,000" be substituted for "$2,500."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is to reduce the amount to $2,500.

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw that motion, with the understanding contained in the statement just made by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then the question will be upon agreeing to the committee amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the question now pending.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 47, at the foot of the page, the committee proposed to strike out "$38,000" and insert "$30,000," for enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1897, entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," and so forth.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope that the committee amendment will be rejected. We labored under a misapprehension. I have a letter from the department which I will ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection and the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY,
Washington, February 15, 1921.

For the fiscal year 1921 the Agricultural appropriation bill carried an item under appropriation for the Bureau of Chemistry of $40,000 for the enforcement of the tea act of March 2, 1897, which was less than was asked for at the time of the transfer of the tea law to this department. However, by strict economy and reorganization of this work under the Bureau of Chemistry, and with excellent cooperation from the Customs Service of the Treasury Department, this work has been carried on satisfactorily and efficiently, so that in making up the estimates for the fiscal year 1922, notwithstanding the higher cost of everything connected with the service, we were able to place our estimates at the same figures, $40,000, but recommended that the lump sum be reduced about $3,500 by shifting one clerk at $1,500 per annum, one at $1,400 per annum, and a messenger at $600 per annum to the statutory roll of the bureau, thus reducing the lump sum to $36,500.

The Appropriations Committee of the House transferred one clerk at $1,400 per annum and the messenger at $600 per annum to the statutory roll of the bureau, but did not transfer the clerk at $1,500 per annum, but recommended that the lump sum for the enforcement of the tea act be $38,000, which would have taken care of the clerk at $1,500 per annum. These items as reported from the committee passed the House, but the Senate Agricultural Committee reported the bill out with the item for the enforcement of the tea act reduced to $30,000, exclusive of the two positions transferred to the statutory roll, or at a net decrease of $8,000, or 24 per cent.

If this reduction prevails, it will be absolutely impossible to enforce this act as Congress intended it should be enforced at the time of its passage, and as it has been enforced up to the present time.

Without the full enforcement of this law, the consumer can not be protected from impure and unwholesome tea, as the act provides, and uniformity of inspection of all teas entering the United States can not be continued. This latter condition, if allowed to occur, would bring about unfair competition among importers of teas, because teas below the physical standards of "purity, quality, and fitness for consumption" as fixed by the law, would gain entrance and go into competition with teas equal to the fixed standards, which would work to the detriment of the honest importer who lived up to the standards.

A policing measure of this kind to give full protection to the consumer as well as to the tea merchant must be enforced in its entirety, and any lack of enforcement in any direction nullifies the purposes for which the act was drawn, namely, to protect the consumer from impure and unwholesome teas.

The amount of money absolutely necessary to pay the salaries of the tea-examining force, exclusive of the two men on the statutory roll, which force can not be reduced without destroying the proper functioning of the service, is $28,950. The difference between this amount and the amount proposed by the Senate bill is $1,050, which would not cover the cost of fixing the Government standards, much less take care of the seven tea-examining offices, the drawing of samples, which must be taken from every line and grade and every shipment of tea, and for the traveling expenses of the inspectors and the maintenance of the United States Board of Tea Appeals.

It can be readily seen from these estimates that the reduction proposed in the bill now before the Senate can not spell anything but ruin to a law that protects the consumer from a food product that is one of the easiest to sophisticate and which, before the law was passed, was the most sophisticated and adulterated of any food product entering the United States; in fact, the United States was known as the dumping ground for all trashy and spurious teas.

Respectfully,

GEO. F. MITCHELL,
Supervising Tea Examiner.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to further amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. As he will remember, I introduced an amendment to establish an experimental forestry station at Asheville, N. C. I understand the committee rejected the amendment, so far as it concerned the establishment of such a station at one particular place, but that the committee increased the appropriation under the head of "Silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations" by a sufficient amount to enable the department, if it saw proper, to establish the station at such place as it should determine.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that that is my understanding of the matter.

Mr. HARRISON. When we had the matter under consideration we had the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina before the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. We have not yet finished the committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the committee amendments had been concluded.

Mr. GRONNA. On behalf of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 54, line 17, after the word "Agriculture," it is proposed to insert the following:

to develop the best methods and means of dealing with and spraying against the coddling moth and.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I offer another amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 54, between lines 5 and 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

For investigations of insects affecting greenhouse florists' stock and other ornamental plants, $20,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Does that amendment increase the amount of the appropriation for the investigation of insects?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; that increases the amount by $20,000. I have very voluminous estimates for it, which I shall not take the time of the Senate to read, but it is a very important proposition, I will say to the Senator from Utah. I am sure he will not object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I offer another amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 70, between lines 17 and 18, it is proposed to insert:

For investigations of the chemical and physical character of road materials, for continuing laboratory and field experiments, and for studies and investigations in road design, independently or in cooperation with the State highway departments and other agencies, $148,200, payable out of the administrative fund provided by the Federal aid road act of July 11, 1916, as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Was that estimated for?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; and I will say for the information of the Senate that the member of the Appropriations Committee in the other House who had the bill in charge, Mr. SYDNEY ANDERSON, brought this amendment over to me and said that it should go into the bill. I think it went out on a point of order or in some such way in the other House. We are spending $400,000,000 for the construction of roads, and it seems to me that we ought to allow a sufficient amount to the Bureau of Roads to enable them to ascertain what sort of material ought to be used in road construction. I think it is a very important amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Why can not a part of that large appropriation be used for the purpose?

Mr. GRONNA. This does not enlarge the appropriation, I will say to the Senator from Colorado. It only permits taking out of the appropriation this amount.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from North Dakota said that we had appropriated several hundred million dollars for the building of roads. My question was why a part of that appropriation could not be used, and legitimately used, for this identical purpose?

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand, it can not be taken from that particular fund.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, perhaps it would be interesting to the Senate to know that when the first appropriation was made for this purpose, a number of years ago, it was $10,000. Senators who have gone out to Chevy Chase will remember that a little wooden house, a road experimental station, was constructed in that vicinity. A part of the first appropriation was spent for the building of that box house. Each year since we have had an appropriation for the purpose, until it has now reached the aggregate of $148,000. I do not know what work that would cover, but I remember that one of the Senators from Colorado—not the present senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], however—was very much interested in the subject. The appropriation to which I have referred was the beginning of the proposition, and, I repeat, the appropriation has now grown to $148,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It involves merely the correction of a word.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 90, line 12, it is proposed to strike out the word "by" and insert the word "be."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. On behalf of the committee, I offer another amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 90, between lines 13 and 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the President be, and is hereby, authorized and requested to extend invitations to foreign Governments to be represented by delegates in a world's dairy congress to be held in the United States in 1922: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to create any pecuniary obligation on the part of the Government of the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say that this is a matter which was overlooked by the committee.

Mr. THOMAS. I can not object to the amendment, but it will be followed by an appropriation to entertain the delegates while here.

Mr. SMOOT. As has uniformly been the case in the past.

Mr. THOMAS. As always is the case. Such invitations are accompanied by an express announcement that they will not cost anything, and then we are accused of inhospitality if we do not make the cost as much as the entertainment requires.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado that this amendment is asked for by the President of the United States in a message which is contained in Document No. 347, of which I have a copy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if we are through with the committee amendments——

Mr. GRONNA. There is one more committee amendment to be offered.

Mr. NEW. Then, I shall withhold my amendment until the committee amendments shall have been concluded.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am requested by the chairman of the committee to present the amendment which I send to the desk to be inserted as a new section of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

To enable the joint committee of the two Houses on short-time rural credits, constituted and appointed in pursuance of Public, No. 234, Sixty-sixth Congress, an act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, to continue and complete its labors and report, $5,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee while I suggest an amendment. On page 7, in line 19, I move that the figures "$81,020" be amended to read "$181,020."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 7, line 19, it is proposed to strike out "$81,020," and insert "$181,020," so as to read:

For the maintenance of stations, for observing, measuring, and investigating atmospheric phenomena, including salaries, travel, and other expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $181,020.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to enable the Weather Bureau to perform a necessary function for the aeronautical service, both in relation to the Army and to the Post Office Department. It is necessary for that service to be supplied with accurate reports of weather conditions, and the Weather Bureau naturally can supply them better and more cheaply than can any other agency. While the amendment apparently involves an increase of $100,000 in the expense of conducting this service, as a matter of fact it involves no increase at all, for if the work is not performed by the Weather Bureau it will have to be performed by the Army and by the Post Office Department; so that the money will be expended whether by one agency or the other. It is merely a question of whether it shall be spent by two services, the Army and the Post Office Department, or whether it shall be spent and the service performed by the Weather Bureau, which can carry on the work to much better effect and advantage than can the other services.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, why will not the three services do the same work and follow out the duplications which are apparent in so many other branches of the Government service? Does not the Senator think that the Army and the Post Office Department will do the same work, no matter whether we give this appropriation or not?

Mr. NEW. No; not if the work is done by the Weather Bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. I will watch the result with a great deal of apprehension. If the Post Office Department has the money for the work and the Army has the money for it, they are going to do the work, no matter whether the Weather Bureau does it or not.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator's amendment shall be adopted, then will the work be done by one agency and be paid for only once by that one?

Mr. NEW. I think so; that is, at least, the purpose of the amendment and of the paragraph in the bill which covers the matter.

Mr. HEFLIN. The work will be done by one department, and paid for by one department, where it is now being paid for and being performed by two?

Mr. NEW. The work that will be done by the Weather Bureau under my amendment will be done by the Army and by the Post Office Department in case the amendment is not adopted. It can be done better by the Weather Bureau, and much more satisfactorily and accurately than if done by the other two services.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Indiana that the Department of Agriculture sent in an estimate for $281,000. The present law carries $81,000 for this purpose, the same as the amount in the pending bill. As one of the members of the committee, I should have no objection to allowing the amendment to go to conference, increasing the amount as reported by $100,000. I can not see that it will be an increase in appropriations if the work is not to be done by any other department, and as the Senator has assured that it will not be so done, I should be very glad to let the amendment go to conference, and we shall do the best we can to retain it.

Mr. NEW. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 53, and invite the attention of the chairman of the committee to the proposed amendment.

On page 53, line 22, I move to strike out "$110,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$160,000."

The reason for that is that unless the appropriation carried in the bill is increased to that extent an important portion of the work intended to be accomplished by that provision in the bill will not be done. I have here a letter on the subject from Dr. Howard, the chief of the bureau, in which he says:

I thought that possibly you might desire to know that a mistake has evidently been made. The failure of the Senate committee to include in its report this increase as recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture might be due to the fact that the increase of $10,000 was asked to the stored-products item of the bill for truck-crop and stored-product insect investigations, making a total of $40,000 for this subappropriation, which is identical in amount with the increase requested for the sweet-potato weevil work. Furthermore, the House committee might be under the impression that, inasmuch as it has recommended that $15,000 be immediately available, this covers the amount desired. Without this amount of $40,000 additional for sweet-potato weevil work, we will be in a very bad way for next year, as the $15,000 to be made immediately available would scarcely more than cover our operations for the present fiscal year in eradicating this pest from northern Florida and that small portion of Georgia where it is now practically under control, owing to our efforts.

They have practically controlled the trouble in Georgia, but they have not reached it in Florida. It was through the efforts of the department in connection with this insect which destroys the sweet potato that it was eradicated in Georgia. Now they want to carry on the work in Florida, and they can not do it unless this appropriation is increased.

It is therefore suggested that in the act making appropriations for the Department of griculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, page 53, line 22, $110,000 be struck out and $150,000 be substituted.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Florida that I am in thorough sympathy with the Senator in getting liberal appropriations to eradicate these insects; but the estimate is only $120,000, and we could not go above the estimate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think, perhaps, just as Dr. Howard says, the Senator confuses this estimate with some others. For instance, under two other subappropriation heads the amount estimated for was some $50,000, and it was, perhaps, supposed that that was intended to cover this section, but it does not cover it. My impression is that the estimate for this item is $160,000 or $150,000. The committee took care of the other subappropriation items but they did not take care of this provision. They might have thought that the $15,000 being immediately available would be sufficient, but that will be expended before this year is out.

Mr. GRONNA. The Book of Estimates shows an estimate of only $120,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does not the $120,000 apply to the one item of sweet-potato insects?

Mr. GRONNA. It applies to the paragraph on page 53, beginning with line 19, which reads as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting truck crops, including insects affecting the potato, sugar beet, cabbage, onion, tomato, beans, peas, etc., and insects affecting stored products.

The House allowed $110,000, and then the item reads:

Of which sum $15,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then the estimate is for $120,000?

Mr. GRONNA. One hundred and twenty thousand dollars. I have no objection to increasing that to $120,000 and letting it go to conference.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I can not ask to go beyond the estimate. I will ask that the amendment be changed from $110,000 to $120,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 53, line 22, it is proposed to strike out "$110,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$120,000."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I only want to say that my information is that the department has done very valuable work in my own State toward eradicating this trouble, and this is clearly one of the cases in which the appropriation made a year ago has brought valuable results.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I do so at the suggestion of the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who is absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 42, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

For the establishment and maintenance of a forest experiment station in cooperation with the University of California, $25,000.

Mr. McNARY. The reason for supporting this amendment is set forth very strongly by the chief forester, and I ask permission that his statement may be read, unless the chairman desires to dispose of the amendment otherwise.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, this was not estimated for. I have no objection to having the statement of the chief forester read, but I regret to say that I can not approve it, as one member of the committee, and I hope it will not be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make the point of order?

Mr. GRONNA. I should be very glad to submit it to a vote.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I should like to say a word on this subject.

Mr. THOMAS. I will make the point of order against the amendment, if it is not estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado make the point of order?

Mr. THOMAS. If it is not estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I move to strike out lines 12, 13, 14, and 15, on page 50, which is the item that was the subject of some discussion this afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 50, it is proposed to strike out lines 12 to 15, both inclusive, which read as follows:

For exploration and investigation within the United States to determine possible sources of supply and methods of obtaining potash, nitrates, and other natural fertilizers, $86,840.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have letters from the Director of the Geological Survey and the Director of the Bureau of Mines, both of whom concur in the views expressed here this morning to the effect that this is a mere duplication of the work of those two branches of the Government.

Mr. Smith's letter is as follows:

I regard the work of the Bureau of Soils under the item "For exploration and investigation within the United States to determine possible sources of supply of potash, nitrates, and other fertilizers" as duplicating work being done by the United States Geological Survey under current law. Since 1912 appropriations made for the Geological Survey have provided for "researches with a view of determining geological conditions favorable to the presence of deposits of potash salts," and the search has been made in the deserts of the West for potash minerals, including potash nitrate. Such exploration for supplies of mineral raw materials is essentially geologic and the recognized province of the Geological Survey, irrespective of what use is made of the raw materials. For 10 years this is the position I have held in every conference with representatives of the Bureau of Soils, and, while cooperating with them, I have regretted this duplication of effort.

The investigation of methods of mining potash minerals, their manufacture, and especially the recovery of potash as by-products in metallurgical processes, is a subject outside the work of the Geological Survey, except the annual collection of the statistics of production. Since 1910 the technological investigations of mineral products have come under the Bureau of Mines, and with the technologic work of that bureau on potash the survey's geologic work on the same subject has been coordinated without duplication.

Yours, very cordially,

GEO. OTIS SMITH, Director.

So, Mr. President, the first part—that is, the part in the bill as it came from the House—is a straight duplication of the work of the Geological Survey. The part which originated with the Senate committee—the methods of obtaining the potash from the minerals in connection with which it is found—is a part of the work of the Bureau of Mines, as disclosed by the following letter from the Director of the Bureau of Mines:

In answer to your telephone call, in which you state that the Agricultural appropriation bill carried a clause "for exploration and investigation within the United States to determine possible sources of supply and method for obtaining potash, nitrates, and other natural fertilizers, $86,840," and inquiring if this came within the work of the Bureau of Mines:

The organic act of the Bureau of Mines charges it "with the province and duty to conduct inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning mining and the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances."

Further, in the act providing for the establishing and maintenance of mining experiment stations, it was stated that they were "for the purposes of making investigations and disseminating information * * * in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries * * * preventing unnecessary waste of resources, and otherwise contributing to the advancement of these industries." Accordingly, the Bureau of Mines has carried out considerable work in the mining, treatment, and utilization of the so-called nonmetallic minerals, which include potash, nitrates, phosphates, and other natural fertilizers. In addition, the bureau is planning to enlarge this work, having already placed in the hands of the mining committees of Congress for their consideration a bill to increase the appropriation to the Bureau of Mines for this very purpose, and such bill is now being considered by the Mines and Mining Committee of the House.

The bureau has been working on the recovery of potash and alumina from low-grade alunite at its Salt Lake station, and at the present time a branch of the nonmetallic work which has just been established at Tuscaloosa, Ala., will carry on investigations in connection with raw materials, both as regard potash and phosphate rock. In addition, during the war the Bureau of Mines was actively engaged in the metallurgical end of the manufacture of nitrates, this work being under Dr. C. L. Parson, then chief chemist of the bureau. Also, the Bureau of Mines, through its connection with the Anaconda Commission, detailed an engineer to study and report on the manufacture of phosphates and sulphuric acid, and this work has been partially published in a bureau bulletin.

Finally, the work of inspection and conservation of the mining operations on Government land, including phosphates and sodium minerals, under act of February 25, 1920, has been placed in the Bureau of Mines for administration.

The Geological Survey has carried out a great deal of work in connection with the geology, occurrence, and resources of these nonmetallic minerals, and functions closely with the Bureau of Mines without duplication.

Accordingly, it is my belief that the clause which provides for carrying on this work by the Agricultural Department does duplicate and overlap the work delegated to and now being carried out, so far as funds permit, by the Bureau of Mines.

Cordially, yours,

E. A. HOLBROOK,
Acting Director.

Accordingly it does not seem to me that there is any justification whatever for this item.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I can understand clearly how the two departments to which the Senator refers do the work to which he has called attention, but that is incidental to their work. It is almost like the coking of coal. Incidental to that there are certain by-products, but the Agricultural Department is charged with the specific duty of promoting agriculture, and I submit that one of the most important functions that it can discharge is to locate all possible sources of fertilizers and to give to the agricultural interests of this country that information. My interpretation of this clause would be that they are not restricted to the mineral sources alone but that they may go to any and every source that would tend to increase the supply of these necessary ingredients and inform the agricultural public of that fact.

It may be possible that in some respects the work of the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines may be in extension of or may be helpful to the work of the Agricultural Department. But they are hunting minerals, and they are hunting them for general purposes, and for all purposes for which potash may be used, for which phosphorus may be used, or for which nitrates may be used. But the specific and definite purpose with which this department is charged is to find the sources of supply for agriculture, and if these departments can aid them in this work, well and good; but we should not strike from an Agricultural appropriation bill an appropriation which gives to the Department of Agriculture the duty and power to investigate and find the sources of a thing upon which agriculture depends.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that if there is to be an appropriation made, if we will not allow even incidental and unavoidable duplication, that the appropriation should be taken from these two departments and that work left with the Agricultural Department. But that can not be done, because the Bureau of Mines and the Bureau of Soils are charged with hunting out the minerals and the soil, perhaps, of this country for the benefit of the general public. Incidentally, they find potash, and that is for the use of the general public. They find nitrates, and that is for the use of the general public. But this department is charged with searching for these minerals and other organic and inorganic substances for the purpose of making fertilizer, and the two are in distinct fields, only where one incidentally laps unavoidably the other. The purpose of that department is not to hunt fertilizer. That is only incidental.

The purpose of this is to search for the source, not only in the mineral field, in the inorganic field, but in the organic field, and I submit that we should not abate this appropriation, when we charge them with one of the prime elements upon which agriculture rests. I concede that there might be an incidental overlapping. I suppose that would occur in any department charged with a general duty and another with a specific or definite duty.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator is quite willing to amend it so as to exclude mineral sources, I shall not have the slightest objection to it. If he will make it "sources of natural fertilizer other than mineral," then he would have the situation just as he wants it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Perhaps the Senator would be more willing to agree with my standpoint if he would take into cognizance the fact that two years ago there was discovered a sort of potash in this country. I do not know just which one of the several departments promulgated that fact. The potash was bought by farmers all through the country and applied to the crops with disastrous results, so much so that some crops were a total loss. Upon investigation it was found that it was rich in potash content, but also had a percentage of borax, which, when applied to the soil, absolutely killed the plants.

The Bureau of Mines were hunting potash. They had found potash. The bureau of the Agricultural Department wanted a potash suited for agriculture. In some of the industries throughout the country that potash might have been all-sufficient; the borax might not have been deleterious. But when we bought the potash in good faith, tobacco, corn, and cotton were starved.

Have you charged in your law that when they develop and find this potash, and publish abroad that they have a rich potash content available for the farm, they are to go into it and prepare it as a fertilizer? It is quite a different proposition. When the Bureau of Mines discovers a source of potash, under this the Department of Agriculture can go and test to find whether it is a sulphate or a muriate, or whether it contains deleterious chemicals which make it unfit for fertilizer.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from South Carolina is not unacquainted with the geological conditions under which these deposits are found. These nonmetallic substances are always found associated, and they are made useful for commercial purposes by a process of refining. That is the case with phosphates, that is the case with potash, that is the case with nitrates. That is a different thing altogether from discovering the source. To make these sources available by manufacture for the purpose desired is quite a different thing, not covered by this item of the appropriation bill at all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the Senator will notice that the language says for exploration and investigation of the sources of and supply of fertilizer, not of chemicals, not of minerals, which in themselves may be ultimately reduced and adapted for fertilizer purposes, but they are charged with the specific duty of finding amongst the chemicals that the Bureau of Soils and the Bureau of Mines finds, which ones are adapted to fertilizer purposes. Therefore it is a distinct field in which this department is called upon to work, and I think it would be a disaster for us to strike from the bill this provision, which guards and guarantees, through investigation, the people who must depend upon commercial fertilizers for the production of crops.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to add just one word. It is true that the explorations made by the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey for the purpose of discovering these minerals are to discover them for any use to which they may be put, not especially for the use in fertilizer. But if the argument of the Senator from South Carolina is correct, we ought to put a provision in the Army bill authorizing the Army to make explorations with a view to finding nitrates and potash for use in the manufacture of powder and other explosives.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think we do that identical thing, and that is part of the Army process. It is part of the building up of the Army.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Up to the present time the Army has not conducted any explorations for the purpose of finding sources of supply.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It had the chemists, who were all ready to take the sources and do what we propose these people shall do, find out what of the chemicals discovered are fit for explosives, and that is what we are doing, providing that they shall explore and find out, through investigation, what is fit for agriculture. I do not know what other language you could use which would protect the people of this country in the use of artificial fertilizers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 75, line 2, strike out "$390,160" and insert in lieu thereof "$750,000," so that it will read:

For collecting, publishing, and distributing, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, condition, and market prices of live stock, meats, fish, and animal products, dairy and poultry products, fruits and vegetables, peanuts and their products, grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, and other agricultural products, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the production, transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, $750,000.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer this amendment in an effort to try to make the appropriation in accordance with the recommendation of the department. I know of no more important undertaking of the Department of Agriculture, or one that is fraught with greater possibilities for benefit, than that covered by this particular paragraph, which provides for information to be furnished to the agricultural interests of the country upon market conditions.

The most serious problem of our producers of fruits and of vegetables is the one of markets. Many of the States, even, have established marketing bureaus, because it has been realized that there was such great necessity along this line. Under the policy which has already been inaugurated by the Federal Government, a great deal of good has been accomplished, and at this particular time to curtail the appropriation would very much hamper the department in furnishing information to the agricultural interests of the country regarding marketing conditions. The department estimated that $750,000 would be necessary to carry on this important work, but for some reason the House thought proper to cut it down to $390,000, and now the Senate committee recommends only that amount.

I know it is getting late in the day, Mr. President, and I shall not attempt to discuss the question at length, but I am fully convinced that there is great merit in the recommendation of the department that the appropriation should be $750,000, and I have therefore moved that it be amended so as to grant the amount requested by the department.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a new section to be added at the end of the bill. I think the chairman of the committee will be willing to accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add a new section at the end of the bill, as follows:

SEC. —. The Secretary of Agriculture is directed hereafter to submit to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a report showing what investigations devolved upon the Department of Agriculture have been completed during the preceding fiscal year, and also showing what services, if any, devolved upon the department are being performed or duplicated, in whole or in part, by any other department, bureau, or agency of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on page 41, line 18, I move to strike out "$250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$400,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 41, line 18, strike out "$250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$400,000," in the item "for the investigation of methods for wood distillation and for the preservative treatment of timber," and so forth.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, this is an increase of $150,000 for the forest-products laboratory. Besides the forest-products laboratory which is located at Madison, Wis., there are four offices maintained in lumber-producing States, and there is also a small testing laboratory at Seattle, in Washington.

There is not a State in the Union where lumber is produced that has not as deep an interest in the maintenance at its fullest capacity for experimentation of the laboratory located at Madison, Wis., as have the people of Wisconsin and their Representatives. I have received many letters from lumbermen, not only in the State of Wisconsin but over the country, asking that the appropriation might be brought to the amount of the estimate of the department.

The work that is being done there in the elimination of waste is a perfect marvel. I know it was a great surprise to me, and I doubt if many Senators upon the floor know, that 75 per cent of a tree is absolutely wasted before it is converted into wrought lumber and put in the yard. Only 25 per cent of it is saved. Between 40 and 60 per cent of the material that goes from the lumber yard to be manufactured into furniture is wasted and lost.

In the matter of handles for tools made from hickory, two tons of that wood—and it is rather a precious wood, being used up very rapidly—when made into the finished product result in only 400 pounds of finished material. It is unnecessary that this waste should go on. It is wrong that it should go on.

I do not wish to take the time of the Senate. I believe the amendment will carry without any speech from me in support of it, but if Senators are interested I have many facts and arguments that I would be glad to submit in support of it. I am very anxious to see it added to the bill. I do not wish to see expenditures made from the Treasury at this time that can not be justified, but every dollar invested under the amendment which I have proposed will be paid back an hundredfold, a thousandfold, to the people of the country.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that the matter to which he has referred is by no means of merely local interest. I have received a large number of letters from lumbermen in my State. Ohio is not a great lumbering State, but the lumbermen there are interested in this proposition. If the Senator will permit me, I will read what one of them said in a letter to me:

WINCHESTER LUMBER CO.,
Winchester, Ohio, February 21, 1921.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: It is our belief, in common with the majority of the wood-using industries of the United States, that the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis., has been of great service to the woodworking industries, because it serves our need by promoting conservation of our basic raw material.

We note that Congress plans to dispose of the appropriation bills before March 4. We note also that the Secretary of Agriculture has decided to ask Congress for only $400,000 for the laboratory for the coming year in place of the $500,000 originally asked for by the Chief of the Forest Service. It is possible that this appropriation may again be cut in the House or the Senate unless its Members are made to appreciate the value and need of research in forest products, both from the standpoint of the industries themselves and general public welfare.

We believe that an appropriation of $500,000 for the Forest Products Laboratory would be money well expended, and we are taking the liberty of calling this matter to your attention, with the thought that you will be glad to lend the appropriation bill your support and personal influence. We would appreciate your letting us know what action you may be able to take in this matter.

Yours, very truly,

WINCHESTER LUMBER CO.
H. H. MEDELIN.

Our people are in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, and I hope that it will be agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to add to what the Senator from Ohio has said, that we have been profiting out in the State of Montana by the operations of the experiment station at Madison, and the work in connection with it has been called to my attention.

Our mountains are covered with a dense growth of small pine, generally known as lodge-pole pine, which rarely attains a size greater than 12 or 18 inches in diameter, and is of practically no value for timber purposes. It was then thought that it ought to be made available in some form for wood pulp, but the abundance of pitch in the timber forbade its use for that purpose.

The station at Madison has been conducting extensive experiments for the purpose of devising some plan by which this vast amount of timber can be utilized for the production of wood pulp. They have made very excellent progress, and the experimentations promise the highest degree of success. It would be a boon to the country if the paper supply could be augmented by that great source, and it is not at all improbable that it will be made wholly so by the operations of this valuable plant of the Government at Madison.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to add just this word to what has been said. At Bogalusa, La., there is what Louisianians claim to be the largest sawmill on earth. The principal stock is held by some people in Buffalo, N. Y., known as the Bogalusa Lumber Co. It has been going forward very rapidly in the most progressive manner. The general manager is Mr. W. H. Sullivan. Recently they decided to add an $8,000,000 addition to their pulp-manufacturing plant. Mr. Sullivan has several times called to my attention the invaluable service rendered to his enterprise and to the lumber industry in Louisiana by the laboratory at Madison, Wis. He has appealed to me to assist in securing an increased appropriation for this purpose.

I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Montana, that it would be a most wise addition to the bill. In my own State we are denuding the forests of timber very rapidly. We are trying to grow new forests. I do not know that the amendment would apply particularly to the loblolly pine that we are growing in the new forests, but I believe it would, because that pine, which grows very rapidly, is used largely for pulp, and the Madison wood products laboratory is finding new uses of lumber for pulp.

It is also training the people of Louisiana how to convert into paper pulp all the limbs and the refuse material. They are pretty nearly as good about that down there as they are in Chicago, where it is said they lose nothing of the hog but the squeal. Down in my State, as the result of the work of the Wisconsin Products Laboratory, some of the mills are losing literally nothing but the bark. They are also exhibiting great results there from the investigation of the stumps. The stumps of the pine trees contain very valuable products in the way of pitch, tar, turpentine, and resin, and other things that are immensely valuable. It is a very difficult problem for us now to get enough out of the stumps to make it pay to take them from the soil. It costs from $30 to $40 an acre to get rid of the stumps, and the Wisconsin laboratory is rapidly showing us how to get rid of them with profit.

I do not believe we could do more wisely than to agree to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am not inclined to take further time of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 90, after line 8, insert:

That the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the State agricultural colleges and experiment stations and the United States Council of the World's Poultry Congress and other organizations, be, and he hereby is, authorized on behalf of the United States to make suitable exhibits at the World's Poultry Congress of the International Association of Poultry Instructors and Investigators to be held at The Hague, Holland, September 6 to 13, 1921, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for this purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture, under such regulations as he shall prescribe, for the preparation, assembling, transportation, maintenance, and demonstration of the exhibits, which exhibits, upon their return to the United States, shall be the property of the United States and remain under the control of the Department of Agriculture. And the Secretary of Agriculture is also authorized to select and, out of the appropriation authorized hereunder, defray the expenses of three delegates who are officials or employees of the Department of Agriculture to attend the said congress and of investigating and reporting in connection with said congress on poultry conditions and methods of poultry production and marketing.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the hour is getting late, and there is no objection to the amendment so far as the committee is concerned.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the chairman in charge of the bill whether any estimate was made for the appropriation?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not believe there was an estimate made for it, but I was about to say that so far as the committee is concerned we are willing to let it go to conference.

Mr. THOMAS. If no estimate has been made for it, I wish to submit a point of order against it.

Mr. CALDER. I will not press the amendment, as I believe no estimate has been made.

Mr. THOMAS. I make the point of order against it if there has been no estimate for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There having been no estimate, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move to add at an appropriate place in the bill the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Insert in the proper place in the bill the following:

That the sum of $30,000 is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available for expenditure and to continue available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain a forest experiment station at such place in the State of Arizona as he may select, for the purpose of conducting in Arizona and adjacent States silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations, independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with State, county, and municipal agencies, educational institutions, business organizations, and individuals, in order to determine the best methods for the management of forest lands.

Mr. ASHURST. In support of the amendment I will state that I introduced it as a separate bill and sent a copy to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry [Mr. GRONNA] who in turn transmitted my letter to the Secretary of Agriculture. I also sent a copy to the department and have received the following letter from the Secretary, which I will read. The letter reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, February 2, 1921.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: I have your letter of January 29 inclosing a copy of the bill introduced by you for the establishment and maintenance of a forest experiment station in Arizona. A letter of the same date was also received from Senator GRONNA, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which your bill was referred, asking for a report from this department on it. I take pleasure in inclosing for your information a copy of my reply to Senator GRONNA, from which you will see that the department recognizes the urgent need for the establishment of such a station and recommends the passage of the bill which you have introduced.

May I also take advantage of this opportunity to express my appreciation of your interest in the matter and the hope that you will be successful in securing favorable action?

Very sincerely, yours,

E. T. MEREDITH, Secretary.

The Secretary transmitted a copy of his letter to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], pointing out at some length the advisability, indeed, the necessity, of establishing the experiment station. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall have to be consistent. I made a point of order against a similar amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] a few moments ago, and I shall have to make one against this if no estimate was made for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Was there an estimate?

Mr. ASHURST. I have read the letter from the Department of Agriculture, and being frank with the Senate I doubt if that is an estimate under the law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not an estimate. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall be very brief. I offer another amendment, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to reimburse landowners residing on Yuma project, Arizona-California, for all moneys they have heretofore paid into the United States Reclamation Service for the operation and maintenance of the Colorado River front work and levee system of said project.

That there is also hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be placed to the credit of the United States Reclamation Service and expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of paying the operation and maintenance costs of said Colorado River front work and levee system on said Yuma project, Arizona-California, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and an additional sum of $100,000 per annum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the operation and maintenance of said Colorado River front work and levee system, it being hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to assume the obligation of caring for said river front work and levee system on said Yuma project, Arizona-California, and not to have the same charged to said project as any part of constructing or maintaining the reclamation work of said Yuma project, Arizona-California.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a word in explanation of the amendment. The Reclamation Service constructed in Arizona-California a reclamation project near Yuma. Some forty-five or fifty thousand acres of land are irrigated there under this reclamation project. The third largest river in the United States, the Colorado River, which drains about 245,000 square miles, debouches into the point where the irrigated farms are. The result is that the water users there for many years past have been charged the enormous expense incurred by the Reclamation Service in revetting the banks and controlling that river. I am sure that ultimately, if not at this time, the Congress will declare that the farmers there—few in number, comparatively—should not and ought to be required to pay the expense of holding within a fixed channel a river which is not only interstate but which is international in character, and is, as I have said, the third largest river in the United States.

It will shock the conscience of a humane man to say that a few farmers must hold within its channel at that point the third largest river of our country, one that in July rises and whose cutting edge destroys many farms. That is my reason for offering the amendment to this bill. I offer the amendment, and hope that no Senator will make a point of order against it, although I know it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator withhold his point of order until I put into the RECORD some figures?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The water which comes down each year, the run-off which passes Yuma, where these farms are located, amounts to an average of 19,000,000 acre-feet; in other words, it is enough to cover 19,000,000 acres with water 1 foot deep.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am in thorough sympathy with the argument of the Senator from Arizona; I think that the Government of the United States has imposed upon it the duty of protecting that section of the country from river inundations; but I do not think this is the way to get at it, and particularly as there has been no estimate of the amounts of money expended or of the extent to which attempted revetment of the river by private enterprise has gone. I am therefore compelled to make the point of order against the amendment, there being no estimate for the expenditure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall thank the Chair and the Senate for indulging me long enough to offer another amendment. I ask the Secretary to recur to page 23, line 20, of the bill. Commencing with line 17, on that page, the language reads as follows:

For investigations in connection with western irrigation agriculture, the utilization of lands reclaimed under the reclamation act, and other areas in the arid and semiarid regions, $70,000.

I propose an amendment to increase the numerals in line 20 from $70,000 to $94,420.

I was recently traveling through the West, not in my own State but in another State, and some of the citizens appealed to me to assist their Senators, if possible, in securing an investigation of a valley there the soil of which would be very fertile, and if water could be placed upon it would produce abundant crops. The citizens directed a letter to the Reclamation Service, but the reply was to the effect that the service did not have adequate funds with which to make an investigation as to the suitability or the feasibility of a reclamation project at that point. In Arizona I was recently appealed to by the citizens of the town of Winslow, which is on the Little Colorado River, with vast tracts of land adjacent, upon which practically no crops are grown, which is wholly a desert, and yet with the Little Colorado River running through it. So the Representative of Arizona in Congress, Mr. HAYDEN, telegraphed or wrote to the Chief of the Reclamation Service and simply asked him to send some person from the Reclamation Service to investigate the soil and water supply in order to ascertain the suitability or the feasibility of a project at that point. The Reclamation Office replied to Mr. HAYDEN to the effect that they had no funds with which they could make such an investigation.

The estimate of the department for this item is $94,420. It will simply give the Reclamation Service an adequate fund with which that service may examine into the feasibility or the suitability of reclamation projects at a particular point. No more worthy appropriation could be made, as citizens of our country are entitled to have some governmental agency tell them officially from a scientific standpoint whether or not a project could successfully be established at a particular point.

When we speak of irrigation we must not forget that there are 18,000,000 acres in the United States now under irrigation, but only 2,000,000 acres are irrigated by the Government, whilst 16,000,000 acres are irrigated by private enterprise, and I can not at the moment conceive of an appropriation more worthy or more beneficial to the country than one that will provide adequate moneys to the department to enable it to ascertain whether or not the physical features here or there are such as to encourage farmers and home builders in indulging any further hope for a Government project.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. I merely wished to ask the Senator from Arizona a question.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. This is a very meritorious amendment, undoubtedly, but the present law carries $52,380, I believe. The House increased that amount and made it $70,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; the House fixed the sum at $70,000.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say that the committee did not go into this particular case in any minute detail, but I have no objection to letting the amendment go to conference, inasmuch as it proposes to appropriate the amount estimated for.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator. The amendment is not subject to a point of order, as it was estimated for by the department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is the bill that provides for the construction of public roads, and it is very proper that the Bureau of Road Construction should be under the Agricultural Department, and that provisions respecting appropriations and policies in connection with road building should be incorporated in this bill. There is pending in the Senate a bill to which a majorty of the Senate have already recorded themselves as favorable. I believe on the motion to suspend the rule to make in order as an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill the road bill appropriating $100,000,000 to carry on road construction in the United States the vote was 42 yeas to 33 nays, so that there was a majority of 9 in favor of that bill. The same bill has already passed the House by a vote of 230 to 30.

Of course, the Post Office appropriation bill was not as appropriate a measure to carry a piece of legislation such as the road bill which passed the House as is the Agricultural appropriation bill. It is undenied, I imagine, at least it is not a controverted proposition, that the road bill as passed by the House should be considered at this time in connection with a general appropriation bill for agricultural and road-construction purposes. Since the Senate has already declared itself as favorable to the road bill, even under the peculiar circumstances of having to vote to suspend the rules to place it on an appropriation bill, certainly no Senator would object or would make a point of order, and thereby prevent the placing of this piece of legislation providing $100,000,000 for road construction on a general appropriation bill for agricultural purposes.

So I am going to offer as an amendment to the pending bill, a bill which has already passed by such a tremendous vote the House of Representatives, which has already been sanctioned by a majority of 9 in the Senate, 42 Members of the Senate saying that even the rules of the Senate should be suspended in order that this proposed legislation might be passed. I sincerely hope that no point of order will be made against it, and that no objection will be made to it, because not only what I have narrated is true, but on the 4th of March this Congress will adjourn; there are many bills on the calendar; we are trying to expedite the passage of all the general supply bills, and practically no other legislation will come up from now until the 4th of March, there being only a very few working days remaining. So unless we incorporate in the pending appropriation bill the very important piece of legislation to which I have referred, appropriating $100,000,000 to carry on this general road construction policy, the bill which was passed by the House will die on the 4th of March. I am sure the Senate does not desire that the measure shall die during this Congress which will necessitate our going to work at the next session and passing it through both House and Senate at that time. So I offer as an amendment to the pending appropriation bill, the road bill which has been championed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and which has already received the indorsement of the Senate by a majority of 9 votes.

The amendment proposed by Mr. HARRISON is, in line 18, page 72, to insert:

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums:

The sum of $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

The aforesaid additional sum shall be expended in accordance with the provisions of such act: Provided, That the aforesaid additional sum, together with any sums apportioned to any State under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto and not heretofore withdrawn from the principal fund, as provided by section 6 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1919, shall be available for expenditure in that State for the purpose set forth in such acts until two years after the close of the respective fiscal years for which any such sums become available, and any amount so apportioned remaining unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under the terms of such acts shall be reapportioned in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916: Provided further, That in each State in which the percentage of total land area to which the title of the United States is unqualified or exempt by act of Congress from taxation in said State exceeds 10 per cent of the total area of all lands in the State the Secretary of Agriculture may reduce the ratio of cooperation required, but not to below one-half that which the total of the patented, tax exempt, and national forest land bears to the total area of all lands in the State.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, for national forest roads and trails.

The said appropriations for national forest roads and trails to be available until expended by the Secretary of Agriculture for the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads or trails within, partly within, or contiguous to the national forests when such roads or trails are necessary for the use and development of the resources of the national forests or desirable for their proper administration, protection, and improvement or for the extension of important main highways.

SEC. 3. That any person, firm, corporation, member of any highway commission, or employee thereof that makes any false statement or representation as to the character of material used or quality of work performed in the construction of any project approved by the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of said act with the intent to defraud the United States shall upon conviction be imprisoned not to exceed five years or pay a fine not to exceed $10,000, or be punished by both imprisonment and fine.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall make annual report to Congress of the amounts expended hereunder.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall have to disappoint my friend from Mississippi. It is true that there was a vote on the motion to suspend the rules so as to make in order the measure which the Senator from Mississippi now presents, and on that motion the bill commanded a majority, but not two-thirds. It is a disagreeable duty, of course, to perform when such a vast sum as $100,000,000 is so near and with a point of order becomes so far. I think, however, that the country will get along and road building will continue under existing appropriations if this measure goes over until the next Congress, when a Republican Senate and a Republican House may pass it, and not only get all the prestige out of it, if there be any, but may also refer to the fact that it would have passed the Senate but for the objection of a Democrat. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 59, line 25, after the numerals "$2,000," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the line, and on page 60, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the numerals "$1,800" where they first appear and to insert in lieu thereof, on page 59, line 23, after the numerals "$3,000," the following:

One chief cinematographer, $2,500.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this place was estimated for. The amendment provides a different title for the man who makes all the important moving pictures for the Department of Agriculture. At present he is paid under the title of "assistant in document section, $1,800." This amendment provides that he shall get $2,500.

I know of no better recommendation for this man than to read just a brief statement of the Chief of the Division of Publications when he appeared before the House Committee on Agriculture. He said:

As I have said, gentlemen, he is an excellent motion-picture photographer, and he is a man who could unquestionably demand a very much higher salary outside of the department. Incidentally, he was pretty severely injured last year in getting some pictures for the department and was laid up for a considerable length of time. I feel that it is particularly important that we pay this man more money if we are going to retain his services. We can not hope to keep him for the money we now can pay him and we could not replace him for twice the salary he is now getting. I regard the promotion * * * for this man as * * * most important.

Mr. President, I know this man. I know that he has made several important inventions and given them to the Government, and I believe that the Government would do well to give him this increase of $700 per annum. I am afraid that if we do not, outside moving-picture concerns will take him, and the Government will lose a good man and have difficulty in replacing him.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suppose the object of changing this man's title is to increase his salary. If we do this with one man, I think we will have to do it with all engaged in this business, and there are a great many of them in the Government service at the present time. I should think, for example, we would want to increase the salary of the photographer who takes pictures for the O'Connor Stock Co.

I noticed the other day in the paper an advertisemment of the O'Connor Stock Co. I never had heard of that stock company before, and I read the advertisement down, and I found that the performance was to be held in the conference room of the Post Office Building. A couple of years ago I called attention to the fact that we had a theater down here, and that we ought to use the space for employees of the Government, but that that whole space was set aside for a theater in the Post Office Building down on Pennsylvania Avenue; and immediately after I called the attention of the Senate to it the name of the theater was changed to the "conference room." I see now that the O'Connor Stock Co. is to be playing at the conference room of the Post Office Building, Eleventh Street and Pennsylvania Avenue. It says what they are going to be interested in and what the play is to be.

I think the time has come when this ought to stop. I received, I think, three letters last week from employees of the Government complaining bitterly because they were called, after they had worked in some cases and in some cases during their work, to go and attend social functions in the departments. I do not know where we are drifting, and I want to know if this item was estimated for at $2,500.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I will say to the Senator that it was estimated for at $2,500.

Mr. SMOOT. This man is drawing $1,800 now?

Mr. GRONNA. He is drawing $1,800 now; yes. The committee did not see fit to approve the recommendation, and I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senate will not adopt the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, was there not an estimate for a general increase of salaries at this time?

Mr. GRONNA. There was an estimate for a general increase, but it was not allowed.

Mr. WARREN. It was estimated, however?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. They estimated for increases all the way through?

Mr. GRONNA. In a great many instances they did, I think.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this man has nothing whatever to do with the O'Connor Stock Co., to which the Senator from Utah has referred. I will say to the Senate that there is no more efficient man in the Government employ than this man. Last year he was borrowed by the Navy Department to take overhead pictures from aircraft of the fleet in the Chesapeake. The plane from which he was taking pictures fell, and he was nearly killed, and was laid up for three months in the hospital. Subsequently, when he recovered his health, he was sent to Minneapolis to take pictures in flour mills there for the Department of Agriculture. There, again, through an explosion, he was very nearly killed.

Mr. President, I repeat that there is no more efficient public servant than this man, and I say to the Senate that if they fail to increase his pay in all probability they will lose him, and then they will have an estimate next year for $5,000 for a man to fill his place.

I hope the Senate will agree to my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 46 of the bill, to which I call the attention of the chairman of the committee. It is advocated by the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Meredith. It is, on line 20, after the word "sirup," to add the words "and sugar," so that it will read:

For the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of table sirup and sugar and of methods for the manufacture of sweet sirups—

And so forth.

I do not wish to make any speech. I ask to have published as a part of my remarks the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture. It is addressed to Chairman GRONNA, on the 18th instant, and it says, in substance, that—

It is not the intention to divert to the study of sugar production any funds which are needed for the development and improvement of methods of producing table sirups. The amendment proposed will merely permit the Bureau of Chemistry to apply in the most effective manner the information and knowledge gained as a result of its investigation—

And so forth.

I will ask the chairman if he has investigated the matter?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, so far as I can, I shall be glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. RANSDELL. It does not add a cent of expense.

Mr. SMOOT. It will next year.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask to have the letter to which I refer published in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be done.

The letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 18, 1921.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR GRONNA: I desire to suggest, for your consideration, the insertion of the words "and sugar" in line 20, page 46, of the Agricultural appropriation bill as reported to the Senate, so that the provision (lines 19 and 20) will read:

"For the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of table sirup and sugar and of methods for the manufacture of sweet sirups * * *."

The proposed change will greatly facilitate the work of the Bureau of Chemistry in applying to processes of sugar production the information gained in connection with the study of the production of table sirups, of which cane sirup has been the principal subject of investigation. The production of cane sirup and of cane sugar are very closely related, inasmuch as the clarification of the juice is the principal feature of both these processes, and the Bureau of Chemistry has found that much of the information acquired in connection with the production of cane sirup can be very readily applied with profit to the production of sugar. The insertion of the words "and sugar," as suggested, will give that bureau greater freedom in applying this knowledge, without interfering in any way with the work on cane sirup. It is not the intention to divert to the study of sugar production any funds which are needed for the development and improvement of methods of producing table sirups. The amendment proposed will merely permit the Bureau of Chemistry to apply, in the most effective manner, the information and knowledge gained as a result of its investigation. The application of this information to the production of sugar is, of course, merely incidental and subsidiary to the study of the production of cane sirup and table sirups in general.

Very truly, yours,

E. T. MEREDITH, Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, for the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], who is unavoidably absent, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase and acquire the lands occupied by the department's experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., now maintained under contracts with the owners of said lands: Provided, That the land purchased for the Fresno vineyard shall not exceed 20 acres at a cost not to exceed $12,000 and for the Oakville vineyard not to exceed 20 acres at a cost not to exceed $15,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there has been no estimate for that appropriation, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senator will see that no appropriation is made.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; $12,000 and $15,000.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is simply an authorization to buy.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the same thing.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no. There is no appropriation made, so that that point of order, I take it, would not lie.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it is general legislation on an appropriation bill, and not reported by a standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; it has been authorized to be reported by the Senate Agricultural Committee as a separate bill, though not as an amendment to this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think a thing can be purchased without paying for it in some way. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on page 48, I move to strike out lines 1 to 7, as follows:

For investigating the grading, weighing, handling, transportation, and uses of naval stores, the preparation of definite type samples thereof, and for the demonstration of improved methods or processes of preparing naval stores, in cooperation with individuals and companies, including the employment of necessary persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $10,000.

That item was put in the bill a number of years ago, for one year. It has been running now for several years, and I can not see that there is any use whatever in the appropriation. The last time when the question arose it was said: "Well, let it go in for one more year." It went in that year and I think it ought to go out now.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not think this has been a useless appropriation at all. I think the department has been doing very good work under it. They now have rosin, for instance, classified, and they have naval stores standardized in a way, and they are doing first-rate work under this appropriation. I think it is quite an important appropriation. The industry of naval stores, including rosin and turpentine, is a very considerable one. The appropriation is small, and I think it ought to be continued.

Mr. SMOOT. Three years ago, at the time the question came up, it was asked that it should go in for that year, and at that time the committee did not report it out.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it was not limited to one year at that time. I presented the original provision.

Mr. SMOOT. It was limited because all the appropriations were limited for one year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But it was not limited according to the suggestion of the Senator. As he says, all appropriations are made for one year.

Mr. SMOOT. No; but on the floor of the Senate, when the question arose as to whether it should be put into the bill, they said: "Well, let it go in for one more year," and that was three years ago.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That may be true, but it is an important appropriation. The industry is a very large one. The appropriation has been used to do excellent work; the men interested are very numerous; the amount of our exports of naval stores is very large; the standardization and the other work that is being done by the Department of Agriculture is helping our foreign commerce, and is of value to the producers.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I want to tell the Senator what this work is. I am afraid he does not know. They have recently discovered a new way of making rosin out of turpentine stumps, and the colors shift and change, and they tell the value of the rosin by the colors. They have people working on these standards of various colors. They have standardized it a good deal like they have cotton.

Mr. SMOOT. Just exactly.

Mr. HARRISON. The work has not been finished yet. It has been estimated for. I do not know when it will be finished, but it is rendering valuable service to a big industry in this country, and the appropriation should be made.

Mr. SMOOT. My information is that the work is completed, and that they have prepared these samples showing the colors. They are about 3 inches in circumference and show the colors of all the different grades.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the information of the Senator is inaccurate.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I got my information pretty straight.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I received mine directly from the head of the naval stores organization at Savannah, Ga., and I am assured by them that the work is still progressing and is still necessary.

Mr. FLETCHER. Not only that, but the item covers the question of the use of naval stores. It can never be done in one year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further amendments to be proposed? If not, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There was one amendment which the chairman of the committee said he would offer again.

Mr. GRONNA. That is true; but it was with reference to the preparing and packing of fish and sea food of all kinds. The Senator from Utah has some information showing that it is really a duplication, and I said to the Senator from Utah that I would not press the amendment. The Senator from Utah promised that he would have the information inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. So that the record may be complete, I ask that a letter I received from the Secretary of Commerce, dated February 23, 1921, sent to me this morning, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 23, 1921.

MY DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to the debate on the Agriculture appropriation bill, reported on pages 3616 to 3619 in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 22. In order to clear some points which appear to have been in doubt I am inclosing herewith a copy of a letter recently sent to Mr. SYDNEY ANDERSON, of the House Committee on Appropriations, in response to an inquiry from him. This letter states briefly the character of the work which the Bureau of Fisheries has been conducting for a number of years in the preparation of fishery products for food.

I may state that in a conference held in my office on December 21, with the Secretary of Agriculture and several officials of his department, Dr. Alsberg stated that the work of the character described was properly the function of the Bureau of Fisheries, and that the Bureau of Chemistry was willing to withdraw from investigations of the character indicated. He volunteered to make a statement to that effect to the Appropriations Committee.

Very truly, yours,

J. W. ALEXANDER,
Secretary of Commerce.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate.

FEBRUARY 18, 1921.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of February 14, you are informed that the problems of preservation and utilization of the products of the fisheries have been recognized as functions of the Bureau of Fisheries from its inception and have received attention dating back to its very early history when the demand and need for such work was not so fully appreciated as now. For example, in the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for 1882, pages 44 to 45, is to be found an outline or plan for investigation of the fisheries of the United States, then about to be undertaken, which included "VI. Preparation, care of, and manufacture of fishery products. Here were to be considered the methods and the various devices for utilizing fish after they are caught, with statistics of capital and men employed, etc.: (a) Preservation of live fish; (b) refrigeration; (c) sun drying; (d) smoke drying; (e) pickling; (f) hermetically canning; (g) fur dressing; (h) whalebone preparation; (i) isinglass manufacture; (k) ambergris manufacture; (l) fish-guano manufacture; (m) oil rendering, etc." Section 5, in three volumes, of the monumental work "Fisheries and Fishery Industries of the United States, 1884–1887," contains considerable descriptive matter and illustrations of the methods of preservation and utilization of fishery products.

An examination of the subject matter contained in the publications referred to in the inclosed memorandum will serve to illustrate some phases of the bureau's work in this field in past years.

In recent years there has been an increasing demand for research work in fisheries technology for effecting improvements in the methods of preservation, distribution, and utilization of fishery products, including by-products. The bureau has endeavored to meet this demand as fully as the limited appropriations would permit. It has in Washington a fishery-products laboratory, excellently equipped, for investigations in the preservation of fish by canning, freezing in air and in brine, smoking, and drying, a constant temperature room for testing the keeping qualities of preserved products, and a research laboratory for such necessary incidental physical and chemical tests as may be required. In southern California it has a temporary laboratory well equipped for the solution of the practical problems of the fisheries of that region, particularly those problems common to that region which can be more efficiently handled at the center of operations.

The bureau has recently completed an investigation on the preservation of fish by salting in which certain improvements in commercial practices have been made, particularly in the salting of fish at high temperatures and therefore in warm climates, and has had practical application made of the results. This work was done in part in Washington, D. C., and several States on the Atlantic seaboard, particularly Florida, North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, and Massachusetts.

Its plant for freezing in brine was the first of its kind to be imported into this country and has been employed to demonstrate this method of brine freezing fish to the trade and trials given of freezing fruits and vegetables and meats, poultry, etc., for the benefit of investigators in the Bureaus of Plant and Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture. In fact, it is understood that one of these bureaus has since arranged to employ this method in its particular field of operation. The bureau's investigations in this field have been interfered with during the current fiscal year for lack of adequate funds and technologists. It now appears that this condition will be remedied with respect to the next fiscal year.

In southern California extended investigations have been made for the purpose of developing methods of canning fish for which satisfactory methods were lacking, in effecting improvements in common practice, and in solving the practical problems of the canners. Special attention has been devoted to the canning of mackerel, barracuda, bonito, pilchard, sea bass, smelt, tuna, and yellowtail, and to the recovery of fry-bath oil, means of avoiding objectionable flavor in bonito, and the like. This work has been centered chiefly at San Pedro.

The bureau's work in the utilization of the by-products of the fisheries has been particularly fortunate. It has been instrumental in greatly extending the production of fish meal for use as a stock feed within the last few years, in the establishment of fisheries for sharks and other unutilized aquatic animals, in the use of the hides for tanning into leather, the saving of dried fins for the oriental trade, in determining the special properties of particular fish oils, the more extended use of fish waste and waste fish, and the like. This work has been done in Washington and the field.

Among its other activities, mention may be made of its investigations as to the causes of reddening of salt fish, study of the causative organisms and possibilities of preventing the heavy losses resulting from this source of infection. This work has been done chiefly in New England. Mention may also be made of the investigations concerning the feasibility of deriving from marine algæ a gelatin suitable for use in the preservation of fish, which was conducted in Massachusetts.

It is scarcely practicable to cover the bureau's work in this field within the scope of a letter, but there are being mailed to you a copy of Bureau of Fisheries Document 892, "Fishery Industries of the United States," a report summarizing on pages 9 to 17 some of the work done in the calendar year 1919; a copy of Document 896, "Progress in Biological Inquiries," on page 27 of which you will find additional information on the reddening of salt fish, and page 29 reference to the deriving of jelly from seaweeds.

As the particular phases of the work mentioned in your letter present only parts of its activities, it is difficult to furnish a statement for the specific items because of their interrelations and overlapping other activities. It is hoped the following statement will serve your purpose:

Items for fiscal year ended June 30, 1920.

Investigations of the fishery-products laboratory in Washington and necessary work in field connected therewith, including maintenance of laboratory	$3,165.79
Practical application of methods evolved in salting of fish	326.04
Utilization of the waste products of the fisheries	1,130.07
Preservation of fishes and standardization of methods in southern California	3,389.37
Investigations in reddening of salt fish, dehydration of fish, and derivation of jelly from seaweeds (approximately)	700.00

In closing I may state that the work of the Bureau of Fisheries for the fishing industry is comparable to the work of the agricultural bureaus mentioned in their respective fields, that it is working in close touch with them, cooperating where cooperation is for the best interests of the people whom they are intended to serve, and avoiding duplication of work.

Very truly, yours, J. W. ALEXANDER, Secretary.

Hon. SYDNEY ANDERSON,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment originally offered by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 46, after line 6, insert:

For investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of fish, shrimp, oysters, and other shellfish, and for experimental shipments of these products, for the utilization of waste products, and the development of new sources of food, $20,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is probably a part of the function of the Bureau of Fisheries, under the Department of Commerce, to investigate the sources of fish-food supplies, new varieties of fish, and that sort of thing; but it is no part of the functions of that department to investigate the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of fish, shrimp, and oysters; and I think that ought to be done by the Department of Agriculture. Fish is an important food supply of the country. The Department of Commerce undertakes to investigate and ascertain the varieties of fish which may be used for food. A few years ago Secretary Redfield did discover that the tilefish had come back into the ocean, and he exploited that, and people began to use the tilefish a good deal, and I think changed the name of it so as to make it a little more palatable. At any rate, the work of the department had to do with discovering new edible fish; but it did not have to do with informing the people themselves, who catch the fish in the lakes and in the rivers and in the seas, and who get the oysters and shrimp, how to pack, how to preserve, and how to take care of those fish, and how to ship them. That is work for the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I read the letter from the Secretary?

Mr. LODGE. Before the Senator reads that, I understand he is going to oppose this item on the ground that the work is already being done?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator overlooks the real point and value of the item. It is to employ two men to do what one man can do.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I think perhaps I can save the time required in reading the letter. I talked with Dr. Alsberg over the phone to-day, and he said this is very important work, but it can probably be transferred to the Bureau of Fisheries, and that he had no objection if that were done, if provision was made for its support in another bureau, and I understand from the Senator from Utah that it is taken care of in another appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have here the bulletins showing the work that has been done. I will not take the time to read the letter, but the Secretary says it is a duplication of work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. GRONNA. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. GRONNA, Mr. KENYON, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. GORE, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina conferees on the part of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15935, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15935) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF DAUPHINE STREET, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5030) authorizing the city of New Orleans, La., to extend Dauphine Street, in said city, across the United States military reservation known as the Jackson Barracks. This is a bill in which the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is interested and to which there is no opposition. I ask unanimous consent for its passage.

Mr. RANSDELL. It merely authorizes the extension of Dauphine Street, in New Orleans, through a military reservation in that city. The bill was drawn by the Secretary of War, recommended by him, and is now favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, be, and it hereby is, authorized to extend Dauphine Street, in said city, across and through the property of the United States known as the military reservation of Jackson Barracks, said extension to be of the same width and a continuation of the same lines as said street at its juncture with Delery Street upon the easterly side of said reservation, upon condition that said street shall be improved and maintained by said city of New Orleans as a public street and without cost to the United States: Provided, however, That there is hereby expressly reserved to the United States the right to construct and maintain over, under, and across that said street water, gas, and sewer mains, electric lights, and telephone wires and cables, and any other requisite utilities which the use of said military reservation may require.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 24, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 23, 1921.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for every new born day, for every new born soul, for every new born idea that brings us and the world in closer communion with Thee, that we may enter the kingdom of heaven and be indeed Thy children, led by Thy wisdom, by Thy power, and by Thy love into a larger, purer, nobler, and sweeter life; that we may be all for Thee, with Thy spirit our guide and Thy council our thought; that the world may be better that we have lived and wrought. Give us Thy best convictions that we may do ever well here and now and evermore. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NATIONAL LOANS TO BELGIUM (S. DOC. NO. 413).

The SPEAKER. Last evening the point of no quorum was raised which prevented the Chair from laying before the House a message from the President, which came yesterday afternoon, and which he now presents.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith call your attention to an agreement with Belgium made by the British and French Premiers and myself, which is embodied in the following letter:

JUNE 16, 1919.

M. HYMANS,
Ministre des Affaires Etrangeres, Hotel Lotti, Paris.

SIR: The Reparation Clauses of the draft Treaty of Peace with Germany obligate Germany to make reimbursement of all sums which Belgium has borrowed from the Allied and Associated Governments up to November 11, 1918, on account of the violation by Germany of the Treaty of 1839. As evidence of such an obligation Germany is to make a special issue of bonds to be delivered to the Reparation Commission.

Each of the undersigned will recommend to the appropriate governmental agency of his Government that upon the delivery to the Reparation Commission of such bonds his Government accept an amount thereof corresponding to the sums which Belgium has borrowed from his Government since the war and up to November 11, 1918, together with interest at 5 per cent unless already included in such sums, in satisfaction of Belgium's obligation on account of such loans, which obligation of Belgium's shall thereupon be canceled.

We are, dear Mr. Minister,
Very truly, yours,

G. CLEMENCEAU.
WOODROW WILSON.
D. LLOYD-GEORGE.

In recommending to you that Congress take appropriate action with regard to this agreement, certain facts should be brought to your attention.

The neutrality of Belgium was guaranteed by the Treaty of London of 1839. In considering the reparation to be made by Germany it was agreed that the action of Germany in grossly violating this Treaty by an attack on Belgium, obligated the German Government under international law to repay to Belgium the costs of war. On this principle the Treaty of Versailles (Art. 232) provided that in accordance with Germany's pledges already given as to the complete restoration for Belgium, Germany should undertake, in addition to the compensation for material damage, to make reimbursement of all sums which Belgium had borrowed from the Allied and Associated Governments up to November 11, 1918, together with interest at 5 per cent per annum on such sums. This obligation was to be discharged by a special issue of bearer bonds to an equivalent amount payable in gold marks on May 1, 1926, or at the option of the German Government on the 1st of May in any year up to 1926.

For various reasons the undertaking defined in the above letter was not embodied in the Treaty. Belgium's obligations to the United States for advances made up to the date of the Armistice amounted to approximately $171,000,000, and to England and France they amounted, I am informed, to about £164,700,000. In view of the special circumstances in which Belgium became involved in the war and the attitude of this country toward Belgium, it was felt that the United States might well agree to make the same agreement respecting pre-Armistice loans to Belgium as England and France offered to do.

Advances made by the Treasury to the Belgian Government from the beginning of the war to the Armistice amounted to $171,780,000. This principal sum, however, includes advances of $499,400 made to enable the Belgians to pay the interest due November 15, 1917, and $1,571,468.42 to enable the payment of the interest due May 15, 1918. The interest on the advances has been paid up to April 15, 1919, the interest due from May 15, 1918, to that date having been paid out of the Treasury loans for which the United States holds Belgian obligations, which, however, were made after November 11, 1918, the date of the Armistice. This latter advance would not come within the terms of the Agreement above mentioned. If, therefore, the United States accepts payment of Belgian obligations given before the Armistice by receiving a corresponding amount of German obligations, it would seem that it should receive German obligations amounting to $171,780,000 with interest from April 15, 1919.

Although it is understood that England and France will take their share of the German bonds when received by Belgium, I am informed that the Reparation Commission has not as yet finally determined the details of the issuance of the necessary bonds by the German Government. A recommendation at this time that suitable legislative action should be taken may appear somewhat premature, but in view of the approaching termination of my Administration I have brought this matter to your attention, hoping that suitable action may be taken at the appropriate time.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
22 February, 1921.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered printed.

REGULATING SHIPMENT OF COLD-STORAGE FOODS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the cold storage bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the conference report on the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9521) to prevent hoarding and deterioration of and deception with respect to cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has used 28 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is not my purpose to enter into a discussion of this bill. That there is necessity for this legislation there is not a doubt in my mind. The cold-storage industry in this country is a growing one; it is a very essential one, and being an essential one to the health of the people regulation of cold-storage places is highly important, in that we may be assured when articles of food pass through them that same is not deleterious to health. Cold-storage institutions have also become engines of power. That power can be used to manipulate the markets of the country in any product that passes through these institutions, and I have not a doubt that that power has been so used. There are certain great interests in this country that are dependent upon cold-storage facilities for their control of the market of the meat supplies of the Nation, and I have not a doubt that they are bringing all the power of their influence possible to forestall this legislation. I refer to the Big Five packing institutions. The legislation should be enacted. There is hypercritical criticism being raised against it, but the underlying principles are sound. I shall vote with great pleasure for this legislation. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, this conference report involves matters of great importance and well deserves the most serious consideration of this Congress. It affects millions of our people and transactions involving millions of dollars. No legitimate cold storage bill can be enacted in this country that will do justice to the producers and the consumers that does not recognize the difference between articles placed in refrigeration for temporary current sales and those placed in cold storage to be placed on a delayed market. This bill recognizes that principle; but this bill, in my judgment, makes a monumental mistake in that it places the limit at 10 days.

This bill is so framed that cold-storage products placed in refrigeration in a distant part of the country can not be placed on the market at the opposite side of the country without being damned by being classified as "cold-storage" stuff. Yesterday in argument it was contended that this provision would not injure the producer. In order to find out whether or not that is true I have secured the current market reports from New York. In yesterday's reports of the market in New York butter classified as "cold storage" was selling for 5 cents less than the fresh article. On the 13th day of January of this year eggs on the New York market of the same quality were sold at a difference of 8 cents a dozen, depending on whether or not they were cold storage or otherwise.

Now, gentlemen, it is utterly absurd to ask this country to adopt a cold-storage measure that condemns half of these foods that go into the current market as "cold-storage" products. What would be the practical operation of this 10-day limitation? Out in the Central West and on the Pacific slope this material is shipped to the East at a temperature of 33° to 43°. It is never frozen, and is absolutely in good condition when it reaches your market. Yet this bill requires it to be shipped, marked, and sold as "cold storage."

Mr. McARTHUR. Is it not true that we are getting large importations of Chinese eggs in this country that will enjoy a preferential status over the eggs shipped from the Pacific coast?

Mr. LEA of California. That is true.

Mr. McARTHUR. And if this bill becomes a law there will be no embargo against Chinese eggs that may be sold as fresh eggs on the market, while our Pacific coast eggs will be sold as cold-storage eggs?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes; if the Chinese eggs are not shipped in refrigerator vehicles. They can come in as fresh, while our 10-day shipments in refrigerator cars or vessels will be classed as cold storage.

Now, gentlemen, I want to call your attention to a very important feature, about which I am sure you have a wrong impression. Yesterday it was stated to you that the bill as it passed this House was practically the same in reference to marking as it is in this bill. That is not true. The bill that passed this House provided that it should not apply to articles being transported from one part of the country to another, and in order that there can be no doubt about that provision I want to call your attention to the bill as it originally passed this House. Section 3 provided that no article could be placed in the commerce of this country or could be offered for sale without being marked showing that it was cold storage, provided that it "is or has been in cold storage." Section 2 defined "cold storage" to mean "storage in a warehouse as defined herein." Subsection (f) defined a warehouse to mean any establishment, structure, or portion thereof, and so forth, "except a refrigerator vehicle."

In other words, this House passed a bill which did not include a refrigerator vehicle, and which required no marking in shipment in refrigerator vehicle within 30 days. The Senate passed a similar bill. And then the conferees, in defiance of what the Senate had done and in defiance of what this House had done, wrote into this bill the 10-day limitation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The House bill further safeguards it by saying "refrigerator vehicle used as such," but they could not take a refrigerator vehicle and use it temporarily for a warehouse?

Mr. LEA of California. Exactly. Our own conferees have written into this a 10-day limitation, which works injustice.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is not the point exactly this: That perishable products placed in a refrigerator car as far away from New York as 1,500 miles or farther, if 10 days or more in shipment, are bound to be branded as cold storage, marked down in price, and sold as inferior?

Mr. MADDEN. And that is not all. Anything that is placed in the chill room of a slaughterhouse is treated in that way.

Mr. LEA of California. That is true and important. You people of the Central West are affected, and if this bill becomes a law every pound of butter sent from your creameries is going to receive a less price on account of it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may continue three minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have not the time to yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] be extended three minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, make it 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. SNELL. I object, unless we can have more time than three minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the discussion of this matter be extended 20 minutes. It is a very important one. Evidently there is a lack of understanding of it by the membership of the House, as indicated by those who have spoken on the measure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks that the time be extended 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Who is going to control the time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. McCLINTIC. I think it ought to be controlled by those who are for the bill and those against the bill, so that we may have an opportunity to discuss this matter.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do not object.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, practically all the time so far consumed has been by those in favor of the conference report.

Mr. HAUGEN. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the case with the exception of about 10 minutes. The gentleman must have used in the neighborhood of 50 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, no. About 40 minutes have been used.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I want to know if those who are opposed to the bill will get time? Apparently those in favor of the bill are getting all the time.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. HUTCHINSON] for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] going to yield the gentleman from California three minutes now?

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. RAKER. Now, will the gentleman from California yield for a question? [Laughter.]

Mr. LEA of California. I yield.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman be satisfied with a conference report if in section 3 the time is extended to 30 days instead of 10?

Mr. LEA of California. That is the primary thing I ask, and if this House will vote down the conference report the bill will be thrown into conference. The Senate has already agreed to provisions that are substantially satisfactory, and there is not any reason why a conference report can not be promptly brought back that would improve this situation and secure action on this bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman understand that this conference report provides that if fresh butter is put in a car and stays there 10 days it becomes classified as cold-storage food?

Mr. LEA of California. Absolutely so, and to a large extent the fresh butter from the Central West would likewise be condemned to the cold-storage class. Several days are required by the ordinary creamery before butter accumulates in sufficient quantities for carload shipments. According to this bill all of the shipment must bear the earliest date of butter placed in the car. Therefore when your butter from the Central West reaches the market it would commonly be in the cold-storage class.

I am informed that there are some interests in the East who have deliberately supported this 10-day proposition, thinking that they would gain an advantage over the western country thereby. I want to say that I do not know of any man in this House who would do that, and I know that there is not a man among the conferees that would think of taking that position for one moment. But nevertheless that is what this bill would accomplish.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it not a fact that that is the kind of marking that the people of the West are insisting on as to eggs?

Mr. LEA of California. We made no objection to marking in the original bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. It was insisted that every egg should be marked. Now, they are objecting because we give them 40 days.

Mr. LEA of California. You give only 10 days. I do not object to the marking of these foods that are dealt in for ordinary purposes of cold storage. I object to marking wholesome foods promptly placed on the current market.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What provision interests in the East have asked that this 10-day provision be placed in the bill?

Mr. LEA of California. I understand producers and dealers have done so.

Mr. SNELL. Can you say so with propriety? You have made the statement that interests in the East have tried to have that provision put in the bill.

Mr. LEA of California. I am not going into that phase of that matter now. I say there is not a man in this House who would do that.

Mr. SNELL. Then do not lay it to the East.

Mr. LEA of California. I am not censuring this House. I would not charge anybody in this House with doing that, but I want to call your attention to the fact that such is the operation of this bill as now framed.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. In this bill as originally passed the House a refrigerator car was not defined as a cold-storage warehouse?

Mr. LEA of California. Not for purposes of marking. For the purpose of sanitary regulation, but not for the purpose of marking.

Mr. BLACK. Now, as agreed upon in conference the bill provides that this refrigerator car is held to be a warehouse, and therefore the goods have to be marked as cold-storage goods if they were in transit 10 days?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes. It takes from 15 to 17 days to transport them from the Pacific coast to the East.

Mr. BLACK. Then that would practically make them cold storage?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes; it would.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, the first cold storage bill was introduced in the House on July 29, 1919, by myself. In preparing this bill I made investigations of the laws of the different States. Everybody will agree that we want a uniform cold storage bill. Out of the 48 States about one-fourth have cold storage acts, and most of them exempt their principal industry that goes into cold storage. For instance, the State of New York, one of the largest States in the Union, rents rooms which anyone can hire and there keep their products as long as they want to without any regulation. The State of Delaware exempts the fish industry, which is the principal industry of that State.

Now, this bill contains four elements: The marking, the time limit, the sanitary condition, and the reports that are made to the people. Those are the most important elements of this bill. Of course, the bill does not suit everybody.

When the bill was drafted we drafted three or four, and it was not the intention of myself or the committee to impose any hardships on anybody. But it is somewhat of a trouble to make a bill, because there are only two ways in which it can be done; first, by the use of the taxing power, which at present is a very unpopular one, and the other is by utilizing the interstate commerce provision of the Constitution. This bill does not seek to regulate the selling of any products of cold storage. It only affects goods while they are in interstate commerce, and Congress has no right to say or order that goods to be sold to the consumer shall be marked as "cold-storage" goods, as the very moment it leaves the control of the interstate commerce law it is out of the control of this law, so that the matter of condemning goods by putting the mark "cold storage" on them is not its true purpose or practical effect. That is not affected by the bill in any shape.

As to the matter of the time limit, it takes 12 months before the bill becomes really effective to anybody except the consumer. The man who stores goods in cold storage for 12 months, including the 10 days and the 30 days, and the man who holds the goods in cold storage can sell them to the consumer without marking them as cold-storage goods.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What becomes of the goods that have been kept in storage for the 12 months' period?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. They can not be sold if at the end of the 12 months they are still kept in storage.

Mr. SNELL. Is it the idea that these goods are deteriorated and therefore unfit for food?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. No. The idea is that anybody keeping goods will begin to sell them within 8 months or 10 months, before the 12 months is up. Under the present conditions they are keeping goods for an unlimited time, in some cases for as long as two or three years.

Mr. SNELL. Then, the idea is not that the goods after that are unfit for food?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. The only idea is to force the goods out of storage in one season. It is the opinion of everyone connected with cold storage that 12 months will carry the products from a time of plenty through the time of scarcity, and will prevent the profiteer from carrying cold-storage goods until he can force prices to suit his wishes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, having had some experience in the cold-storage proposition, I desire to say just a word in regard to this bill. As far as I know none of the cold-storage companies are opposed to the passage of this bill. But as I look at the proposition, the only people who would be harmed in any way by it would be the producer and the ultimate consumer. When we pass a regulatory measure like this, I suppose it is for the definite purpose of conveying some knowledge to the consumer that will be of benefit to him when he purchases goods; and from the statement made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. HAUGEN] yesterday I take it that that is the principal desire of the committee in passing this legislation. I think this is purely a regulatory measure that will add to the price that the ultimate consumer will pay for his goods, but that it will not really convey any information to him that will be of definite use in determining the value of the goods he is purchasing. For instance, I think probably butter and eggs are sold under regulatory cold-storage rules or restrictions more than any other articles of food, unless it is meats. This bill starts with the assumption that length of time in storage is the only thing to be considered, while, as a matter of fact, the important question is the condition of the goods when they went into cold storage. The question of good or bad eggs or quality of eggs resolves itself more into a proposition of what was the condition of the eggs when they went into the cold storage and the time of the year when they went into the cold storage, rather than the one, three, or six months that they have been in cold storage. In this respect the bill absolutely overlooks the vital point. According to this bill, if you are going to carry it to the final analysis—that is, convey information to the ultimate consumer—what would be the result if a retail grocer had two baskets of eggs on his counter in the month of November, and he said one basket had been in storage 30 days and the other six months? The average consumer would take the eggs that had been in storage only 30 days, when, as a matter of fact if the eggs were equally fresh when they went in, the April eggs would be very much better as an article of food than the August or September eggs; and everyone who knows about this will bear me out in that statement. So by carrying into effect the actual wording and intent of this bill you injure rather than aid the ultimate consumer, whom you want to help.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. HUSTED. What does the gentleman think of the provision which forces the goods upon the market within 12 months from the time when they first go into storage?

Mr. SNELL. I will answer that question in just a minute. I want to finish up this other proposition. A great deal more depends upon the condition of the eggs when they went into cold storage than the mere length of time that they have been there. Of course, there is no question but that all eggs should come within the 12 months limit, but the mere proposition of whether eggs have been in cold storage 30, 60, or 90 days or 6 months has nothing whatever to do with it. But to carry out the provisions of this bill you must actually mark each egg, not case of eggs, with the time it has been in storage if you want even this information to reach the ultimate consumer, whether it is of value or not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Take the illustration of the two baskets of eggs. How is the consumer to know how long they have been in cold storage?

Mr. SNELL. I do not know how he can know, unless the grocer puts up a sign, "These eggs have been in cold storage 30 days," and another sign, "These eggs have been in cold storage six months."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Can we enact a law that will compel the retailer to disclose that?

Mr. SNELL. I do not think you can, and the point I want to make is this: That the marks do not really amount to anything, only as between the wholesaler and retailer. They are on the outside of the case of the eggs, and the consumer never sees it .

Mr. MONTAGUE. On the unbroken package?

Mr. SNELL. On the unbroken package, but very few consumers buy them in unbroken packages or see the package itself. When the retailer buys the eggs of the wholesaler, he knows the marks, buys on quality and regardless of when they went into storage.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SNELL. May I have two or three minutes more?

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman contend that the New York law has injured the people of New York?

Mr. SNELL. If you will yield me a little time, I will answer that.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield the gentleman time enough to answer that question. [Laughter.] I will yield two minutes to the gentleman. Does the gentleman think that the New York law has injured the people of New York, requiring, as it does, the marking of cold-storage articles with the day when the package enters into cold storage, and limiting the time to 12 months? This bill limits the time to 12 months and 10 days. Some States limit it to shorter periods, but this bill limits it to 12 months and 10 days.

Mr. SNELL. That does not affect us. I am not particularly concerned about the passage of this law. I am perfectly willing it should be passed; but I am talking about it as a matter of practical common sense, that is all. I think that it does not do any good to the ultimate consumer, and the reason that the committee has given for passing such regulatory acts as this is that they will benefit the ultimate consumer.

In regard to the question of my friend from New York [Mr. HUSTED] about the value of goods that have been in cold storage for 12 months, I know as a positive fact that the United States Government is selling several thousands packages of butter that have been in cold storage for nearly two years, and I know also that that butter is in fine condition at the present time, and will grade higher on any market than the average creamery butter of winter make that is coming on the market in this city at the present time. Now, what will become of that butter if this bill is passed? Of course, there is no sense in this section of the bill.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Have you any idea that if that butter was sold it would reduce the price of butter?

Mr. SNELL. I will say that they have tried to put that butter on the market at practically any price, but there has been such a howl raised against cold-storage food that people, not knowing the condition of the butter or its real value, and knowing that it has been in cold storage for nearly two years, with all the talk against cold-storage articles, think it is unfit for food, while as a matter of fact I doubt if there are three gentlemen on the floor of this House who could tell that it was cold-storage butter if it were presented here at the present time. These regulatory acts go so far that they prejudice people against good food, and people have to pay more for it than they would under other conditions.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNELL. I am sorry I have not the time to discuss fully all the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this bill should be denominated "A bill to reduce the value of the products in the hands of the producer and increase the cost to the ultimate consumer." It ought not to pass. I do not think anybody will claim that you could preserve fresh meat without chilling it, and it sometimes happens that you have to put it in a chill room and keep it more than 10 days, and if you do, you will be selling cold-storage meat instead of fresh meat, and everybody that buys will have to pay more because of the added cost.

The presumption is that this bill is intended to help the producer and the consumer, but the truth is it does neither; it embarrasses both. The Agricultural Department authorities say that it is impossible to administer this law without an added cost of four or five million dollars a year to the Agricultural Department alone, and that is a condition that we ought to investigate before we pass laws of this sort, for the people pay that cost. It seems to me that when we pass a law to regulate food products we should be certain that we have not regulated them in such a way as to compel the buyer to pay more and the producer to get less. If this is intended to embarrass the packers, you are not embarrassing them at all; you are simply embarrassing the people that are raising the food supply and who pay the taxes into the Treasury of the United States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET].

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I have not given the time to the consideration of this bill that is required on account of other matters, but I listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yesterday, and I think he is right in his contention. On the other hand, I do not wish to be at variance with my good friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], for I am in favor of legislation of this character. But this morning I received a letter from W. A. Wentworth, secretary of the Iowa Creamery Secretaries' and Managers' Association, in which he says:

> It has come to my attention that the conference report on the cold storage bill may be adopted almost any day, and that this requires the branding of butter 10 days after the date of manufacture. If this is sold within 30 days, the brand may be removed.
> In view of the fact that transportation is rather questionable, in so far as prompt delivery to the market is concerned, and especially if the conditions of the past two summers are not improved, the Iowa creameries will be faced with the situation of having a very large share of their butter go onto the market labeled as cold-storage product, even in the flush season. There have been times when the railroads did not deliver Iowa butter to New York in less than two weeks, and many shipments are as much as 20 days on the road under the conditions last summer. It seems to me that such labeling would work an especial hardship on butter which is placed on the market during the winter, and which butter is practically as good as when it was manufactured. I can not help but view this as something which would further curtail the consumption of butter and assist, to some extent at least, the sale of butter competitors. We know that the market for these competitors is altogether too favorable from the viewpoint of the dairy industry, and also from the viewpoint of public health and child welfare.

I think the bill should be sent back to the conference committee for correction.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I heartily indorse the general purposes of this legislation, but it will work a hardship upon the producers and initial dealers of the country unless the bill reported by the conferees is amended so as to extend the fresh-storage period from 10 days to 30 days; in other words, unless it is provided, as it is in subsection (c) of section 2 of the Senate bill, that "cold storage * * * does not include chilling or precooling therein for not more than 30 days, for manufacture, sale, or transportation." There are thousands of produce dealers, dairy products dealers, and cooperative dairy associations in various towns throughout the country who buy poultry and dairy products direct from the farmers and the dairymen. Ordinarily it takes two or three weeks within which to assemble a carload of such products for shipment. In the summer season such products are ordinarily kept in coolers in order to keep them fresh and in good condition; then they are shipped in refrigerator cars, and frequently one or two additional weeks are consumed in transit. Consequently, under the 10-days provision, such products would have to be marked "cold storage," and would only be paid for as cold-storage products. In all the markets there is a material and well-recognized difference in price between fresh and cold-storage products. As the initial shippers would thus be compelled to sell the products as "cold-storage" products, they could in turn only pay the farmers and dairymen cold-storage prices, with the result that the producer would be the sufferer.

It is insisted by the conferees that this situation would be remedied by the provision in section 3 (a) (1)— > that these words ("cold storage") may be removed immediately preceding a sale for consumption before the expiration of the 30 days following the date when such article of food was first placed in cold storage.

However, the large dealers in the cities, in purchasing from the produce dealers and dairy associations, would insist that they could only pay cold-storage prices, as the goods would be marked "cold storage," and that it was not at all certain that they would be able to reach the consumer within the 30 days. The provision referred to is clearly in the interest of the big middleman, who would get a rake-off to which he would not be entitled, and which fairly belonged to the farmer; in other words, the farmer would be compelled to sell at cold-storage prices, and yet the consumer would be compelled to pay fresh prices, provided the product should reach the consumer within 30 days after being marked "cold storage." In this connection, I wish to further submit that the provision permitting the erasure of "cold storage" marks is a dangerous provision, as it would furnish unscrupulous dealers an easy avenue to defraud; if permitted to erase a "cold storage" mark on products that had been in cold storage less than 30 days, they could likewise erase marks on products that had been in cold storage for 6 or 12 months, and it would subsequently be practically impossible to detect the fraud. The conference report bill should be amended so as to conform to the Senate provision of 30 days' precooling period without the products being marked "cold storage" and the provision permitting erasure of cold storage marks should be entirely eliminated. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, in the main I am in favor of this legislation, but it occurs to me that the conferees have brought in a provision, the one now under discussion, that will work an injustice and a hardship to a good many people. I believe that the remedy can be had by an amendment which, if I am recognized for the purpose, I shall offer in a motion to recommit at the proper time, providing in section 2, subdivision (e), after the word "place," to strike out the words "including a car, vessel, or other vehicle," and at the end of paragraph (e), add the following:

Provided, That the term "cold-storage warehouse does not include a car, vessel, or other vehicle used in transit."

It seems to me that will meet the objection and make the bill fair and remove the injustice. There is no question but that a car loaded in the West with fresh produce and shipped to New York in many instances will not arrive in 10 days, and the persons shipping it will have to label it "cold storage." At the other end of the line the cold-storage tax may be removed and the produce sold as fresh goods at a better price, the retailer profiting by the transaction by virtue of the fact that he purchased for less and sold for more, as a result of the provisions of this bill. The original purpose of the bill was to benefit both the producer and the consumer. Certainly the conferees can and will correct the report by eliminating this objectionable provision and report the bill back to the House in time to pass the same before the close of this Congress.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, there is and for a long time has been a general and very proper demand for cold-storage legislation. Mr. HUTCHINSON, of New Jersey, introduced the first bill, for months the committee considered it, and the conference report is the result of their efforts. I have had considerable to do with the framing of bills during my service here, but this beats them all as far as complexity and difficulty are concerned. We wanted the bill, of course, to cover everything that should be covered and not to cover anything that ought not to be covered. We wanted everyone reached and regulated and controlled who ought to be, without disagreeable and onerous and unnecessary conditions. It was very difficult to write this bill just as we thought it ought to be written, but I believe it is in good shape now, and that arguments urged against it are without force.

"Cold storage" is, to an extent, a disagreeable phrase. Cold-storage goods are at some disadvantage in the market. People do not wish them if they can get fresh goods, and why? Because up to this time no one has been able to tell how long goods have been in cold storage—a few days, a few months, a few years—no one knows. This bill proposes a method by which the length of time can be stamped upon the goods so that everyone who has to do with them will know how long they have been in cold storage.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman will pardone me, but my time is very limited.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five minutes more time.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Butter and eggs coming from a distance everyone knows must be stored for some time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Some time must elapse in which to cover the time of gathering and storing and shipping. How much time? At present no one knows, but if a certificate is issued under Federal regulations to the effect that the butter and eggs are only 10 days old, it will be a recommendation in the mind of anyone who knows anything about business methods respecting them. It is a detriment now to have goods marked cold storage, because the mark signifies that they have been in cold storage, no one knows how long.

We are criticized for including the chilling rooms. It develops that goods are kept in chilling rooms 5 days, 30 days, 6 months, and moved from there perhaps to other chilling rooms. All of that time ought not to be included, according to the opinion of some gentlemen, in determining or limiting the period of cold storage. The committee were of the opinion when they listened to the testimony and knew the facts that it would not be proper or safe to eliminate the time that goods are kept in chilling rooms. If we were to eliminate it, it would offer opportunity for and be an invitation to a practical violation if not a nullifying of this law, so far as those products are concerned.

We are criticized for including refrigerator cars and vessels. If we exclude them, we take out the period of shipment—a few days, 10 days, 30 days, or a month—during which there would be no control whatever over the products, and it would open the door to all kinds of evasion and violation of the law. The only safe thing to do is to include them all, and it will work no hardship.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yesterday raised an objection to the bill, and from the manner in which he presented it, and knowing him as well as we do, we were satisfied he was sincere, and it seemed to those who heard it for the first time to have force, but I believe it to be without force or virtue. He said in case a product can not reasonably be marked, or if "impracticable" to mark it, it must be marked as of the first day of the month in which it goes into cold storage, although he says it may have been in cold storage only one day. The fact is this bill expressly provides that if it has been in one day, or less than 10 days, or not more than 10 days, it does not have to be marked at all. He points out to his own satisfaction that the definition of what cold storage is does not apply to such a situation as he describes, but I wish to point out that the 10 days he refers to, which he says do not cover the proposition, are a part of the definition of cold storage, and apply to everything, to every line of this bill wherever the matter is mentioned, and therefore completely answers his objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does not the bill say the first day of the month shall be presumed, for the purposes of this act, to be the day the goods were put in cold storage?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; in cold storage, after the expiration of 10 days.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What is the description or definition of cold storage?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know, but the bill says it shall be presumed, for the purposes of this act, to be in cold storage the first day of the month. That regulates the 10-day period.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have answered the gentleman's objection, but I shall speak further of it. There is a clause in the bill giving the Secretary of Agriculture power to deal with exceptional cases, where it is "impracticable" fully to mark goods. That may be in case of mixtures. There is another section which fully takes care of mixtures, and a case of it being impracticable to mark would not arise in the cases cited by the gentleman from Illinois yesterday at all. He has not grasped the situation. It would arise largely in the case of mixtures, where a man gathers a little to-day and a little to-morrow and along through the month and finally gets enough for a shipment, but does not know when he gathered particular amounts, or has not kept a record of them, so it is to be marked as of the first of the month. If he has kept a record of the portions composing the mixture, he is required to mark the mixture with the date of the portion that has been in cold storage the longest, but if none of them have been in 10 days there will be no necessity for marking any of them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the statement I made as to the articles was based on a question propounded to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], in charge of the bill, and his answer. It was the articles he mentioned that I referred to. I do not know whether he was correct or not.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I differ from the gentleman from Iowa in his answer to the gentleman from Illinois as to what articles this impracticability would be applied to. In my judgment it could not be applied to the articles he named.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. My time is very limited. What is it?

Mr. SNELL. How would you mark tinned cheese that is made up of several varieties, some held in cold storage and some in different storages?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There is, I believe, a provision in this bill in regard to cheese which may be kept in cold storage longer than anything else for the purpose of ripening. The bill passed the House September 30, 1919, a year and a half ago, so I have not now all its provisions in mind—can not recall all of them offhand.

Mr. SNELL. That would not apply to tinned cheese.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. So that the question would have no application to the bill.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman will excuse me——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman is taking too much of my time. I have answered it, saying that there is a provision in the bill which makes the question inapplicable.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There is another thing in regard to these mixtures. There is a mingling of goods which the gentlemen of the House perhaps do not understand. There was strenuous objection to the requiring of the marking "cold storage" of a new product that resulted by mixing and mingling. That objection came in the first instance from the makers of sausage, saying that sausage is a new product, fresh, and it should not be marked. But what is sausage made of? It is made from scrap material lying in cold storage for months, perhaps for years, which finally is taken out and converted into sausage. Made as it is, largely of old material, it is not a new product, and therefore should be marked "cold storage." This bill covers that because when anything has been in cold storage and put into a mixture it must be marked with the date when the first ingredient went into cold storage.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. There has been a good deal of talk about the 10-day period, about being 10 days in cold storage. Does not section 3, under the heading (1), say that if it is not in there more than 30 days the words can be removed?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; in the hands of a retailer sold to a consumer. Now, I insist, gentlemen, that this idea that the marking of an article as being of cold storage is detrimental; I insist when this law is in proper working order a mark showing a short period of storing will be a recommendation of the goods to the trade and to the consumer. Cold-storage goods now have a black eye; they are a drug on the market, because people do not know their age or condition, because there is no law regulating these things and cold-storage stuff is kept for years and then is put upon the market. This 10-day provision would be a guaranty to the dealer and the consumer that goods are just as fresh as they can be.

Now, we are asked why we are providing a limit of 12 months. One idea of cold storage is to provide the storage of goods during a time of plenty to carry them over to a time of scarcity. Limitation of time and regulation must be provided because the health of the people is involved. It should be limited to 12 months, so that there can be no hoarding, so that there can be no cornering of the market, so that the crops of one year will not be carried over in large quantities to another year.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And everybody who has examined the situation, as I understand it, believes that that is a good plan. The object of making this 12 months was that the products of the year must be turned over before the products of another year come upon the market. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know how much it will cost to administer this law?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not, but I think it is a very necessary law, and I believe it will be administered economically. And I will say to the gentleman from Illinois in regard to this chilling business that the packers have been interested in that and they objected to the requirement that goods in the chilling room should be considered as in cold storage, but when the entire matter was gone into they receded from their position, and their only objection now is that it will cost them more than they think they ought to pay in order to do the marking of goods in chilling rooms.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The authorities from the Agricultural Department say that it will cost $4,000,000 to administer this law, and, of course, the people will pay for it, farmers and everybody.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is many times the amount I have heard or believe will be necessary.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Is the parliamentary situation such that a motion to recommit the conference report with instructions will be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed the Senate has already agreed to the conference and consequently the motion to recommit would not be in order. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HAUGEN) there were—ayes 51, noes 139.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays. I also make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Much more than a quorum are present.

Mr. HAUGEN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa demands the yeas and nays. Thirty-six gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the conference report was rejected.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Was the motion to reconsider and to lay upon the table agreed to?

The SPEAKER. It was. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and send the bill to conference. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the Senate has already agreed to the conference report and discharged the conferees. Can we ask a further conference?

The SPEAKER. Ask for a further conference. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

Mr. WALSH. Let us have the request in the RECORD. A parliamentary inquiry Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. What is the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman requests a further conference.

Mr. WALSH. Upon what?

The SPEAKER. That the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference.

Mr. WALSH. I did not understand that there was a Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. There was one amendment, as the Chair remembers. The Chair appoints the following conferees.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make a motion to recommit and to instruct the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The Chairs thinks that is in order. The gentleman moves to instruct the conferees with the following motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee moves to instruct the conferees to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment embodied in subsection (c) of section 2, and agree to the same, and with further instructions to amend section 3 (a) (1) by striking out the words:

"Except that these goods may be removed immediately preceding a sale for consumption before the expiration of 30 days following the date when such article of food was first placed in cold storage it is removed in order to be sold."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion to recommit is not in order. You can not instruct the conferees on the part of the House to recede from an amendment that the House has already further insisted on disagreement with.

Mr. WINGO. I understand the gentleman's objection goes——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like the gentleman from Illinois to state his point of order again.

Mr. WINGO. As I understood the motion it was directing the House conferees to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The House has just disagreed to the Senate amendment. Now you can not instruct conferees to recede and instruct the conferees what they are to do. You can not recede from a portion of the amendment. I think what the gentleman has in mind is not in the Senate amendment at all.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the language the gentleman from Illinois refers to, as I now recall the reading of it, instructs the House conferees to recede to the disagreement and concur. Is that the language?

The SPEAKER. To recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same.

Mr. WINGO. To instruct the conferees to do that?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What his language should have been was to instruct the House conferees to agree to the Senate amendment. He is now instructing them to carry out the action of the House. The form is technically incorrect. The effect of it is just the same, namely, to instruct the conferees to agree to a Senate amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can modify it.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. However, I think, Mr. Speaker, that the conferees understand the purpose of the House, anyhow, and I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, and Mr. YOUNG of Texas.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the managers on the part of the House have had further conference on the bill H. R. 15962, as instructed by the House, and have agreed to amendment No. 30, agreeing to $1,400,000 instead of $1,200,000. That is the only change made in the conference report, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the conference report be dispensed with. It has already been read once.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to consider the deficiency appropriation conference report, and that the reading of the full conference report be dispensed with.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, there is so much confusion I am not sure I understood the gentleman. I understood the gentleman to say that the only change from the conference report of yesterday is that they have carried out the instructions of the House on the prohibition enforcement amendment and have brought in the amendment the House directed yesterday?

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely. The conference report has already been made with that in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the conference report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill (H. R. 15962) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 6: Page 3, line 9, insert: "For advertising notice of taxes in arrears July 1, 1920, as required to be given by act of March 19, 1890, to be reimbursed by a charge of 50 cents for each lot or piece of property advertised, $2,200: Provided, That hereafter no more than 1,000 copies of the pamphlet of taxes in arrears shall be printed, and a charge of not less than cost plus 10 per cent shall be made and collected from each person furnished with a copy of such pamphlet, the moneys to be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the United States and the District of Columbia in the same proportions as appropriations for printing the pamphlet are paid from such revenues."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, Senate amendment No. 6 is legislation. If the House conferees had had authority to agree to this item, they would have agreed to the Senate amendment. The amendment carries $2,200 for printing the advertising pamphlets wherein is advertised the sale of real estate in the District of Columbia on which the taxes have not been paid. These pamphlets are desired chiefly by those who attend these sales and purchase property at such sales. It was thought that these pamphlets, therefore, being largely for the benefit of the buyers, should be paid for by the buyers at not less than the actual cost of the pamphlets. Now, it is going to cost about $2,082 more than the appropriation or allotment of $4,500 for printing the pamphlets. I therefore move——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under this provision only a thousand copies of this tax advertisement is to be printed, as I understand it?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Every wise man who owns real estate ought to know whether his property is advertised for taxes, because frequently, or occasionally, property is sold at a tax sale where the taxes have been paid. Under this provision they can not get this copy unless it comes within the thousand copies printed. Are there not more than a thousand copies used in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GOOD. Under the law the Commissioners of the District are now required to print 2,000 copies, and they always have more than a thousand copies that are not distributed. They are largely called for, first, by the men who attend these sales and who buy the property, and, second, by large owners of property and big real estate firms. The ordinary owner of property does not call for them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Every real-estate owner who owns much real estate, if he is wise, looks to see if the property is advertised for tax sale.

Mr. GOOD. That would require over $100,000. The pamphlets are quite large, and it costs a great deal to print them. They are about 3 inches thick and cover several hundred pages. Of course, the Government would not pass one of these out to a man who owns a single lot.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Everywhere else in the country, I think, property for sale for taxes is advertised in the newspapers, so that everybody has a chance to get a copy there.

Mr. GOOD. I so understand.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Here it is proposed to limit the number of copies printed and make people pay for them. Frequently mistakes do occur about selling property where the taxes have been paid. I should think that my office would be derelict if it did not examine every year the property advertised for tax sale; not because of the property I own, however.

Mr. GOOD. The experience has been that it has not been called for to the extent of carrying out the law, and if we printed 2,000 copies, practically a thousand of them would go into the wastebasket.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment No. 6.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 14: Page 5, line 20, insert:

"COURTS.

"Juvenile court: For transportation and traveling expenses to secure the return of absconding probationers, $150."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is legislation. About two years ago for the first time Congress appropriated money to pay for transportation and traveling expenses to secure the return of absconding probationers. This last year there was $250 appropriated for that purpose. While there was no law for it, that is the practice at the present time, and they will need to bring back three persons who have absented themselves, and they will need almost, as I recall, $100, and to cover other contingencies for the rest of the year they have estimated $50 additional.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. What will be the total amount allowed?

Mr. GOOD. Four hundred dollars, if this amendment is agreed to.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 14.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 20: Page 7, line 17, insert: "For board and care of all children committed to the guardianship of said board by the courts of the District, and for temporary care of children pending investigation or while being transferred from place to place, with authority to pay not more than $7,500 (in lieu of $1,500 heretofore authorized) to institutions adjudged to be under sectarian control and not more than $400 for burial of children dying while under charge of the board, $15,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, there are about 2,000 children in the District of Columbia that are under the care of the board of children's guardians. There is an appropriation for this year of $160,000 for that purpose. The law authorizes the expenditure of money for the care of these children, but there are words in the Senate amendment similar to those carried in the present law that make the amendment subject to a point of order. Under the wording of the amendment this money can be expended in paying for the care of these children who are committed to sectarian institutions. Many of these children are cared for in homes in near-by States, mostly in Virginia and Maryland and some in New Jersey, but some of them are in schools conducted by some sectarian institutions. That language has always been carried in the bill. The department asked for $23,000 deficiency. The Senate amendment carries $15,000 for that purpose. If any criticism can be made, it might be that the $15,000 will not be sufficient. If it had not been for the fact that the language in the amendment makes it subject to a point of order, the conferees would have agreed to it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. That does not change the present law, which makes it unlawful to appropriate money to a sectarian institution direct?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. SISSON. It simply authorizes the use of $15,000 by the board of children's guardians to care for these children?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. What is the history of the language on line 21, "in lieu of $15,000 heretofore authorized"?

Mr. GOOD. The current law placed a limitation of $1,500, and the Senate increased that amount by $6,000, and that is because they have found that in some of these institutions they can care for the children more economically than they can be cared for in private homes or other institutions. They are only using these institutions where the cost of caring for these children is less than they can be cared for elsewhere.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 25: Page 11, line 13, insert: "For transportation of diplomatic and consular officers, including the same objects specified under this head in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $100,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, there is no law which authorizes the payment of transportation expenses of diplomatic and consular officers. There is an appropriation this year of $145,000 to pay such traveling expenses. That amount has already been expended. There is not a penny remaining to pay for transportation expenses of diplomatic and consular officers. The State Department made an estimate that went to the Senate for $200,000 for this purpose.

The Senate adopted an amendment carrying $100,000 for that service. I understand that by a Senate amendment the item which went out on the floor of the House for next year was restored, to the extent of $300,000 for next year. If the amount of the Senate bill, $100,000, is agreed to, they will have for this purpose for this year $245,000, with the prospect of $300,000 for next year. I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment numbered 25.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is it not expected—or, at least, hoped—that there will be a considerable transportation of diplomatic and consular officers now in Europe, coming home between the 1st of March and the 1st of July, and some expense for others going from here abroad?

Mr. GOOD. I think so. I think the State Department recognized that fact when they asked for $200,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I see that it is apparently desired to postpone most of that good work until after July 1. I think it would be highly desirable to have it sooner.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman want to bring them all back?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it would be highly desirable to make this appropriation of $200,000 for the remainder of this year and only $200,000 for the next fiscal year. I should be enthusiastic for that. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. Well, the committee thought it would be necessary to appropriate the $100,000, and therefore I move to recede and concur in Senate amendment numbered 25.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment 25.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 26: Page 12, line 22, insert: "The limitation for the fiscal year 1921 as to the number of delivered sheets of customs stamps is increased from 276,000 to 520,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the sundry civil act carried an authorization to issue 276,000 sheets of customs stamps for this year. The Bureau of Printing and Engraving have already exceeded this amount, and have already issued 302,500 sheets. That is necessary because of the increased work in the Customs Service. I therefore move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 26 and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment 26.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 28: Page 13, line 23, insert:

"PAYMENT TO WALSTON H. BROWN AND OTHERS.

"To pay Walston H. Brown, sole surviving partner of the firm of Brown, Howard & Co., $65,792.53; to the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., $26,400.30; and to the estate of Henry A. V. Post, $50,359.35, as adjudged by the Court of Claims upon its findings of fact."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, these are old claims. They have been in Congress for 20 years. A great many claims similar in most respects have already been allowed and paid. So far as three of these claims are concerned, my understanding of the situation is that the claimants failed to take advantage of their legal rights and to take certain appeals. They have no legal status whatever. They are not claims that are authorized by law. There is no authority of law for the payment of them.

The Committee on Appropriations have refused to sit as a Committee on Claims. I think the Committee on Claims have on numerous occasions reported out these items, but they have never passed the House. In 20 years they have been buffeted about, first reported to the House and kicked out of the House, and now they appear in a Senate amendment. The committee therefore felt that we should not agree to these claims, and that we should ask the House to insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 28.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. What is the basis of the claims? I do not know anything about them.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ESCH. This claim arises out of the payment of an excess of customs duties upon steel blooms that were imported in 1879 under the then existing customs law.

Mr. WINGO. How did the Court of Claims get jurisdiction?

Mr. ESCH. The claims were sent to the Court of Claims by an act of 1903 and a subsequent act of 1905.

Mr. WINGO. Congress authorized their consideration by the Court of Claims?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; and the Court of Claims has filed its findings of fact and of law, and finds that while they are not legal claims they are equitable claims, and that some 20 of these claims arising out of the exactions of the Treasury Department under that old customs law have already been paid by acts of Congress. There are only three of them that still remain. Two of them are contained in this item. This matter has been favorably reported four times by the Senate committee and once prior to this Congress reported favorably by the House committee.

Mr. EDMONDS. These bills are reported favorably by the House committee again this year.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a preferential motion.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] for a question.

Mr. EDMONDS. These bills have been reported favorably by the House committee again this year.

Mr. GOOD. I know that.

Mr. EDMONDS. And the case is as stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GOOD. The Court of Claims did not say that they are equitable claims; that is, quite to that extent. They say they are equitable in a sense. This is the statement of the Court of Claims:

Upon the foregoing findings of fact the court concludes that the claim is not a legal one. It is equitable in the sense that the United States exacted of claimant sums in excess of the legal rate of duty under the tariff law, aggregating (here follows the amount in each case, being sums named in the pending bill). (See court findings S. Docs. 415 and 416, 63d Cong., 2d sess.)

This is not a claim against the Government in the sense that money of the Government is to be paid by it to the claimants; the money asked is the claimants' own money, paid by them to the Government, which the Government never should have collected.

Mr. ESCH. The Government has had this money for 40 years.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to call attention to the fact that these are just as equitable claims as the $700,000 that have already been paid.

Mr. GOOD. That may be true as far as the money collected, but these claimants absolutely slept on their rights and did not do the things that the other claimants did to protect their rights.

Mr. EDMONDS. I agree with the gentleman that they did not.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the committee has no judgment in regard to these matters. This is purely a legislative matter. It is a matter over which the Committee on Appropriations does not believe it should exercise judgment at all, and under the rules we bring the matter back here. These claims should never have been brought in on a great appropriation bill like this. They ought to be considered in the House with time to consider them, when the merits of the claims can be gone into and every phase of the question discussed and analyzed. That was the reason that moved the conferees on the part of the House to ask that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to discuss the merits or demerits of the proposition contained in the Senate amendment to pay these claims. I have wondered if this odd circumstance is not going to become the practice of the House under the new rule. Under the old practice of the House these claims inserted in a deficiency bill would have been disagreed to in conference and never have come before the House for a vote unless some one had demanded a vote when it first came in, because it is almost the invariable practice for the House conferees on a deficiency bill to refuse to agree to a claim inserted by way of amendment in the Senate.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the conferees in this case under the old rules of the House would not have been able to secure recession on the part of the Senate conferees, because they absolutely refused to recede and said they intended to put it through.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They absolutely refused to recede this time, because they knew that under the rules of the House it would have to come to a vote in the House and the House would have a chance to have a motion to concur in the amendment.

The House conferees are not supposed to know the merits of claims presented either to the House or the Senate. The House conferees on a deficiency bill have much to do without investigating the character of all the claims. But if it shall become the practice of the House without much knowledge and without a chance for much consideration to agree to claims inserted by way of amendment in the Senate I can see a very ready way of getting a great many Senate amendments. The Senate under its practice will insert almost anything concerning a claim as an amendment on a deficiency bill at the request of a Senator. They leave these matters mainly to be determined by the House, and everyone who has a claim will be asking the Senate to add it as a Senate amendment to a deficiency bill. If the House is going to act upon the bare statement of some Member of the House, where the House has not considered the claim at all, there is no limit to it. I do not know whether that is going to be one of the effects of the new rule or not, but if we start to pay these claims on a deficiency bill, that is the inevitable effect of it. It might be an additional reason for changing the rule.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a judgment of the Court of Claims upon these three claims. That judgment holds that these claims, while not legal claims, are equitable claims. The judgment in this case recites certain facts, and the judgment of the Court of Claims is based on these facts. These men were importers of steel blooms. Customs officers charged them 45 per cent ad valorem duty despite the contention that 30 per cent was the correct duty. One of the party that was importing steel blooms refused to pay the 45 per cent duty, claiming the duty was 30 per cent ad valorem. The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York held that the ad valorem duty was not 45 per cent, but 30 per cent, and the Treasury Department, without taking any appeal, accepted the ruling and thereafter held that the duty was 30 per cent.

Thereafter, 24 claimants, situated exactly as these claimants, were authorized by Congress to present their claims to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims found in their favor, and upon those findings of fact and the conclusions of law their claims were allowed by Congress and were paid out of the United States Treasury. The claims of the Illinois Steel Co. and two or three other Illinois companies were paid in full, and all the claimants except the three named in this amendment received the amount due them. Thereafter these three claimants asked the same redress from Congress that the other 24 claimants had asked, and went through the same process exactly and have had their claims up here before Congress for the last eight years. These three claims have passed the Senate six different times. They have been approved by every committee that they have been before. I have before me an exhaustive report of the Committee on Claims of this House, made at this session, finding that these claims are just claims and unanimously recommending that they should be paid. The bills are on the Private Calendar, but the trouble is that we will never get up to the Private Calendar. The Private Calendar is a dead calendar for the session, at least. These claims were up in the Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth Congresses. The Committee on Claims reported in favor of them, and they were put upon the Private Calendar, but we never got to the consideration of that calendar, so far as these claims were concerned, and that will be the result here. The fact is that no one disputes the justice of the claims. These people paid 15 per cent more ad valorem on the steel imported than the courts held they should pay. The custom officers compelled them to pay this excessive and illegal charge or have their goods confiscated. The United States Government now has this money derived from this excessive charge, which the Court of Claims has adjudged belongs to these claimants. It is their money.

This amendment is not like an ordinary rider put on an appropriation or a deficiency appropriation bill. A committee of this House has not only passed upon it at this session of Congress, and I have the report here, an exhaustive report following every single step that has been taken, but other Committees on Claims of this House in other Congresses have passed on these claims, and all of them have been unanimous in finding that they were honest and just claims. The matter has been fully considered by the committees of both Houses, and we should not simply refuse to consider them now because of a technicality, because it was brought in at this time and in this way, the only way it could be brought into this House for consideration. The House can consider it as long as it wants to at this time. This exhaustive report of the Committee on Claims of both the House and Senate which I have here give the findings of fact and the conclusions of law of the Court of Claims, and also the decision of the Supreme Court, holding that these people were overcharged at the customhouse. There is no dispute but that the United States Treasury has this money which belongs to these people. The only way to reach this matter and give these people back their money, as in common honesty every Member of this House would do if it were brought up before him as an individual matter, is to pass this amendment at this time, which the Senate has fully considered, and in the report of the Senate committee will be found the report of the Treasurer of the United States, who says that these are just claims. I do not see why we want any more evidence on the question.

Mr. LAYTON. What is the amount of money involved?

Mr. BROWNE. In the three claims the aggregate amount is $140,000. There are 24 claims just like these that have all been paid, having been passed upon by Congress. These are the last of the claims resulting from the erroneous rulings of the custom officer.

Mr. LAYTON. Is that the original principal?

Mr. BROWNE. It is; without interest, as found by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BEE. What is the date of the judgment?

Mr. BROWNE. Nineteen hundred and fourteen. They have had it up in every Congress since that time. It has been put off just the same as it will be put off now if you hold that we can not consider it on this deficiency appropriation bill. When it was up in the Sixty-fourth Congress the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] made an elaborate statement upon it, and it was thrown out because of some point of order that was raised against it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to this Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON].

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, I have no interest in these claims, nor has any constituent of mine in my State that I know of. I happen to know about one of these claims through a friend of mine, a native of New Hampshire, who is an eminent lawyer and a former Member of this House from Wisconsin, now living, with whom I have been acquainted for a number of years. He has been counsel in the case and has furnished me with the facts.

The question before us to-day is not whether under our rules a few Members can hold back payments of honest claims. Here is a question of honesty on the part of the Government. I want to suggest to my good friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that some years ago some good people in the State of Illinois whose money had been taken from them at practically the same time and under the same law recovered and have been paid $208,000, and they are a part of the 28 claims the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE] referred to. I do not see any reason to-day why the $65,000 that was unlawfully taken from Browne Howard & Co. in 1881 at the port of New York as customs duty, which has been lying in the Treasury of the United States from that time to this, should not be returned to them forthwith. There is no man on the floor of the House who believes that when money is unlawfully extorted by a Government agent wrongfully from an individual restitution should be delayed a single moment. I hope that the technical rules of this House will not longer prevent us from paying these claims and add still further to the 38 years that have passed before we restore to these people what they paid this Government under duress in 1882.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just called attention to the many legislative features added to this bill in the Senate. Is it not perfectly natural under the rules now effective in the House that the Senate must become the legislative body on Capitol Hill? The rules have got to be changed or the Senate must legislate. There is no question about that. The Indian appropriation bill was brought in here by the Committee on Appropriations. It left the House in a lacerated condition and, of course, came back with lots of legislation upon it, put there by the Senate. There is a request pending in the Committee on Rules for a rule to bring up the Indian legislation necessary to make effective appropriations in that bureau, but consent will not be given, and the Indian legislative bill will die on March 4. I call attention in the bill now before the House to Senate amendment numbered 53, legislation for the Navy Department. It is very necessary and important legislation. It ought to go through. If it does not become law, it will be necessary for the House to appropriate some $114,000,000 before the 1st of the coming April in order to care for the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; that will not be required at all.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am told so by the chief of the bureau.

Mr. GOOD. It will not be necessary at all.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, yes; it will, or else the department will have to violate the law after that date. This legislation slightly changed is carried in the legislative bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. There is no possible way that the Committee on Naval Affairs can get its bill up in the House any more than can the Indian Affairs Committee get its bill up. Until the rule is changed the Senate will naturally be the legislative body on Capitol Hill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak in opposition to the preferential motion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE] and against the consideration of this measure. The Private Calendar which the House started to consider the other day, and which will doubtless be considered again, carries a number of bills for the relief of certain persons in certain amounts, and carries the identical claim referred to here, the Walston H. Brown claim, the Henry A. V. Post claim, and a number of others, which are included in this deficiency appropriation bill.

So that it seems we are now engaged in transferring the business of the Committee on Private Claims to the Committee on Appropriations by reason of an amendment or a series of amendments offered in the Senate of the United States. It is a remarkable procedure, gentlemen, that here we have added to this deficiency bill over a million and a half dollars picked up from the Private Calendar. Now, the Private Calendar contains many, many items of merit. They should be considered. They have a right to be considered, and considered separately and upon their merits, but to say that anybody should have the right to take from the Private Calendar preferential claims, in its own mind, of a million and a half dollars to large manufacturers in these United States and ask action upon them and defer action upon a multitude of other private claims, as I say, seems to me strikes at the very basis of proper legislation. Now, that is what is being done here, because this claim, a claim since 1880, 1881, 1882, is pending upon the Private Calendar, and other claims in the aggregate of a million and a half dollars on this bill are likewise pending on the Private Calendar that have not been considered by this House, that have not been considered by the Senate of the United States so far except that they have been added by this amendment. There has been no report of the Committee on Claims in this House except the adoption of Senate Report No. 244 of the Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, on this so-called Brown claim——

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman is mistaken. The Committee on Claims of this Congress and in the Sixty-fourth Congress have considered this matter thoroughly, and they have reported unanimously in favor of those three claims.

Mr. GARD. I hold in my hand the report of the committee of February 19, 1920, which adopts Senate Report No. 244, Sixty-fourth Congress, which purports to be a history of the Brown claim, because it is a stale claim, stale since 1879. It has a right to be considered, but it should be considered upon its merits.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman does not raise any question of the merits of this claim, does he?

Mr. GARD. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Does not the gentleman think the claimants are entitled to be paid this money?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me there is no merit attaching to the argument made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] when he says these matters should not be considered to-day, because there are numerous other claims on the Private Calendar to be reached. That is not the point in this case. The question is, Does this Government owe this money and should it be paid? I have served for several years as a member of the Committee on Claims, and I recall the exhaustive examination into this case. My recollection is that there was a unanimous report that the amount should be paid. The gentleman says that he raises the question as to the merit of the proposition. Two courts, the Federal court in the State of New York and the Court of Claims, have passed upon this matter. They have passed upon the merits of the proposition, they have held in effect that the Government wrongfully took this money away from these people, and that it should be paid. The importers thought they should pay only a duty of 30 per cent. The custom officers demanded 45 per cent. At first the importers refused to pay this amount, but they were told that unless they did pay the 45 per cent that they would be required to pay 180 per cent, and therefore in passing upon this matter the courts held that these men made a payment of this money under duress. I say to the House that you have an opportunity to right a wrong, and you should do it regardless of how many matters would be left undisposed of on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GANDY. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. GOOD. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. GANDY. Three minutes.

Mr. GOOD. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] may regard this as a remarkable proceeding, and yet I appeal to this House, to the fairness of the Members, whether it is not a remarkable proceeding that men should be kept out of money which rightfully belongs to them for nearly 40 years. They paid this money under protest; if you please, they paid it under duress. They were told if they refused to pay the 45 per cent it would be 180 per cent. There is no doubt of that. It went then to the court in the southern district of New York, and that court said the Government was wrong and fixed the amount at 30 per cent. The Treasury Department of the United States appealed to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court of these United States dismissed that appeal. Then these men tried to get back the 15 per cent which the Government wrongfully retains of the money that it collected. Is it not remarkable that through these years this wrong should not have been righted? The Senate of the United States, in 1912, by resolution transferred this matter to the Court of Claims, and it comes back to you to-day, gentlemen, with this amount as fixed by that court. There is not any doubt about the obligation. There is not any doubt as to the amount. No interest has been added for the use of this money during all of these years. Now, let us not say because of some rule, because of some red tape, because of something or other, we will do wrong again. Let us do right to-day, let us pay back this money that belongs to these men who ought to have been paid years ago. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, as I stated a while ago, the managers on the part of the House have no opinion with regard to these claims. We concede that the Court of Claims has found they are equitable claims, but to make the claim here on the floor of this House that this matter was brought back because of the change of the rules is foolish.

Always at the short session of the Congress the conferees on the part of the House have been compelled to take claims that have been kicked around for years, and the only reason why now these three claimants are active is because an eminent lawyer up in Wisconsin, formerly living up in New Hampshire, has been employed and has stirred up the members on the part of the House and the Senate, and the Senate absolutely refuses to recede on this amendment. Take last year: We had the Thomas Keller claim pending here for more than eight years without any basis for it at all. It ought never to have been paid. Before you changed the rules of the House the House conferees were held up and compelled to sign a conference report agreeing to the Thomas Keller claim of four or five thousand dollars or allow the conference report to be defeated.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. GOOD. For a question.

Mr. DEWALT. If unfortunately the House made a bad rule, is that any reason why a just claim should be defeated?

Mr. GOOD. I am not conceding that the House has made a bad rule. If the House wants this claim paid it now has an opportunity to say so, and it would not have had, as the gentleman has said, that opportunity without this rule. But it also has the right now to pass upon some of these matters that the Senate heretofore has exercised exclusive jurisdiction over. They would have been in the conference report just the same.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] moves that the House insist on its disagreement.

Mr. GOOD. There is a preferential motion, that the House recede and concur.

Mr. BROWNE. My motion is that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes a point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-six gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. GOOD. It is an automatic call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. As many as are in favor of the motion will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 253, nays 66, answered "present" 4, not voting 105, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The House agrees to the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 33, page 19, line 8, strike out "$75,000" and insert "$425,000, including not more than $300,000 for rebuilding the Coast Guard cutter Onondaga."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, there was an estimate of the Coast Guard Service of $425,000 for repairing Coast Guard cutters. The House has given $75,000 to repair these cutters where the repair items are comparatively small. The Onondaga is a large boat. I do not know what it cost; it cost possibly $200,000 or $300,000 to build; not more than that. The boat has been tied up for 18 months. It has not been in the service at all during the past year, and if we gave this amount of money the Goast Guard Service would not be able to use this boat unless we increased the appropriation for the pay of the men. The Coast Guard Service has been growing by leaps and bounds. We are the only country in the world that has a Coast Guard Service, and this year the estimate came in for more than $16,000,000 for the Coast Guard Service next year, or almost half the amount of the total appropriations for the Navy Department during the first year of the McKinley administration.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I was going to ask if this could not be obviated by transferring the Coast Guard to the Navy Department? They have the facilities for that purpose.

Mr. GOOD. This refers only to the repair of Coast Guard cutters. The committee has cut the estimates very materially, and there is absolutely no rhyme or reason at this time in spending $300,000 on reconditioning this vessel. That is more than its original cost.

I move, therefore, to insist on our disagreement to amendment No. 33.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to insist on the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 33. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 35: Page 22, line 9, insert the following: "Payment to the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co.: For payment of the claims for damage to and loss of private property occasioned by the explosions and fire at the plant of the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co., at Morgan, N. J., which have been determined by the Secretary of War and agreed to by the claimants and in amounts not exceeding those enumerated in the letter of the Secretary of War as submitted to Congress at the present session in Senate Document No. 363, $285,141.41."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, Congress has authorized the Secretary of War to investigate into that disaster where a great many lives were lost and much property destroyed in the explosion at the plant of the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co., at Morgan, N. J. The authority of Congress was not given to pay the claims or to adjust the claims, but only to ascertain what amounts were justly due. There have been several reports by the Secretary of War, and we have appropriated because of damages growing out of that explosion $1,646,576.93.

These claims that are now reported in Senate Document 363 are for damages to property that was detained in freight cars standing on the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The property consists largely of freight cars—about 40 or 60 freight cars. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. has settled with all of the railroad companies which had delivered freight to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and whose cars were on the tracks and destroyed.

This amount is not authorized by law, but is in the same class as the other property that was destroyed and for which appropriations have been made.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. This damage was done to property in the cars of the Pennsylvania Railroad. How is it that these payments are made to the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co.?

Mr. GOOD. That is the heading only. The T. A. Gillespie Loading Co. were the agents of the United States. I think all the disbursements heretofore have been made in that way.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman seen Senate Document 363?

Mr. GOOD. I have; I have examined it. It is here.

Mr. WALSH. Is there any claim that the property listed in Senate Document 363 was property destroyed, and which it was expected that Congress was to pay for at the time we passed this previous authorization?

Mr. GOOD. No. There is no claim here except for the property which was destroyed which was in the possession of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Delaware Dredging Co.

Mr. WALSH. Well, it is not the character of the property that was in contemplation when we passed the previous act.

Mr. GOOD. I think it was.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman will find on examination that it was not.

Mr. GOOD. There certainly is no difference in principle in regard to this property and the property there which was shipped from the gentleman's State in a freight car on the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. That property was destroyed. It seems to me it was the intention of Congress to make investigation as to all property. That has been the attitude of the War Department.

Mr. WALSH. How much more is there that has not been reported on? When shall we get through with digging up the fragments of this gunpowder explosion and paying out money?

Mr. GOOD. We are advised that this is the end, with the exception of those claims made by insurance companies, where they had insured property that was destroyed by the recent explosion. Those claims have all been eliminated.

I move, Mr. Speaker, to concur in Senate amendment No. 35.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 35. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 13.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 37: Page 23, line 1, insert the following:

"PAYMENT TO LEAVENWORTH BRIDGE CO.

"To pay the Leavenworth Bridge Co., of the city of Leavenworth, Kans., the sum of $30,843.45, in settlement for extra expense in the building of the bridge across the Republican River at Fort Riley, Kans., such extra expense being the increased cost of labor due to direct Government competition in the local labor market and overhead costs during the period subsequent to the original completion date, which extra was required because such labor as was available was incompetent."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations knows very little about this claim. There were no hearings on it anywhere, unless the Committee on Claims has had hearings upon it. There were no hearings before the Senate. The claim involves the sum of $30,843. It is at present on the Private Calendar, S. 2934. It has been up in the House several times and has been objected to. It is a claim of that character which the House ought to act upon. We ought not to have coming in, as there were a few minutes ago on the other roll call, Members by the score asking what the item was about. This matter should be taken up in a reasonable and sensible way, in a businesslike way, and if we are to maintain any semblance of economy the House must recognize those plain, homely principles of economy, and demand that the Committee on Claims shall have its day and be permitted to discuss these matters, and as we get into the discussion of them we ought to take an hour or two on a claim of this kind, with the report of the Committee on Claims before us, and then determine whether or not Congress shall appropriate the money.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me a couple of minutes?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I passed on this particular claim as a member of the Claims Committee. I think in itself it is a perfectly proper and just claim, but I do think this method of passing claims should not be permitted by this House. If it is to be permitted, you might just as well abolish the Claims Committee. What is the use of any Member presenting a claim to the Claims Committee and going all through the labor incidental to having it considered, when instead of that, if he has a friendly friend at the other end of the Capitol, he can have it placed upon this deficiency bill without the claim ever having been considered. I think this House ought to preserve its rights to pass upon the justice of these claims. The decision of the Committee on Claims ought to be considered by this House, to the end that no unjust claim and no error of judgment be ratified by this House or action taken without proper consideration. I trust that the House will not permit this method of legislation with reference to claims to prevail.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, this claim is more indefensible than the one upon which we had the last roll call. It is another step in the new history of legislation, by having bills taken from the calendar and inserted as amendments to the deficiency bill at the request of some one who may have a little more interest in one bill than in others. I am very happy to see the attitude taken by the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. GOOD] and by the gentleman from the Committee on Claims [Mr. MACGREGOR], because the calendar of the Committee on Claims is an important one to the people of the United States. It should have its day and its frequent day for the consideration of proper claims and for the votes of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARD. I have not very much time, but I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It would be entirely possible to consider this claims calendar and get action upon these bills, would it not, if the time of the House was not taken up in trying to promote generals?

Mr. GARD. I am not concerned with that, but I think we have plenty of time and have had plenty of time to discuss the Private Calendar, which is of such importance to the people of the United States, because it is the only way in which claimants against the United States can get the money properly due them. This new way of getting these claims inserted on the deficiency bill is, to my mind, indefensible.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 40: Page 23, line 17, insert: "Readjustment of contracts: For amounts found to be due various contractors under the provisions of section 10, river and harbor act approved March 2, 1919, on certain contracts for work on river and harbor improvements entered into but not completed prior to April 6, 1917, for work performed between April 6, 1917, and July 18, 1918, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 384, reported to Congress at its present session, $362,140.98."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, section 10 of the river and harbor act approved March 2, 1919, provides:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to ascertain whether any of the contracts for work on river and harbor improvements entered into but not completed prior to April 6, 1917, the date of the entrance of the United States into war with Germany, have become inequitable and unjust on account of increased cost of materials, labor, and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the war; and to ascertain and report what amounts, if any, in addition to those fixed by the terms of said contracts, should in justice and equity be paid to contractors for work performed between April 6, 1917, and July 18, 1918, the date of the approval of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," on account of the increased cost of labor and materials and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the war during that period: Provided, That in every case the amount so ascertained shall not exceed the actual loss sustained by the contractor in performing the work between the said dates: Provided further, That when such amount shall have been ascertained, the Secretary of War shall transmit to Congress for consideration a statement or statements of all findings or determinations rendered by authority of this section, the amounts thereof, the names of contractors, and dates of contracts.

It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that nowhere in this section 10 of the river and harbor act approved 1919 is there any authority for the payment of any of these claims. There was only the authority that the Secretary of War should investigate and ascertain what the losses were that were due to war conditions and report them to Congress.

Now, it is true that Congress has already appropriated $2,000,000 in the river and harbor act for the payment of such claims. That was an appropriation carried in the act of the year previous. Subsequently in deficiency bills we have carried for this class of contractors appropriations aggregating $368,000. There were Senate amendments also. This class of claims is a little different class than some claims that we shall presently come to. These were claims for losses growing out of war conditions. While there is no authority in law for the payment of them we have already paid about $2,370,000 of such claims. But, Mr. Speaker, here again are claims that another committee of this House has authority to consider in detail. Besides, we can not recede and concur in this amendment, because the amendment of the Senate is bad. It refers to Senate Document 384. These claims are not reported in Senate Document 384; only a part of them are reported in that document. I will read from that report. It says "the ascertainment herein reported is $167,398.38."

Now, these claims were reported in House Documents Nos. 986 and 997 of this session of this Congress, and they are not reported at all except to the extent of $167,000 in the Senate document.

They had been referred to the River and Harbor Committee for this reason, in order that the House might act on the claims that I assume will some time be paid if we follow the practice we have already adopted. I think that they ought to be considered in the light of the new rules of the House by the committee that has jurisdiction of these claims and let them have their day in court, and let them come before this body of intelligent men who can consider them on their merits and not have them tied to an appropriation bill.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. SMALL. I think the gentleman from Iowa is entirely right, regardless of whether the claims are meritorious they have no part in a deficiency bill. They ought to be reported on a river and harbor bill after the committee has had full opportunity to consider the evidence of the engineers. They certainly have no place in a deficiency bill. They ought to come from the River and Harbor Committee or the subcommittee on appropriations. I think the gentleman is entirely right in insisting on a disagreement.

Mr. LUHRING. Will the gentelman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. LUHRING. Did not the deficiency act of 1920 make provision for claims similar to this?

Mr. GOOD. It did.

Mr. LUHRING. Does the gentleman think it fair to make the payment of those claims and not pay these?

Mr. GOOD. That was a Senate amendment, and under the old rules of the House they said "You take that amendment or you will have no bill." We had to take it. We say under the new rules we want a square deal and we do not want three men sitting in a committee to make this legislation; we want the members of the other committee that had jurisdiction to have the right to consider the claims and act as legislators.

Mr. LUHRING. Would not the same investigation that has already been made by the engineers be reported to whatever committee that considered it?

Mr. GOOD. I think that is true.

Mr. LUHRING. And therefore you would have the same result no matter what committee considered it.

Mr. GOOD. This amendment can not be agreed to in this form, it will have to be rewritten, and I think the Committee on Claims should investigate and report to the House.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the amendment with the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOOD of Indiana moved to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with the following amendment: In the matter inserted by said amendment, before the word "Senate," insert the following: "House Documents Nos. 986 and 997 and."

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman explain what this additional amendment is?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There was a mistake in the Senate amendment. Some of the claims were not included in Senate Document No. 384 and some of them were. Some of the claims are in House Document No. 986 and House Document No. 997. They have already been passed upon by the War Department and some have already been appropriated for.

Mr. LAYTON. How will this amendment of the gentleman change the total of $362,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It will not change it at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House insist on its disagreement, and the gentleman from Indiana makes the preferential motion that the House recede and concur. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOOD of Indiana) there were—ayes 44, noes 59.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twenty-six, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. LUHRING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. LUHRING (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker I withdraw the point.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 41: Page 24, line 1, insert the following: "Payment to Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. & Co.: To pay the sum of $204,307.98 to Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. & Co., of which $150,110.07 is for themselves and $14,953.84 is for the use and benefit of their subcontractors, L. Lowrance & Bros.; $5,376 is for the use and benefit of the estate of their subcontractor, George F. Ramsey, and $15,822.82 is for the use and benefit of their subcontractor, Rodgers Construction Co., and $18,045.25 is for the use and benefit of their subcontractors, H. N. Rodgers & Bro., being the aggregate losses incurred by said Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. & Co. and their subcontractors in the carrying out of certain contracts referred to in a Senate resolution of June 19, 1919, under which the Secretary of War was directed to report the amount of losses incurred by the contractors upon contracts mentioned in said resolution: Provided, That before paying said sums the Secretary of the Treasury shall require satisfactory evidence that said contracts have been completed, and that there are no other subcontractors who claim loss for work in connection with said contracts."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, Senate amendment No. 41, Senate amendment No. 42, and Senate amendment No. 43 are amendments of the same general character. Not only is there no law authorizing the payment, but there is no law authorizing the Secretary of War to make an investigation. The Senate passed a resolution asking the Secretary of War to make an investigation, and after Senate bills numbered 4326, 4327, and 4328, which, as I recall, are these same amendments, had passed the Senate and were messaged over to the House they went to the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Claims referred these claims to the War Department. The other amendment which we have just passed over is, as I have said, of a different class altogether. Congress has already recognized the fact that after we entered the war there were a lot of contractors who had contracts to construct public buildings, contractors on river and harbor work and other kinds of work, where the price went up very materially after the contracts were made. When the contract was made the contractor had no thought and the Government had no knowledge that we would be in war during the time the contract was being performed. Therefore Congress in the case of public buildings passed a law providing for the payment to the contractor of his losses because of war conditions in respect to a contract for the erection of public buildings; and in the case of river and harbor work the river and harbor appropriation act carries section 10, which authorized the Secretary of War to ascertain what the losses were and report them to Congress. But these contracts are different and were made after the war began. These claims in Senate amendments 41, 42, and 43 are for losses arising on contracts entered into after we engaged in war. I want now to read to you what the Secretary of War says with regard to these claims.

He says in his report:

7. "The appropriations covered by S. 4326, S. 4327, and S. 4328 would relieve the contractors from the losses sustained by them as a result of a failure to properly estimate the consequences of the selective draft on labor, the disturbance of transportation, the shortage of supplies caused by the military activity, and other results of the war, and would put a premium on the neglect of these contractual obligations in favor of yielding to the incentive to engage in more lucrative work at current and war-stimulated prices.

8. "Other contractors engaged on Mississippi River levee work, and many other contractors for various other works throughout the United States, were similarly circumstanced, and unless the Congress is prepared to grant relief to all on equitable terms, involving in all probability great appropriations from the Treasury, these acts should not be favorably considered by the Committee on Claims, and thus show discrimination and favoritism for which no warrant is known."

9. The views and conclusions of the Chief of Engineers are concurred in, and it is recommended that the said acts be not passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Is it not true that, although these contracts were entered into after the war began, the trouble that the contractors got into which caused their losses was because of governmental activities during the war?

Mr. GOOD. That is what is claimed.

Mr. BEE. Is not that the fact?

Mr. GOOD. They will always find some trumped-up claim if we recognize this class of claims. When the war was on these contractors knew that we were in a condition of war; they could not tell what the labor market would be, but they went into a competitive market and they took these contracts, and now, like men, they must stand up and take the consequences of their own contracts.

If we relieve this class of contractors, then we must come to the relief of every man who had a contract with the Government if he sustained a loss, and if we take care of these big contractors, the corporations named in the three amendments, what will we do for the men who were drafted into the Army who were compelled to leave their business and suffer a loss? [Applause.] What will we do for the farmers who were urged by the Government to plant more acres but who were compelled to market their crops at a loss? Are you going to make good those losses? If you make good this loss, then let us open the doors of the Treasury to all comers, and first come first served.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to a further question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Is there not a distinction where the loss occurred by reason of the activities of Government agencies that deprived the contractors of the opportunity of carrying on their work where the Government was responsible?

Mr. GOOD. That is the worst piece of bunk I have ever heard of. There is nothing to it.

Mr. BEE. That is the testimony before the hearings.

Mr. GOOD. It is pure bunk. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 41.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 41.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] says that these contractors ought to stand up like men. I will call attention now to the facts. In 1917 these contractors entered into a contract amounting approximately to a million dollars to build levees on the Mississippi River. That contract was to be completed by December of 1918. In December of 1917 we began our activities at Muscle Shoals and at the nitrate plant in Nashville. These gentlemen assembled their laborers and began the work. The Federal Government, through its agents, went to Memphis and employed a labor agent there who was in the habit of getting laborers for the levee contractors. All of the laborers of these levee contractors were negroes, and this labor agent was a negro. The Government went to him and told him that he could not engage further as a labor agent for private enterprise, and told him that they would employ him to get laborers for the Government work at Muscle Shoals and Nashville. He accepted the employment, put on his badge, immediately went down to the camps where these contractors were working. This is his testimony. He admits this in an affidavit. He went into this camp and he said to these negroes, "We want you to quit these contractors now and go over to Nashville and Muscle Shoals and work for the Government, and instead of paying you a dollar and six bits a day we will give you $3.50 a day. We will pay your transportation to Nashville and pay it back. You do not have much work to do. It is an easy job; you work only 8 hours a day and we pay you for 11 hours, and furnish you entertainment." Now, listen to this: "We give you moving pictures, furnish you a big dance hall, plenty of craps and plenty of women." That is the testimony of this labor agent. [Laughter.] Well, as a matter of course, with that promise held out, the negroes followed him off like the rats followed the Pied Piper. [Laughter.] Now, it depleted these contractors of labor absolutely. They went to the Government employment service at Memphis and said, "What shall we do? You have taken all of our help. You have left us with nothing but teams. We need some help." They said, "The Government needs all the laborers it can get, and you can not even go out and solicit labor." Then they said, "We will go to Mexico and get Mexicans." They said, "You can not do that, because the Government has work down on the Mexican border." Then they proposed to go down 200 miles into Mexico below the border and get Mexicans that the Government could not reach. The Government agent told them that they could not do that. They said, "What shall we do? We have nothing left but teams." "Well," they said, "we will employ your teams. You go and we will give you work for your teams and we will pay your way over there and back," which the Government did not do.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield me five additional minutes?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They took the teams over there and were paid $7 a day for a team which consisted of two mules, a wagon, and a driver. The Government fixed the pay of the driver at $3.50 a day, so there was left only $3.50 for the team, two mules and the wagon, and they had to maintain the mules, and the Government gave them nothing for their own time while there. They had permission from the Mississippi River Commission for a leave of absence for 60 days and at the end of that time they said, "Now, we must go back upon the contract." They said, "You can not go; you will have to stay here with your teams." They insisted that they were losing money, that they could not afford it, that they must go back, but they had to stay. They were told that if they went back they would have them arrested as enemies of the Government. Now, think of that in time of war. They were advised by lawyers that there was no such law as that, but we were at war, and no patriotic citizen wanted to be arrested in time of war as an enemy of his country. They did stand up like men and stayed there until that summer and finally were relieved upon their insistence and went back to their contract, and, according to the Government's own report, they were never able to secure more than 43 per cent of their crews. After that the other contractors on the river laid down and said "We will not undertake to live up to our contract under such circumstances; let the Government sue us on our bond."

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They laid down on their contract. The Government then relet those contracts and relet them at a difference in some instances of 50 per cent at the lowest and in other instances 120 per cent higher than the rate that the contractors had originally made. These men said, "We will not lay down on our contract. We will," as the gentleman from Iowa said, "stand up like men and finish the job," and instead of finishing up in December, 1918, they were forced to continue at work until December, 1919, and they finished the work. We passed a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War to audit their accounts and see what was actually lost, and he reported $343,000—these others are the same kind of contracts—but that did not cover their loss. They lost more than that; the books showed more than that. That is, what it showed was due to Government interference, $343,000. Then they came here and went before the Claims Committee of the Senate. They had a bill here. But in spite of the inequitable, unjustifiable, and unwarrantable report of the Secretary, the committee, upon a hearing, reported it favorably and the Senate passed it. Then they took it before the Committee on Claims of the House and had a full hearing, and the Claims Committee, after a full hearing, despite the Secretary of War, made a unanimous report favorable to the claim, and over in the Senate the other day it was taken up over there and considered by the Appropriations Committee and put on in the Senate and passed.

It is here now, and the question, and the only question, is whether the men who kept the faith in those trying times, who lived up to their contracts, shall now be made whole or whether the reward shall go to the contractors who did not keep the faith but who laid down on the job, and who thereby cost the Government an increase of from 50 to 120 per cent. If this appropriation is allowed, it will amount to an increase of 35 per cent. Gentlemen, I insist that there never was a more just claim presented to this House, and I hope very much that the motion which I have made will prevail.

Mr. BEE. Then, as I understand the gentleman from Mississippi, these men stood up like men——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEE. And fulfilled their contracts and did not lay down on the job?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. And the question is whether they shall receive the reward of the faithful, or shall it go to the contractors who laid down on the job.

Mr. COLLIER. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will.

Mr. COLLIER. If these contractors had laid down on the job and the work had been given out under new contracts, how much more would it have cost the Government?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Anywhere from 50 to 120 per cent more. In my district there are levees, in the construction of which the Government did not participate, where we voluntarily raised the price of the contractors 120 per cent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I can add but very little to what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has said about this matter. He has made a splendid presentation of the case. Having only five minutes, I want to talk to you hurriedly about two phases of the matter.

In June, 1919, the Senate passed a resolution asking that the War Department investigate this matter and determine the amount and the causes of the loss sustained by these contractors. In response to that resolution the War Department put auditors on the books, made a complete and thorough investigation of the matter, and reported the very sums that are contained in these items in the bill. Now, some gentlemen have argued these matters ought not to be considered on appropriation bills because of the fact that they do not have the opportunity to give careful consideration to such matters. I want to say this, that these items have been considered and, no doubt, carefully considered; because, first, the matters went to the Committee on Claims of the Senate; they took the report of the Secretary of War; they considered the matter, and reported the bill unanimously from that committee. The matter was then considered in the Senate and passed there. Then it came to the Committee on Claims of the House, and it was considered there. A unanimous report came from that committee. Then the matter was presented to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. It was considered there, and then later considered by the Senate itself, and placed as amendments on this deficiency bill. So this matter has been considered by two committees of the Senate; it has been considered by the Senate itself twice; it has been considered by one committee of the House, and favorable action had on each occasion. So five times the matter has been presented. And I want to say that the other day when this deficiency bill was before the Senate the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the careful guardian of the Treasury of the United States, rose and said that this matter was subject to the point of order, but that he would not make the point, but would allow it to go into the appropriation bill. And it did go in without any objection and without anybody making the point. Why? Because it had been carefully considered by the Committee on Claims; it had been before the Senate at one time; it had been carefully considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and there was no doubt in the mind of Senator SMOOT or any other gentleman, I imagine, as to the merits of the matter.

Now, gentlemen, the question is just this: Shall these men who stuck to the job, who performed their duties, who were unwilling to lay down on their contracts, be forced into bankruptcy simply because it is suggested that we should have more time to consider the matter? Gentlemen, the only honest thing to do, if this is a meritorious claim, the only honest and just thing to do if it is due, is to pay these men now. It is not right that they shall be allowed to become bankrupt simply because they, as many others refused to do, carried on their work and performed their contract.

Just another word. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] referred to the fact that these men were threatened; that they were told if they left Muscle Shoals and the nitrate plant and other governmental activities they would be arrested. Gentlemen, according to the proof in this case, two of the contractors were actually arrested when they endeavored to go back to their work. Remember, they were under contract with the Government. The Government is the party that refused to allow them to complete their contract in time, and it put them to this great loss. I submit it is unfair and unjust not to require the Government, which is the sole cause of the loss, to pay these claims. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen have talked a good deal about the man who stood up during the war. Every one of these contractors had a bond, and they had to stand up or do just as every other contractor does—pay the damages.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. All the contractors had bonds.

Mr. GOOD. Of course they did. All of the contractors on the Mississippi River laid down except these, and the Government, realizing that they could not recover, has not proceeded against one of them on his bond.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are hundreds and thousands of claims that will appear just the minute we commence to announce this kind of a policy. I am unwilling that three or four contractors in Mississippi or Tennessee shall go to their Senators and have a special bill put in for them, without taking care of all the contractors and everybody who suffered loss when their contracts were entered into after we engaged in the war. We have taken care of the contractors whose contracts were entered into before we engaged in the war. These contracts were all made in the light of war conditions. The war was on. The contractors knew what would be expected of them. I say to you that if you put on these favored claims, worked up by contractors and lawyers, what are you going to do with the thousands of contractors throughout the United States who suffered a loss under war conditions? Now, I tell you what we ought to do. If this is a just claim, it can just as well afford to wait until we bring in a general law that will take care of all contractors who suffered under like conditions. Here is no place for it, on an appropriation bill. Let it be considered, and if it is a meritorious claim let it stand or fall on its merits.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House further insist on its disagreement, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] makes the preferential motion that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 57.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order there is no quorum present. Evidently no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nays 143, answered "present" 2, not voting 105, as follows:

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD. I voted "nay." I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 42: Page 24, after line 20, insert: "Payment to H. B. Blanks: To pay H. B. Blanks, levee contractor, the sum of $123,569.03, of which $40,720.95 is for the use and benefit of his subcontractors, Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. & Co., and $82,848.08 is for the use and benefit of the estate of his subcontractor, George F. Ramsey, being the aggregate losses incurred by said subcontractors in the carrying out of certain contracts referred to in a Senate resolution of June 19, 1919, under which the Secretary of War was directed to report the amount of losses incurred by the contractors upon contract mentioned in said resolution: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, before paying said sums, shall require evidence satisfactory to him that said contracts have been completed, and that there are no other subcontractors who claim loss for work in connection therewith."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is similar to the one we have just voted upon. That amendment is one which the Secretary of War said would put a premium on the neglect and inefficiency of contractors. It places a premium on extravagance. Quoting his words, he says:

Unless the Congress is prepared to grant relief to all on equitable terms, involving in all probability great appropriations from the Treasury, these acts should not be favorably considered.

There is not a word on the statute books, not a word anywhere, authorizing the payment of these claims. The vote we have just taken is not on the merits of these claims. It is not on the merits of this class of claims, which the Secretary of War said would place a premium on the neglect of duty of contractors, but it is a tribute to the genial companionship, the wonderful ability of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. [Applause.] That is what you voted for; and when you open the doors of the Treasury to the genial companionship of a Member of the House or the Senate you are doing a dangerous thing.

I recognize the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] as one of the ablest Members of this House; but I did not know until we had the last vote that he held in the hollow of his hand the vote of practically every Member on that side of the House and many on this side. I did not look for any degree of economy from that side of the House on these matters, but to this side of the House, that went to the polls in November and said they were going to vote for economy, I did look for some degree of economy, but I have failed to find it. [Applause.] Yet by this vote you have taken out of the Treasury without warrant of law $204,000. You have placed a premium on the waste and extravagance of contractors. You have opened the doors of the Treasury wide to all classes of claims. Here is another opportunity for you to duplicate that performance, if you so desire.

I move to insist on the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment 42.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I have a preferential motion. I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment 42. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. GOOD. I can not refuse the gentleman time, even though I am compelled to refuse to vote the money. I give the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the very frank and accurate manner in which he has delineated my characteristics. [Laughter.] Much as I appreciate the compliment, I know that the gentleman has overstated them.

This amendment stands exactly on all fours with the one we have just adopted. Amendments 41, 42, and 43 are alike in principle, and in my humble judgment no more righteous proposition has been before this House during this session or will come before it than is embraced in these three amendments. There is nothing partisan about it. I am sorry that we did not get all the votes on that side or on this side, but we did not get them all on either side. There is nothing partisan in this. There is nothing partisan in the membership of this firm. As a matter of fact, it is bipartisan, if that has anything to do with it.

I understood we were to return to normalcy, and normalcy in this Government means to pay its honest debts. [Applause.] The unwarranted interference of Government agents well-nigh wrecked this firm of contractors, the only firm on the river that were willing to stand up and take the gaff, relying upon the good faith of the Government to make them whole when the facts were all adduced.

This matter comes before the House in absolute order. It has been before the Committee on Claims and a full hearing had, and that committee, composed, as all the committees in this House are composed, of a majority from this side, unanimously recommended its payment. It was put on the calendar. It went before a committee in the Senate, and another hearing was had, and that committee there unanimously recommended that it be paid. It is put on now as an amendment which is now in order. Nobody denies that it is a righteous claim. Nobody denies that the Government ought to reimburse these men. The only claim is that this is not the proper day of the week. I hope, gentlemen, that you will not be led off by partisan considerations but that you will give to these men absolute and equal justice. They went through with their contracts. They are the only contractors on the river who did. The men who laid down cost the Government 50 to 120 per cent when the contracts were relet, but these men, who kept the faith, who lived up to the terms of their contracts, who trusted to the good faith of Congress to reimburse them—they are the ones to be penalized. These men are not millionaires, neither are they paupers; but, gentlemen, when you take from any firm $343,000 you well-nigh wreck them. I do not believe this House will do it. I ask you to vote again for this amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for a vote.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield time for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman half a minute.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. With reference to the proviso that the Secretary of the Treasury, before paying this sum, shall require evidence satisfactory to him that the contracts have been completed——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They have actually been completed.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the legislation says that the Congress does not know whether they have been completed or not, but wants the Secretary of the Treasury to determine whether they have been completed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They have been completed. There is no doubt about it, absolutely no question about it, and the contractors have received their pay and been discharged a year ago.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If, as a matter of fact, these contracts have not been completed, then these sums are not correct, are they?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Now, you leave it to the Secretary of the Treasury to determine whether the contracts have been completed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Oh, no. The contracts have been completed, and the Secretary has paid them and the men have gone hence.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But that is in the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It does not make any difference.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the war damaged everybody except a few people who had cost-plus contracts. [Laughter.] I take it that almost everyone suffered. Take it in my State of Illinois, for example, and in my own county, before the war we were building good roads under contract. When the war broke out there were hundreds of contracts made on the cost of labor and material for their construction before the war began. Many men were ruined by that and lost their property. They were good citizens. Everywhere everybody suffered. Thousands and hundreds of thousands were made bankrupt on account of the war because labor was impossible to get. If you could get it at all it was at an enhanced price. You could not get supplies, you could not get transportation, you could not get gravel and you could not get cement. Now, I think that all that class of people are entitled to relief if we are going to enter a campaign of relieving everybody who suffered. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Members of the House ought to realize something about the settlement of war contracts under the so-called Dent Act and other acts. Settlement of claims were made under those laws, and up to the present time $24,000,000 has been recovered back as overpayment. When settlements have been made under those laws the money can be recovered back for overpayment. If the Republican House desires to settle claims in this way and overpayments are made, none of that money can be recovered. I say without hesitancy that in the settlement of these claims of $3,000,000,000 under the Dent Act and other acts there will be $50,000,000 recovered back. If you lay down the rule to-day that we are to settle matters by legislation, not one dollar will ever come back to the Government. It seems to me that it is time the Republican Members of this House remember their campaign promises. To-day when the Government is recovering back money that has been overpaid on these claims, if amendments of this kind are voted for without consideration you will close the door for the incoming administration to recover back any money wrongfully paid.

It seems strange that you are willing to pay the money on these claims when it is not possible to give the soldier adjusted compensation and take care of some of the men who perhaps suffered in other ways than by losing their money in the war. Until these claims are settled I do not believe these matters should be settled by legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How have the $24,000,000 been recovered, by suit?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. By threatened suit.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And the money actually paid back after the Government settled with them?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Actually paid back to the Government. That will come in in some of the reports of the war investigating committee, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Those reports will be so long they will never be read.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOOD) there were 107 ayes and 101 noes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 153, nays 146, answered "present" 3, not voting 126, as follows:

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my vote of "no" on account of a pair that I have with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. POU, and vote "present."

The name of Mr. SNELL was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present, listening, when his name should have been called?

Mr. COLE. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired and wish to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The name of Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 43: Page 25, line 11, insert the following:

"Payment to the estate of George F. Ramsey: To pay the sum of $15,561.23 to the estate of George F. Ramsey, levee contractor, of which $13,602.27 is for the estate of George F. Ramsey and $1,958.96 is for the use and benefit of W. H. Dennison, his subcontractor, being the aggregate losses incurred by said George F. Ramsey and his subcontractors in the carrying out of certain contracts referred to in a Senate resolution of June 19, 1919, under which the Secretary of War was directed to report the amount of losses incurred by the contractors upon contracts mentioned in said resolution: Provided, That before paying said sums the Secretary of the Treasury shall require satisfactory evidence that said contract has been completed and that there are no other subcontractors who claim loss for work in connection with said contract."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is similar to amendments numbered 41 and 42. It is on all fours with those two amendments, the only difference being that this amendment carries the amount of $15,561.23, while Senate No. 41 carries $204,307.98, and No. 43, $123,569.03. The Secretary of War, whom we have criticized on this side as being very extravagant, said that to vote for this class of claims was to put a premium upon extravagance. Those are his exact words. The House having twice voted to-day to put a premium upon extravagance and to open the doors of the Treasury wide for all kinds of unjust and extravagant claims, I assume that it will desire to vote for this amendment. However, to keep the record true, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 43.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement from Senate amendment No. 43, and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi, to recede and concur.

The question was taken.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. BEGG (while the House was dividing). Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 152, nays 147, answered "present" 5, not voting 124, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. UPSHAW. I wanted to; I was right here all the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will explain, as he often has with reference to allowing gentlemen to vote on a roll call. It is on the theory that his name, by a mistake of the Clerk, was not called, and if the gentleman was present and listening and his name was not called, he had no opportunity to vote.

Mr. UPSHAW. I was listening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must, of course, always leave it to the conscience of the gentleman answering. Was he present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. UPSHAW. I did not hear it called; I would have answered if I had; but I was present and listening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must leave it to the gentleman. Was he present and listening when his name was called? If he answers he was, he can vote.

Mr. UPSHAW. Yes; and I desire to vote "aye."

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I have a pair with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The name of Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts was called, and he answered "present."

Mr. REBER. Mr. Speaker, I came in after my name was called, and I would like to answer "present."

The SPEAKER. It is not allowed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the vote on Senate amendment No. 40 be reconsidered and that the amendment be placed before the House for further consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to reconsider the vote by which the House disagreed to Senate amendment No. 40. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is, that the House further insist on its disagreement, and the gentleman from Indiana offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I offer the same preferential motion that I originally offered for that purpose—that the House concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOOD of Indiana moves to recede, and concur in Senate amendment No. 40 with an amendment as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment, before the word "Senate," insert the following: "House Documents Nos. 986 and 997."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say one word. The appropriation carried by this amendment is upon the adjusted contracts made by the War Department under the law passed by this body for that purpose upon contracts which were entered into before the war and the loss occurred by reason of the Government's action in reference to labor and in reference to the increased cost of material. The amount involved in this item has been agreed upon and adjusted by the War Department. It is the actual losses as provided in the recommendation of the War Department. There is no one who knows anything about the facts in this case in reference to this item but knows that there is no dispute whatever in reference to the adjustment of these claims. The only objection that could be possibly made is in reference to the fact that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill, and in view of the action of this House with reference to other claims just had and feeling that we misunderstood this item when it was up for consideration before, I am asking for this reconsideration, and I trust to be sustained by an affirmative vote upon this amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, after line 5, insert:

For the payment to the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co. as recommended in the report made to Congress under date of February 11, 1916, by the commission appointed under the act of June 24, 1914, and approved by the governor of the Panama Canal (H. Doc. No. 906, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), $714,007.39, said amount to be chargeable as part of the construction of the Panama Canal and reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the bonds authorized by section 8 of the act approved June 28, 1902, and section 39 of the tariff act approved August 5, 1909.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this claim involves $714,007.39. It is at present on the House Calendar, H. R. 6092, and also in Senate bill 1353, which has already passed the Senate, on April 20, 1920. I understand in previous Congresses it has passed the House once or twice, and at other times it has passed the Senate. It is an item growing out of the construction of the gates on the Panama Canal. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] has some detailed information, and I yield him five minutes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I did not understand whether or not the gentleman made any motion.

Mr. GOOD. I have not yet. I am going to move to insist.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the preferential motion that the House recede from its disagreement with Senate amendment 45, and concur with the same.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this claim deals with the cap sheaf of the greatest engineering triumph of the world's history—the lock gates of the Panama Canal.

The fulfillment of the dream of Columbus—a western passage to the Far East—was made possible by the Panama Canal, and the Panama Canal depends upon the gates made by the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co.

The building of these gates was an epoch in construction. The contract was the largest ever let to a steel fabricator in the world.

It must be remembered that it was a launching out into unknown seas, and no living man knew exactly the nature of the task when bids were asked for the construction of the lock gates at Panama.

The whole colossal task was approached by America in the spirit of that great leader, Theodore Roosevelt, whose name will be forever linked with the uniting of the Atlantic and Pacific at Panama.

He visited Panama to personally inspect the Isthmus and the plans, and on his return sent to Congress the first illustrated message in American history. In that message he said:

After most careful consideration we have decided to let out most of the work by contract, if we can come to satisfactory terms with the contractors. The whole work is of a kind suited to the peculiar genius of our people; and our people have developed the type of contractor best fitted to grapple with it. It is, of course, much better to do the work in large part by contract than to do it all by the Government, provided it is possible, on the one hand, to secure to the contractor a sufficient remuneration to make it worth while for responsible contractors of the best kind to undertake the work; and provided, on the other hand, it can be done on terms which will not give an excessive profit to the contractors at the expense of the Government. The plan we have promulgated is tentative; doubtless it will have to be changed in some respects before we can come to a satisfactory agreement with responsible contractors—perhaps even after the bids have been received.

Mr. Speaker, that far-sighted President expressed the situation exactly. It was the great feat of the ages. It was expected that shipbuilders would respond, but not a single shipbuilder in America would attempt it. The McClintic Marshall Co., one of the great bridge builders in the country, had the nerve and the faith to say that the task was not impossible and that they would undertake it.

The contract was awarded to them and they began the mighty undertaking. There were difficulties, unexpected and unforeseen. The drawings were not approved by the Government, in some cases, for 21 months after they were submitted. There was an inspection which caused much waste in material and which sent the cost up $4 a ton higher than the average cost of the year before or the year after in the same plants. The gates were ordered absolutely water-tight, although that was not in the specifications. Then when the material was being assembled at Panama, the Canal Commission had not provided storage space.

The bolt holes ordered at the shops were enlarged, a task which in itself cost the contractors more than half a million dollars. The plates had to be ground to meet the action of the sun. Bitumastic enamel had to be used instead of bitumastic solution. There were numberless changes and complications.

But the contractors went ahead. Gen. Goethals testified before the Claims Committee that he feared many times the contractors would give up in desperation. They did not give up; they had the determination to succeed, which is the "genius of our people." They lost $2,802,765, but they finished the task ahead of time and left, according to Gen. Goethals and the commission, "the finest lock gates in all the world."

Then they laid the facts before Congress. In 1914, Congress passed an act, Public 119, requiring that a commission of Government employees, acting under Gen. Goethals, should determine what sum was in justice, fairness, and equity, owing to the McClintic-Marshall Co.

That commission was composed of Admiral Rousseau, engineer of terminal construction at Panama; H. A. Smith, auditor; and B. F. Harrah, examiner of claims for the Panama Canal Commission.

They spent months in investigating the claims. They went to Panama and to Pittsburgh. They saw every page of cost records from beginning to end.

Then this commission of Government employees, earnestly seeking the Government's interests, came back to Congress with the official declaration that $714,007.39 is in justice, fairness, and equity due to this company.

I introduced the claim bill and it went to the Claims Committee and was given the most painstaking attention. Gen. Goethals and the members of the commission were called and questioned. They insisted that every cent of the amount provided was in all justice due the contractors, and Gen. Goethals repeatedly declared that he would have approved a larger amount in view of the facts of the case.

The bill was favorably reported by the Claims Committee by a unanimous vote and was placed on the calendar. That was a year ago, and there has not been a time since then that it could be considered on its merits. Always it was subject to unanimous consent, where the whim of a single Member could prevent consideration.

Now, it comes back to us on the deficiency appropriation bill, having been placed there by the Senate. If you say that it is bad practice to put such provisions on an appropriation bill, I will agree with you, but I will also say that it is still worse practice to prevent consideration of such meritorious claims as this in regular order.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I recall very distinctly that this bill had very long and careful consideration before the Committee on Claims when I was a member, and I think that it is a just and fair claim and ought to be paid.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman, and will say that never has there been a claim more thoroughly considered than this one. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which in all justice should be paid, and I ask the House to vote with me to concur in the Senate amendment. It will be a square deal to the men who proved the impossibility of impossibility and who won new laurels for America in the successful accomplishment of the mightiest feat of engineering ever undertaken by mortal men.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in carrying claims on a deficiency bill, and if it had not been for what the House has already done to-day, I would not appear on the floor now.

I have had longer service in connection with the work about the Panama Canal than any other Member of the House. I served on the committee that had the legislative jurisdiction over the Panama Canal, and I have visited the canal half a dozen times or more. I had a great many conversations about the operation of the locks, as well as other portions of the canal, with officials in charge during the process of construction. These lock gates, which, I believe, this firm constructed, constitute the finest piece of machinery to be found in the world on a large scale.

There were a great many problems connected with the construction of the canal, and there was a great deal of doubt as to the form of the gates, and whether they could construct gates of the size that had to be constructed which would operate successfully. I talked frequently with the engineer in charge of that work on the canal, and although I knew nothing about such things I went over the plans in reference to the gates a number of times with him. There were many changes made, necessarily; many things were required which they had not originally thought of; and we knew while this work was being constructed that the contractors were being requested to go ahead with this work on the statement that the authorities of the Panama Canal would recommend that they be paid extra, more than the contract price.

They went ahead. They did this work. There was nobody else in the country who was willing to attempt it. These men did the work, and they did it perfectly. You who go down to the canal during the vacation will find that these monstrous gates are so finely geared that you could not begin to stick the point of a needle between the bottom of the gate and the floor sill below it.

It was recommended by the canal authorities that we pay the claim. Congress did not want to act without knowledge, and we provided by law that the canal authorities should investigate the claim and report to Congress. I do not know how carefully they did it, of course, but I apprehend they did it carefully, as they did all the work on the canal, and when they made their report they asked Congress to appropriate this sum of money as in justice due to these people because they had done work at the solicitation of the officials of the canal which they were not required to do. The work is there. It is a monument to America; the finest piece of work in the world, done by the only people in the country who were willing to attempt it. The changes and other things were made at the request of our officials there. They scaled down the claim from two or three millions to three-quarters of a million. I believe we ought to pay it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] moves that the House recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a division. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BUTLER. Get a division first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and nineteen Members; a quorum is present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks for the yeas and nays. As many as favor the taking of the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Three gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the motion is carried. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 52: Page 30, line 6, insert:

"So much as may be necessary of that part of the $46,000,000 appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 for medical and hospital services of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance allotted to the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is hereby made available for the erection of 19 sets of double quarters at not exceeding $10,000 each for the medical staff at the various branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, so much has been said in the public press in criticism of Congress with regard to what we have done in providing hospitals for our disabled soldiers of the recent war that I think it might be well to state a few facts in regard to what Congress has done and what the situation is regarding hospitals.

I do not know why a young man about 26 years old, down in the Treasury Department, an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, does not send men who are wounded or sick to the hospitals and stop whining about there not being hospital facilities. Certain it is that he is asking for large appropriations to build new hospitals, when he absolutely refuses to send men who were disabled in this war to the best hospitals that money can build.

Out of an appropriation of $46,000,000 there was allotted to the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes almost $5,000,000 to reconstruct these hospitals. They took the Johnson City hospital in Tennessee, for example, from which the old soldiers of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War were taken and sent to other hospitals. That hospital was rebuilt at an expense of more than $1,000,000 as a tuberculosis sanitarium, and it was rebuilt under the plans and specifications provided by the National Tuberculosis Society of America. That society says it is the finest tuberculosis hospital in all the world. It has a total bed capacity of 1,000, and yet to this very hour they have sent to that hospital only 223 tubercular patients from the Bureau of War Risk, and because they have not sent more of them there they have allowed the Vocational Board to use part of that hospital, and that board have 303 trainers there at present.

Take the soldiers' home at Marion, Ind. That was remodeled at an expense of $1,000,000, and it is the most modern sanitarium for the treatment of nerve diseases. That hospital to-day is partly completed. More than 500 beds are ready for use; and if there are boys discharged from this war who need hospital treatment along those lines I am sorry that our Treasury Department has not sent them there, because to this day it has sent to that hospital only 71 patients, while the hospital has a bed capacity to-day of 500 patients, and will have a bed capacity by the 1st of July of 1,000 patients, and it is the most modern sanitarium in all the world for the treatment of nerve cases.

To-day we find that we have 24,560 war-risk patients in these hospitals. There are to-day in the hospitals under the control of the Government vacant beds aggregating 3,858. That is the report right up to this day. Yet men will stand before committees or go before newspaper reporters and make the statement that Congress has not provided beds—statements that are absolutely unfounded in fact. We have appropriated so much money that the departments that have had the appropriations to spend to provide for additional hospitalization have not been able to spend the money. The criticism is absolutely unjust and unfounded so far as Congress is concerned, and lies at the door of the executive department that does not send these men to these hospitals if there are men who need hospital treatment. I hope that the statement will go forth that we have provided the hospitals, that we have them now, that hospital beds are vacant numbering about 4,000, so that the young men of the country who have been discharged and are suffering from some disease entitling them to treatment may have that treatment to which they are justly entitled, and they should have the best.

The amendment passed by the Senate placed a limitation on the amount that could be expended for building some double quarters for the medical staff at some of these soldiers' homes, where we have provided for hospitals aggregating about 5,000 beds for the soldiers of this war. The Senate amendment limited the amount to $10,000 for a double quarters or $5,000 for each single quarters. The board of managers say they can not build quarters at that price. We are asking to recede and concur with an amendment striking out the number—19—and striking out the limitation, so that the medical quarters may be provided for in such numbers as may be necessary to provide proper quarters for the medical staff to take care of the men.

I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 52 and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"So much as may be necessary of that part of the sum of $46,000,000 appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 for medical and hospital services of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance allotted to the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is made available for the erection of quarters for the medical staff at the various branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers."

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; the gentleman has heard propositions of that kind before. We made the appropriation so that the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home received an allotment of $4,000,000 without limitation to improve the hospitals, and I think they have expended it wisely and economically.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We gave to one department $46,000,000 last year, and they allotted $5,000,000 to the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes, and even with that nobody dreamed at that time of allotting them $5,000,000 to build officers' quarters.

Mr. GOOD. I will say that the estimate of Gen. Wood was that these quarters were to be built of hollow tile and could not be built at the present price, quarters of seven rooms, for less than $18,000 for double quarters or $9,000 for a house.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no dispute about that. I have no knowledge of what it costs, and have no objection to that. The gentleman from Iowa must know from observation that while it may not always be abused, usually an authority of this sort is abused. I do not know that the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes would abuse it, but if you grant authority of this sort everyone connected with every one of these homes will see the chance to get a new building to live in.

Mr. GOOD. No; it is only to build medical quarters. The fund is only available to build additional facilities for officers, and is not to be expended at homes where they are not making provisions for soldiers of the late war.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is for the National Homes for Volunteer Soldiers. It makes no difference what the fund is for, this authorizes the construction of medical quarters without limit, and I hope the gentlemen will change it in conference.

Mr. GOOD. Gen. Wood says that it is going to cost $9,000 per single quarter, but if you put that limit in he could not get it done for less, and they are going to let the construction of these quarters by competitive bids, by advertising, and I think that if they are going to do that the gentleman will agree that we ought not to hold up these thousands of beds in the hospitals and not send men there because we did not have quarters for the doctors to live there.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman knows that the Army in erection of officers' quarters got in the habit, when there was no limitation, to build palaces for officers of the Army. We had to resort in the end to a limitation on the cost of the quarters for officers. All men are alike when they have the power to do the same thing.

Mr. GOOD. They have not done it at the soldiers' homes, and they will not do it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They have not had the opportunity to do it; they have not had the money; they have not had the authority; but now you propose to give them money unlimited, authority unlimited, and unlimited quarters for medical officers. If I were one of the medical officers, I would want a fine house to live in at the Government expense.

Mr. GOOD. They will not get it from the board of managers.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 82 ayes and 15 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read Senate amendment 53, as follows:

Provided, That the sum of $1,700,000 is hereby transferred from the appropriation "Provisions, Navy" to the appropriation "Maintenance, supplies and accounts," for the fiscal year 1921, and the limitation specified for pay of classified employees under the latter appropriation is correspondingly increased.

That deficiencies under appropriations for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year 1920 and prior years shall be charged to a naval supply account fund, which is hereby established and to which shall be transferred the unexpended balances of annual appropriations for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal years 1919 and 1920, after two years from the expiration of the fiscal year for which made, and, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to the value of all stores in the naval supply account on March 31, 1921, preliminary adjustments on account of stores to be made upon the certificate of the Secretary of the Navy that stores to the value certified are on hand; and from and after said date the naval supply account fund shall be charged with the cost of all stores procured for and credited with the value of all issues or sales made from the naval supply account, necessary adjustments being made on account of outstanding contracts or orders.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in amendment 53 with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 53 and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of lines 1 to 7, inclusive, of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"Provided, That the limitation specified in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 on expenditures for pay of chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the supply and accounting departments of the navy yards and naval stations and disbursing offices for the fiscal year 1921, under 'Maintenance, supplies and accounts,' is increased by $750,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the House bill carried a provision increasing the limit for clerical services by $750,000. That item went out on the point of order. The limit fixed by law for this year was $3,500,000. The Senate provision not only increased the limit that can be used for clerical purposes by $1,750,000 but it appropriates $1,750,000. The amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk cuts out the appropriation for clerk hire and reduces the limit from $1,750,000 to $750,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What does the gentleman's motion do with the rest of the Senate amendment?

Mr. GOOD. We do not touch that. The rest of the Senate amendment takes care of two things. It takes care of the book deficit in the general account of advances in the Navy Department, and it takes care also in part of the Navy supply account. The rest of the Senate amendment has to do only with the general account of advances for the years 1919 and 1920. In the Navy Department it is different from all other departments, except now in the War Department. When we make an appropriation for a great many different objects in the Navy bill, there is set up in the Treasury Department a single account, and that is the general account of advances. This is not the case in other appropriations. All checks drawn on any naval appropriation go to the Treasury Department, to the general account of advances.

What happened in 1919 and 1920 was this: While the appropriation bills carried enough money, those intrusted with the expenditure of the money did not expend it as provided by Congress. In some items they expended more than Congress appropriated, but it was paid out of the general account of advances in the Treasury Department. In other appropriations in the Navy Department there was a surplus, and this amendment simply permits them to use such surplus to wipe out the deficiency. It is a bookkeeping transaction, and that only. It carries no money out of the Treasury Department, but permits them to adjust their accounts.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Navy Department has a very large amount of materials on hand.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think I saw as much as two blocks of porcelain bathtubs, refrigerators, and things of that sort. Naturally those items are to the credit of the Navy Department?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In what way do they charge themselves up to the fiscal year 1921 or 1922, for instance, for materials of that kind used in construction?

Mr. GOOD. That is carried in the Navy supply account. This amendment deals with that in conjunction with amendment No. 56, and those two amendments treated together were intended to bring about this condition of affairs. A great many of those supplies for the Navy were purchased at a high price. When it comes to issuing them they issue them to various bureaus under reduced appropriations at the old price at which they were purchased. The position of the Navy Department, as provided for by this amendment and amendment No. 56, if adopted, will permit that department to issue the stores and supplies not at what they are carried for on the books but at the current price at which they could purchase them. It means, of course, a loss, and it provides for charging off that excess of cost.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. As a matter of bookkeeping?

Mr. GOOD. As a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The first provision of this second paragraph provides for taking care of the deficiencies amounting to $114,000,000, does it not?

Mr. GOOD. In a way it does take care of deficiencies for $114,000,000, but it takes care of them only out of the surplus.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. In the total appropriation for the Navy Department there was enough appropriated for all purposes, and the gentleman, I think, is well aware of the actual situation, that if the department had spent the money just as it was appropriated there would be no booking deficiency at all.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. But the Secretary, after he got the money, found that by spending more for one bureau or service than he had appropriation for could pay for it out of the general account of advances and still not exceed his appropriation. So, in the sense that the appropriation bill for the Navy Department for the years 1919 and 1920 fell short, the gentleman can see there is no actual deficiency.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. There really is no deficiency.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It just means that on July 1 the $114,000,000 will be covered into the Treasury unless we enact this legislation. Is not that true?

Mr. GOOD. No; they would simply have overdrawn some accounts, that is all; but they would have had the money.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Two years after the appropriation was made.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; for those two years they had a surplus of $127,000,000, and they had only $114,000,000 of booking deficit. So if we subtract the deficit from the surplus they still would have a surplus, as the gentleman can see, of $13,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. On July 1, $127,000,000 was covered into the Treasury.

Mr. GOOD. Well, it can not be covered into the Treasury, because it has already been paid out. Everybody has had his money. It would leave the Secretary of the Navy in a rather embarrassing position.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. With $127,000,000——

Mr. GOOD. This could better be called, instead of a deficit, an item to relieve the Secretary of the Navy from embarrassment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But if you do not enact this legislation you would be embarrassed to the extent of appropriating $114,000,000?

Mr. GOOD. No; the Secretary of the Navy would be embarrassed.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman tell the House, because from reading the section nobody would know, in reference to the language beginning on line 18, "and, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to the value of all stores in the naval supply account on March 31, 1921." How much money does that make available?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I do not know.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is it not a fact that it makes $280,000,000 available?

Mr. GOOD. The value of the stores at the price at which they were purchased is about $280,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. It does not mean the expenditure of any money out of the Treasury, but it is simply bookkeeping altogether.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. PADGETT. It is adjusting the account of the advances and naval supplies account on account of the purchase of more material in one line and less in another. It does not take any money out of the Treasury.

Mr. GOOD. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur in the amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 6, insert: "For the sum of $5,000,000 of the appropriation 'Maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps,' for the fiscal year 1919 is hereby reappropriated and made available for."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. Does the word "for" precede the amendment?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Now, the House provision carried $5,000,000 direct appropriation. The Senate amendment is simply a reappropriation of balances that are found in this appropriation unexpended, and therefore will cut down the balance I referred to a minute ago of $127,000,000 by $5,000,000.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendment strikes out the word "for"?

Mr. GOOD. I understand the word "for" does not exist in the original appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 12, strike out "$5,000,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 17, insert:
"The prices at which material is to be expended from the naval supply account shall be fixed by the Paymaster General of the Navy, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, and materials purchased during the war shall be issued at reduced prices in all cases appropriate, such differences in values and losses to be charged to the respective funds; and hereafter no charges on this account shall be made to naval appropriations."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this item goes to the last paragraph of amendment 53. It is the same language that was reported by the Naval Affairs Committee in a revised form. The amendments were prepared in the Navy Department and have been submitted to and are, I understand, in exact accord with the desire of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 41, line 18, insert: "To pay the Pawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma in full and final settlement for the purchase by the United States of 169,368.02 acres of surplus land belonging to said Pawnee Tribe, under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., pp. 612–644), the sum of $312,811.27, with interest thereon from September 3, 1920, at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, as provided in said act of Congress of March 3, 1893, and in pursuance of the findings of the Court of Claims of December 6, 1920, as set forth in Senate Document No. 311, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, $312,811.27."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to insist on the disagreement to Senate amendment No. 62.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GOOD. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a preferential motion to recede and concur in this amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman is going to do that he should also include in his amendment to strike out the figures in line 4, page 42, "$312,811.27," for the same amount appears in line 24, on page 41.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the preferential motion to recede and concur.

Mr. GOOD. Let it be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOWARD moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment 62 with an amendment as follows: In the last line of the amendment, after the words "third session," strike out the figures "$312,811.27."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I was trying to get the ear of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman. He was on his feet.

Mr. GOOD. The situation is as follows in regard to this item: The committee could not agree to it. It is the amount, I assume, that Congress is going to appropriate. The whole matter has by Congress been referred to the Court of Claims, and that court has made its findings. It was not empowered to render a judgment; and on December 6, 1920, the findings of the court were made, and I quote the last paragraph from the findings of the court:

Neither this principal sum of $132,916.71 nor any interest thereon has been paid. A claim is thus presented under the terms of said agreement the payment of which rests in the judgment of Congress. The jurisdiction of the Court of Claims does not extend to claims growing out of treaties with Indians.

Now, Mr. Speaker, more than half of this claim is for interest. I do not know anything about the claim. I feel about this claim just as I felt about these other claims the House has agreed to—that they all ought to go in the regular course to the Committee on Claims. That is the sensible thing to do.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. HOWARD. Just for a brief history of this claim. In 1893 the United States Government bought from the Pawnee Indians their surplus lands in the Pawnee Reservation in Oklahoma. The Government sold these surplus lands to homesteaders for $2.50 an acre, having agreed to pay the Pawnees $1.25 per acre for them. The Government at that time paid the Pawnees $80,000. The balance has never been paid. The Government agreed to pay $1.25 per acre for the land and sold it for $2.50. Up to now only a part payment has been made to the Pawnees. The homesteaders have lived on it for 27 years. Homes have been built on this surplus land. The white homesteaders have become wealthy in farming it and producing oil therefrom, and yet the Indian has never been paid his full total according to that agreement, and this fact has been established in the Court of Claims.

Now, the situation with the Indians is this, gentlemen: Some of them need at this time to educate their children. Others need this money to build up the farms that they are trying to make. Some of them are living in comparative poverty. There are included in those who will benefit by this, gentlemen of the House, 11 old scouts who fought for this country as scouts in the northwestern Indian wars back in the sixties and seventies. This money is due them, and the financial depression in this country at this time makes it more necessary that we pay them. The Court of Claims has decided, after a thorough search, that the Indians are entitled to this money. Interest is accumulating against the United States Government, and more than half of the claim as now presented is in interest that has accumulated. I hope the House will see fit to pay this money to these Indians at this time, when they need it, the claim being a just one.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield two minutes to me?

Mr. GOOD. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to say that there is no more just claim than this one. When it was submitted to Congress a few years ago it was referred to the Court of Claims, and at that time, as this record shows, the Assistant Attorney General appeared for the Government on one side and the attorneys for the Indians appeared upon the other side, and a judgment was rendered for the amount that is put in this amendment. The reason why interest is allowed upon it is because when they agreed to pay the Indians the $1.25 an acre for this land and paid them $80,000 upon account the Government agreed to place the rest of the money in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians, to bear 5 per cent interest. And that is the reason the court allowed the interest on it. There is no more just claim in this bill than this one. As I have already stated, it has been referred to the court and the court has made the finding that this amount is due, after both sides were represented, the Government by the Assistant Attorney General and the Indians by their attorneys. This is a tardy act of justice to an Indian tribe and the amendment should be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold until the Chair can lay before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is simply to make provision for the clerk to Senator HEFLIN from the time he was elected to the Senate to the time he was sworn in. I move to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is to take care of the contract of the Senate reporters, Messrs. Murphy and Shuey. I believe there is a contract with them for about $25,000. It is a Senate item. I move to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote whereby amendment No. 37 was disagreed to, and direct the conferees to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WALSH. How did the gentleman vote?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I voted "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was there a roll call on that?

Mr. MACGREGOR. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to make the motion.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The motion to reconsider is all that the gentleman can make.

Mr. GOOD. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the door. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, the point of no quorum was made pending the vote on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 15441) and asks unanimous consent that the statement of the House conferees be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15441) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The committtee of conference have not agreed upon the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, and 20.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15441) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

MARTIN B. MADDEN,
CHAS. F. OGDEN,
E. E. HOLLAND,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, there are some amendments in disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 3: Page 3, line 13, after the figures "$42,300,000," insert:

"Provided, That hereafter, whenever the office of a postmaster becomes vacant through death, resignation, or removal, the Postmaster General shall designate some person to act as postmaster until a regular appointment can be made by the President in case the office is in the first, second, or third class, and by the Postmaster General when the office is in the fourth class; and the Postmaster General shall notify the Auditor for the Post Office Department of the change. The postmaster so appointed shall be responsible under his bond for the safekeeping of the public property pertaining to the post office and the performance of the duties of his office until a regular postmaster has been duly appointed and qualified and has taken possession of the office. Whenever a vacancy occurs from any cause the appointment of the regular postmaster shall be made without unnecessary delay."

Mr. MADDEN. I move to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 7: Page 5, after the figures "$70,000" insert:

"Provided, That hereafter the marine letter carriers assigned to the Detroit River postal service shall be paid $300 per annum in excess of the highest grade for carriers in the City Delivery Service, and that those in the service on July 1, 1920, who have continued in the service be paid such salary from July 1, 1920."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur. I wish to say in this connection that when the transportation act was passed adjusting the compensation of postal employees the Post Office and Post Roads Committee omitted inadvertently the marine letter carriers, who had always theretofore been paid $300 a year more than the other carriers. This is to rectify the mistake that was made.

Mr. STEENERSON. If the gentleman will permit me, as a matter of fact, was it not the commission that made the mistake instead of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; this is simply to rectify the error.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That that portion of the act reclassifying salaries of postmasters and postal employees, approved June 5, 1920, which provides "that hereafter substitute clerks in first and second class post offices and substitute letter carriers in the City Delivery Service when appointed regular clerks or carriers shall have credit for actual time served on a basis of 1 year for each 306 days of 8 hours served as substitute, and appointed to the grade to which such clerk or carrier would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade 1" shall be amended by adding the following: Provided, That clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and substitute clerks and substitute carriers who served in the military or naval service during the World War and have not reached the maximum grade of salary shall receive credit for all time served in the military or naval service on the basis of one day's credit of eight hours in the Postal Service for each day served in the military or naval service and be promoted to the grade to which such clerk or carrier or substitute clerk or substitute carrier would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade 1.

The provisions herein shall be effective as of date of passage of the original act of June 5, 1920.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is to provide in effect for substitutes in the Postal Service who were drafted or volunteered for the service in the World War that they shall be given credit for eight hours for each day on their military service, so that when they return from the military service if they reenter the Postal Service they will take the place they would have taken had they continued in the Postal Service.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN, Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is not the situation just this? Here are two men who were in the Postal Service when they entered the Army; one lives in New York and the other in Chicago. They served two years; they come back and the Chicago clerk receives a permanent appointment and gets credit for the two years' advancement, which would mean $200. The New York clerk continues as a substitute and does not get permanent appointment, and he does not get anything under a proposition of this kind.

Mr. MADDEN. The substitute would continue to be a substitute until appointed to a regular position, and would then take his place in the grade to which his war service entitled him.

Mr. BLACK. He would get nothing until he received an appointment.

Mr. MADDEN. If he went into the military service, under the provisions of this bill, he would get what I have stated. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the amendment reported first.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 9: Mr. MADDEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 9 and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out all of the matter inserted by said amendment, commencing with the word "provided," in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That postal employees and substitute postal employees who served in the military, marine, or naval service of the United States during the World War and have not reached the maximum grade of salary shall receive credit for all time served in the military, marine, or naval service on the basis of one day's credit of eight hours in the Postal Service for each day served in the military, marine, or naval service, and be promoted to the grade to which such postal employee or substitute postal employee would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade 1. The provisions herein shall be effective as of date of passage of the original act of June 5, 1920."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota demands a division on the motion to recede and concur. The question is first on receding.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEENERSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STEENERSON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of Senate amendment No. 9, and in lieu of the matter so stricken out insert the following:

"That that portion of the act reclassifying salaries of postmasters and postal employees, approved June 5, 1920, which provides 'that hereafter substitute clerks in first and second class post offices and substitute letter carriers in the City Delivery Service when appointed regular clerks or carriers shall have credit for actual time served on a basis of 1 year for each 306 days of 8 hours served as substitute, and appointed to the grade to which such clerk or carrier would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade 1,' shall be amended by adding the following: 'Provided, That clerks and carriers in the intermediate or automatic grades who were appointed to regular positions before June 5, 1920, and are receiving less than the maximum grade of salary shall receive credit for all time served as substitute on a basis of 1 year for each 306 days of 8 hours served as substitute and be promoted to the grade to which such clerk or carrier would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade 1, effective as of July 1, 1921: Provided further, That clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and substitute clerks and substitute carriers who served in the military or naval services during the World War and have not reached the maximum grade of salary shall receive credit for all time served in the military or naval services on the basis of 1 day's credit of 8 hours in the Postal Service for each day served in the military or naval service and be promoted to the grade to which such clerk or carrier or substitute clerk or substitute carrier would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade 1, effective as of June 5, 1920.'"

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order and want to make a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] offered an amendment to the Senate amendment, which is now pending before the House. Does not that have to be disposed of?

Mr. STEENERSON. I offer this as a substitute.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But this is not a substitute for this amendment. We have already receded. The gentleman proposes to strike out all of the amendment and insert other language. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has proposed to strike out part of the Senate amendment and insert other language in the way of perfecting the Senate amendment. What I want to get at is, if the motion is in order, how this amendment will be voted upon?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would think that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois would take preference, being a perfecting amendment, whereas the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is a substitute.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is not a substitute to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is a substitute for the whole Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is a substitute for the entire Senate amendment, but is not a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STEENERSON. I have another draft here to offer as an amendment to the gentleman's motion.

The SPEAKER. Does it make any difference to the gentleman from Minnesota which comes first?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think so. I would like to explain the effect of it. It does not change his motion, so far as that goes.

The SPEAKER. The only difference the Chair sees that it makes is as to which amendment shall be voted on first.

Mr. STEENERSON. The amendment I propose to offer is the amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois by inserting additional language.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota will correct the Chair if he is wrong in his statement of the situation. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] offered an amendment to the Senate amendment which perfected that amendment. The Chair understands the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota to strike out the whole of the Senate amendment and to offer an entire substitute.

Mr. STEENERSON. That was my substitute which I offered, but I now offer an amendment that adds simply to the Senate language—additional language.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman means to withdraw his first amendment and wishes to offer another?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. Is this an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; an amendment to the gentleman's motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "provided," on page 6, line 14, insert as follows—

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The reference should be to the Senate amendment and not to this point.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is line 12, according to the way the Clerk read it.

The SPEAKER. Line 12 of the House print?

Mr. STEENERSON. Line 12 of the Senate amendment, after the word "provided."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is referring to the engrossed copy?

Mr. STEENERSON. I have not been favored with a copy of the engrossed copy.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "provided" on page 6, line 14, insert the following: "That clerks and carriers in intermediate or automatic grades who were appointed to regular positions before June 5, 1920, and are receiving less than the maximum rate of salary, shall receive credit for all time served as substitutes on a basis of one year for each 306 days of eight hours served as a substitute, and be promoted to the grade to which such clerk or carrier would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade one: Provided further."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment is an amendment in the third degree and is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it is in the third degree.

Mr. BLACK. We are considering a Senate amendment. The gentleman from Illinois moves to concur with an amendment and then the gentleman from Minnesota moves to amend that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendment is not considered as an amendment here.

Mr. BLACK. In that case I presume the amendment would be in order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, would I not be entitled in my own right to the floor?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the time.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment gives the substitute clerks and carriers credit for the time they served in the war and makes that retroactive to June 5, 1920, so that if a substitute has been appointed clerk or carrier he will, if this passes, if he served two years in the war, be given two years' promotion—that is, $200, or $100 a year. The substitutes that did not go into the war who were appointed clerks before the passage of the classification act of June 5, 1920, get no credit for the substitute service. They may have served five years as substitutes, but having been appointed before the act was passed, as construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury, they get no credit, but those who were appointed since the act was passed, who were substitutes before that appointment, are given credit, so we have in many of the large cities like Chicago, Cincinnati, New York, and Washington substitute carriers appointed since June 5 who have been given credit for two or three years' substitute service, whereas alongside of them are men working who served five or six years as substitutes but do not get the credit. They are appointed simply to grade 1, so the junior employee gets more than the senior employee.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Not that it is of very much importance, but I think as a matter of interest I would like to know what the expense of this proposition would be?

Mr. STEENERSON. If this is made effective as of July 1, 1921, which I had intended to put in, it would cost about $700,000.

Mr. WALSH. We will not have much money left in the Treasury after the performance of this afternoon.

Mr. STEENERSON. If it is retroactive, like the soldiers' provisions, it will cost a million and a half at least, and with the provision that the Senate has put on, according to the department's figures to me, it will cost $2,000,000 additional the first year, and perhaps a little more the next year. For that reason I think we are laboring under a difficulty if we do not include these clerks and carriers now. There will be an unjust discrimination. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had this matter under consideration, but they have not determined what to do. We have the bill under consideration and intend to report, as I understand, to give them all credit for substitute service. It should not be retroactive but simply operative for the next fiscal year. That is the intention, as I understand, of a majority of the committee. But here comes the Senate under this new rule to legislate this in favor of the military service, and they leave this off for clerks and carriers, who will labor under this discrimination I have described. My amendment leaves the provision of the Senate as to soldiers unchanged.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. Will this correct the situation in regard to letter carriers who have served as substitutes for five, six, or seven years and under the reorganization part of the Post Office have been discriminated against in such a way that those who have come in the service some three or four years after they have are now drawing more salary?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is exactly what this was intended to remedy and will remedy.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. Then I think we ought to remedy it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think if we give credit to these substitutes that have military service we certainly ought to give it to these substitutes who actually served.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman give me a few more minutes?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. I would like to say to the gentleman that I know in Cincinnati we have a great many carriers who have served for six or seven years as substitutes and they came in as regular carriers, and other substitutes later under the reorganization bill have passed by them, drawing $300 or $400 more.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is not the worst of it.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. This does not affect that case at all; it only affects military cases.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. As I understand, the amendment takes in those carriers.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; my amendment does. The worst discrimination is, here is a substitute who might be on the substitute list at New York or Boston, where there are probably five or six hundred on the list, and would never be called, yet if he went to the war this gives him constructive time. Unless we give the substitutes who actually performed service also credit they can justly claim they have been unfairly discriminated against. My amendment equalizes the matter and deals fairly with all of them, and if we do not do it now, why, we will have to do it at some other time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, if the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is adopted, this will be the effect of it: It will advance every substitute in the Postal Service, regardless of whether he served in the war or not. And my proposition is to provide credit for the period men who were substitutes in the Postal Service served in the war. That is all.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is not this the exact provision that was in the bill that is known as the Madden bill that was before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. MADDEN. It is not pending now. And I want to say to the Members of the House that the men who served as substitutes during the war and did not get to the war are not entitled to any consideration in this bill. This is a proposition to do something for the men who offered their lives for their country. If they had served in the Postal Service during the period of the war instead of in the Army, it is altogether likely they would have been advanced. Now, all I am asking is to advance them to the place they would have advanced to if they had not gone into the war.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not true that a substitute who, we will say, did not go to the war but remained at home, if he was reached by appointment, was appointed? Is it not true that a man who went into the war was correspondingly advanced on the substitute list by reason of the law we passed during the war that provided that he should not lose any grade or advancement on account of his services?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know what happened to the substitutes after they came back from the war. It may be that some of them did not come back into the service. If they did not, this will not apply; if they did, they ought to be carried for the period of the war service. That is all we are seeking. If you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota you advance every man who has been a substitute over a period, whether it be one, two, three, four, or five years, regardless of whether he had military service or not, and nobody is seeking to do that. And I say it does not cost any such sum to do the thing we propose as it would cost to do the thing the gentleman from Minnesota proposes, and it does not cost any such sum to do the thing we propose as the gentleman from Minnesota says it does. Nobody knows how many men will be affected by this. It can not be more than three or four thousand at the outside. If it should happen by any chance that it should be three or four thousand, and they should be advanced to the first grade instead of being substitutes, they would probably get $100 apiece on account of the advancement.

Mr. STEENERSON. I have the testimony of the First Assistant Postmaster General——

Mr. MADDEN. He wrote to me and said over his own signature that he could not tell how many men will be affected, but whatever number may be affected, whether great or small, if it is right it is the thing to do. Is it right? I ask you gentlemen whether it is right or wrong to provide credits for the period a man served in the war and offered his life to his country, while the other men were sitting idly by living in luxury? Are we going to provide for those men or provide for the men that did not serve?

Mr. STEENERSON. This amendment includes soldiers as well as others.

Mr. MADDEN. I know.

Mr. STEENERSON. What are you talking about, then?

Mr. MADDEN. The others ought not to be included.

Mr. PURNELL. Just for information, I would like to know how, for the purpose of carrying this out, you will determine what is military and naval service?

Mr. MADDEN. The record of the man in the service. His honorable discharge will determine that.

Mr. PURNELL. I have a particular case in mind that causes me to ask the question. Suppose a man were in the Y. M. C. A. service?

Mr. MADDEN. That is not military service.

Mr. PURNELL. But handling the mail for the military service?

Mr. MADDEN. He was in the mail service, then. He was not in the Army. He was simply doing Postal Service work on the front, or wherever he might have been sent. Many postal men were sent to France who were not in the Army.

Mr. PURNELL. You would not regard him as in the military service?

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

Mr. BLACK. I want five minutes in which to oppose both amendments.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Both of these amendments ought to be discussed, and unless you have 10 minutes you can not make much headway. You can not discuss these two amendments adequately in five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I will yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I think both of these amendments should fail of adoption, and both of them illustrate the disadvantages of the rule we adopted at the last session of Congress. What are we doing? For the last two or three days these committees have been bringing in here item after item of legislation which has been put on these appropriation bills in the Senate, and we have less opportunity to consider them now and discuss them than we would have had if they had been riders on the appropriation bills when they were first considered by the House. How many Members in the House now understand the effect of these two amendments? They will, if adopted, cost several hundred thousand dollars, at least, and very probably much more than that.

Mr. STEENERSON. Two millions.

Mr. BLACK. Now, in order that we may understand the effect of these amendments, let us take into consideration these facts: We have in the Postal Service, as to letter carriers and postal clerks, a classified service and a substitute list. In the classified service there are five grades—grades 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. A man is not in the Postal Service as a permanent employee until he is given a permanent appointment to one of these grades. He is appointed first to grade 1. He serves in that grade a year, and then automatically he goes to grade 2 and serves in that grade for one year and then automatically goes to grade 3, and the next year into grade 4, and the next year into grade 5. But when he is a substitute he works only when he may be needed in the service. That may be six days in a year. It may be 52 days. It may be 100 days. It might be that he would work 306 days. Of course, in such instances as the last one cited he would probably get a permanent appointment.

Now, what is the situation? In July, 1920, we reclassified the postal employees and raised their salaries to what I think was a generous and liberal figure, considering present conditions, making the salary of grade 1, $1,400; that of grade 2, $1,500; grade 3, $1,600; grade 4, $1,700; and grade 5, $1,800, and providing for automatic promotions until the top grade was reached. We also provided in that bill that hereafter substitute clerks in first and second class post offices and substitute carriers in City Delivery Service, when appointed as regular clerks and carriers, shall have credit for actual time served in the substitute service.

The intention of the committee—and I believe that every member of the committee will say that such was the intention of the committee—was that when a substitute was appointed after the passage of the law, he should be given credit for the substitute service he had put in after the date of the enactment of the law, but not before. But the comptroller, in construing that provision of the law, held that "hereafter" meant that the Post Office Department should go back and take up the substitute's whole record and figure out how much time he had served as a substitute since he originally entered the service and give him credit for it.

Now, the result of this ruling was that when an appointment was made from the substitute list after July 1, 1920, the Postmaster General was required to take up his record, and if it was found that he had served as much as one year of 306 days a year the substitute so appointed went into grade 2 instead of going into grade 1, and if he had served two years as a substitute went into grade 3. Now, the complaint is—and here we are getting down to the point—that clerks who were appointed before July 1, 1920, did not get this retroactive credit for substitute service, and therefore a man may have been appointed on or before July 1, 1920, and still be in grade 1, nothwithstanding he may have seen considerable substitute service. But the answer to this whole proposition is: It was not the intention of the committee to make the original provision in the reclassification law retroactive in its effect, and because that has been done should we go and do the illogical thing and broaden it out still further, merely because it was given an interpretation not intended to be done in the one case? I do not think we ought to do it. If we adopted a consistent course, we ought to amend the law and make it conform to the original intent of Congress, which was that substitute service which was eligible for credit was that which was to be performed after the passage of the law. That was the intent of Congress. Why not perform it? Is the taxpayer ever going to receive any consideration in making up these appropriation bills?

Now, then, as to Mr. MADDEN's amendment, what is the effect? We all remember that some time during the war we put a provision on one of the appropriation bills to the effect that any postal employee who served in the military service should receive credit for such time and be advanced automatically just as if he had remained at home doing his regular work in the Postal Service. That provision of law was as follows:

Employees, including substitute employees, of the Postal Service who have entered the military or naval service of the United States or who shall hereafter enter it during the existence of the present war, shall, when honorably discharged from such service, be reassigned to their duties in the Postal Service at the salary to which they would have been automatically promoted had they remained in the Postal Service, provided they are physically and mentally qualified to perform the duties of such positions.

What was the effect of that? The effect of that was that if a young man was a substitute when he went into the Army and was reached for regular appointment he was appointed, and if he remained in the service he would not lose his automatic promotion, and when he got back home he was appointed into grade 2 or 3, as the case might be.

Anything wrong about that? No; it was just what Congress intended. They were not permanent employees until regularly reached for appointment. Until appointed they were advanced on the substitute list under the regular rules. If a man was No. 100, for instance, at the Boston, Mass., office, he went right on up notwithstanding he was in the military service, and maybe he was up to No. 1 on the substitute list when he went out of the Army, or, indeed, he may have already received a permanent appointment.

Mr. STEENERSON. But, then, he would have been appointed clerk or carrier and would have been given leave of absence because of military service.

Mr. BLACK. I am glad the gentleman stated that leave of absence was given in such cases. If a substitute was reached for appointment he was not discriminated against because of being in the military service. But what will the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] do? It will go very far beyond what Congress intended to do in the original provision. It will say to the man who was a substitute in the Postal Service, "We will say by law that every day that you serve in the military service shall for the purpose of promotion count as one day as a permanent employee in the Postal Service."

Now, what does that amount to? It will amount to this: If a man served two years in the military service and gets a permanent appointment, then, instead of going into grade 1 at $1,400 he will go into grade 3 at $1,600. Now, that is a bonus, and you can not call it anything else, a bonus of $200 to a man because he happened to be a substitute in the Postal Service. I have already shown that under existing law his advancement on the regular substitute list and subsequent appointment, if his name was reached, was not in the least interfered with by his military service. If we are going to pay a bonus to the soldiers, that is a question of general policy, and if adopted should apply to all ex-service men alike. If we are going to give a bonus for military service—and that will certainly be the effect of the Madden amendment—then the farmer boys in my district, the boys who work on the railroads, the boys who work in the stores, the boys who work in the banks are entitled to the $200 bonus as much as the substitutes in the Postal Service. Now, who can tell how much actual service a substitute would have rendered if he had not gone to the Army? It must be remembered that he was not an employee serving 306 days in the year. He was only serving as a substitute when called upon. He might have served 2 days. He might have served 50 days. He might not have served any, and I submit that we ought not to adopt either one of these amendments, because I do not believe the House would adopt them if we had time to consider them fully and measure their full effect. I may say that the Post Office Committee has not recommended either one of these propositions. They are legislative provisions and should not be adopted in this hurried and ill-considered manner on this appropriation bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield a minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to present a conference report.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD presented the conference report on the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The House will proceed with the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] amending the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEENERSON) there were—ayes 8, noes 76.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were—ayes 60, noes 21.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 10: Page 7, line 3, insert the following:
"For village delivery service in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class, and in communities adjacent to cities having city delivery, $1,500,000."

Mr. MADDEN. This is simply a transposition from its place in the bill when it was reported and passed by the House. It carries the same amount. I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 12:
"Provided, That the Postmaster General may, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, authorize the delivery of special delivery matter without obtaining a receipt therefor: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as excusing the delivery of special delivery matter by messenger in the first instance.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and agree to the Senate amendment with the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all the matter inserted in the said amendment commencing with the colon, in line 5, down to and including the word "instance," in line 7.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What is left? The amendment strikes out all of the Senate amendment, even the colon.

Mr. MADDEN. This is amendment No. 12, and it strikes out the proviso.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is all there is, is the proviso.

Mr. MADDEN. No; this is the second proviso.

Mr. WALSH. What is the idea of striking out the proviso? It says that it shall not be considered an excuse for delivery.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not mean anything, because they do make the delivery just the same.

Mr. WALSH. It gives him the authority to issue regulations?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the first proviso he can make regulations. He may make regulations that the special delivery matter shall be delivered by the ordinary carrier when he makes his rounds, and I would not be surprised if he did make such regulations.

Mr. MADDEN. This does not mean a thing.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. For instance, in the parcel post law we gave without knowing it authority to the Postmaster General to change the law—make an absolute change of law. Nobody knew it was in the law, but it was. The Postmaster General discovered it and has entirely revised the law in reference to the parcel post. I am not criticizing that.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, if there is no objection, I will withdraw the amendment and move to concur.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to know where the original proposition came from in amendment 12?

Mr. MADDEN. It came from the Senate. Of course, it was carried in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Without the second proviso.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. And the gentleman's proposition is that we leave it as it is in the existing law?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand, the current law carries the same provision and this is a proposition to make it permanent.

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. WINGO. For another year.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I have been keeping track of this special delivery. I have one once a week, and in the majority of cases the special delivery does not give any quicker service than the regular service. They do not deliver it. A letter written Saturday evening for the purpose of reaching its destination Sunday morning is not delivered until 3 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not mean that it gets a quicker transit, but after it reaches the post office at the point of destination it is delivered quicker.

Mr. WINGO. That is the trouble; it lies in the post office down in Virginia——

Mr. MADDEN. I am very sorry.

Mr. WINGO. All day Sunday, and goes out with the regular delivery to a suburb of a Virginia city on Monday.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the law they do not sort incoming mail in the post offices on Sunday, and they ought not to.

Mr. WINGO. They ought not to take pay for special delivery.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman ought to send his letter out on Friday night.

Mr. WINGO. But I can not send it out under the circumstances.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is a misfortune.

Mr. WINGO. If they do not propose to give special delivery, they ought not to accept money for it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Has the committee heard any testimony about the operation of this provision put in last year?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman does not know whether it has been a success or whether it is open to the criticism of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. MADDEN. No. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion to recede and concur with an amendment, and move to recede and concur.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that. I have not had a single special-delivery letter delivered to my apartment in the last 12 months. They stick it in the box downstairs.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, we will have a better mail service after the 4th of March.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 11.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important subject and I think we ought to have a quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, does not this call come as an automatic call on the motion?

The SPEAKER. It does. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 32, answered "present" 1, not voting 236, as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Sam A. Kozer, secretary of state of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of House joint memorial No. 9 with the original thereof adopted by the senate and house of representatives of the thirty-first legislative assembly of the State of Oregon and filed in the office of the secretary of state February 15, 1921, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 17th day of February, A. D. 1921.

[SEAL.]

SAM A. KOZER,
Secretary of State.

House joint memorial 9.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas that heretofore by act of June 9, 1916, the Congress of the United States revested the titles to what is commonly known as the Oregon and California land grant in the Federal Government, which said grant consisted of over 2,000,000 acres of lands in the State of Oregon; and

Whereas by the terms of said revestment act provision was made for the sale and disposition of said granted lands by the Federal Government, the proceeds from the sales of said lands to be divided between the Federal Government and the State of Oregon, the common school fund of the State of Oregon to receive 25 per cent of the proceeds from the sale of said lands, and the counties within which the revested lands are situate to receive 25 per cent of the proceeds from the sale of said lands, to be apportioned to the common schools, the roads and highways and the port districts within said respective counties; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States by act of May 31, 1918, authorized and empowered the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to exchange lands formerly embraced within the grant to the Oregon-California Railroad Co., and revested in the United States by said act of June 9, 1916, for privately owned lands of approximately equal value, within or contiguous to the former limits of the said Oregon and California grant; and

Whereas it has come to the attention of this body that numerous and divers applications have been filed with the Secretary of the Interior by individuals and corporations, proposing to exchange lands held in private ownership for lands title to which was revested in the Federal Government by said act of June 9, 1916, and that said applications are now pending before the Department of the Interior; and

Whereas some of such individuals and corporations are endeavoring by said exchange of lands to procure from the Federal Government the best and most available timbered lands within said grant, tendering in exchange therefor widely scattered, inaccessible, and unmarketable holdings, and these exchanges have been tentatively recommended by the local Government agent; and

Whereas by the terms of said original revestment act it is provided that the timber on said grant lands shall be sold for cash by the Secretary of the Interior to citizens of the United States, associations of such citizens and corporations, at such times and in such quantities, and under such plan of public competitive bidding as, in his judgment, may produce the best results. And, provided further, that said timber shall be sold as rapidly as reasonable prices can be secured therefor in a normal market; and

Whereas much of those grant lands sought to be procured by some of said citizens and corporations, under their applications now pending, are situate along railroads and water routes of transportation, are now in demand by sawmills, now operating, and others wanting to operate, but are withheld from sale by the Department of the Interior pending consideration of applications for exchanges; and

Whereas it is apparent that the Government has made no careful and detailed cruise of the timber standing upon the revested lands as a basis for determining the respective values of the lands sought in said applications for exchange. The records of the Commissioner of the General Land Office show a report from a Government cruiser as to one particular body of timber in Lane County, to the effect that the estimated quantity of timber on the revested lands in this section as originally cruised by the Government is not to exceed 60 per cent of the true amount of timber standing upon said lands; and

Whereas a large quantity of these revested lands has been set aside and withdrawn from sale and settlement, under the provisions of said revestment act, as power-site lands without due or any consideration as to their real value for water-power purposes; that the said lands so withdrawn are mostly timbered lands lying along the streams, and much of which is good agricultural land after the timber has been removed; that the withdrawal from sale and settlement of these power-site lands are materially obstructing the development of our streams for logging purposes and the logging of privately owned timber situate on said streams; and

Whereas the State of Oregon and its political subdivisions have a pecuniary interest in the disposition and sale of the timber on said revested lands, and is entitled under said revestment act to one-half of the sales price of said lands, after payment of certain charges provided for in said act; and

Whereas a conservative estimate of the merchantable timber on said lands is approximately 40,000,000,000 feet, board measure, which at present market value, is reasonably worth $60,000,000; and

Whereas on November 12, 1918, the Coos Bay Lumber Co. and the Pillsbury Lumber Co. filed applications for exchange under said act of Congress of May 31, 1918; and

Whereas it appears that the lands of the United States involved in such exchange have been fully and finally cruised, and that the application of the Coos Bay Lumber Co. was on July 8, 1920, approved for advertisement for objection thereto, and that such advertisement was had and concluded on November 25, 1920, and no objection thereto filed, and that part of the land to be surrendered by the Coos Bay Lumber Co. is to be acquired by the Pillsbury Lumber Co., and it appearing that delay in said application might embarrass refinancing efforts of the Coos Bay Lumber Co.; and

Whereas these two applications were not in contemplation at the time of the introduction of this memorial: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Oregon, do respectfully and urgently protest against the granting of all of the other applications now pending before the Department of the Interior for the exchange of privately owned lands, for lands belonging to the Federal Government, as now recommended; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States take some action by amendment of the exchange act of May 31, 1918, H. R. 5489, to protect the interest of the State of Oregon, so as to provide that in all applications for exchange under said act the State of Oregon shall be a party to such exchange and given the right to ratify or disapprove all exchanges; and be it

Resolved further, That action be taken by the Congress of the United States to confer jurisdiction upon the Department of the Interior with full power and authority over the lands heretofore withdrawn and set apart as water-power reserves, to the end that the Secretary of the Interior may cause a reclassification of said lands to be made and to eliminate from said water-power withdrawals all lands more valuable for the timber standing thereon or for agricultural purposes than for water-power sites; and further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby directed, to forward a copy of this joint memorial, under the certificate and seal of his office, to the Vice President of the United States, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Oregon; and further, that a copy be sent to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, requesting from said officers that further action on such other applications for exchange now pending be withheld pending further investigation by the Department of the Interior, and by the State of Oregon, and pending action by Congress on this memorial.

Adopted by the senate February 14, 1921.

(Signed) ROY W. RITNER,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house January 26, 1921.

(Signed) LOUIS E. BEAN,
Speaker of the House.

Indorsed: House joint memorial No. 9. Introduced by Mr. Bean.

W. F. DRAGER,
Chief Clerk.

Filed February 15, 1921.

SAM A. KOZER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. McNARY presented duplicate copy of the preceding joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, favoring a reclassification of lands heretofore withdrawn and set apart as water-power reserves, so as to eliminate from water-power withdrawals all lands more valuable for the timber and for agricultural purposes than for water-power purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Whereas many physicians and dentists entered the military service for the period of the war: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to pass at the earliest possible moment some legislation which shall direct the United States Bureau of Public Health and the United States Commissioner of Pensions to appoint physicians and dentists who are now in the military service or who have been honorably discharged from the same as public-health officers and on board of examining surgeons in preference to those who are not in the military or naval service, or have not so served and been honorably discharged; be it further

Whereas the merchant marine act of 1920 directs that the United States Shipping Board shall sell the vessels belonging to the Government to establish a privately owned permanent American merchant marine; and

Whereas it is claimed that the said Shipping Board intends allocating ships to various corporations which now have a large number of ships under their control and upon a basis which would prove unprofitable to the Government of the United States and to the Shipping Board; and

Whereas, on February 21, 1921, a hearing was held by said board for the reallocation of certain ships to corporations which own and control a large number of ships, and it is claimed that said corporations, appearing at said hearing, stated that they expected to operate these ships which they sought to have reallocated to them at a loss to the Government; and

Whereas it is claimed that at said hearing and prior thereto application had been made by other persons and corporations for the purchase of a portion of said ships, the reallocation of which was sought at said hearing on said February 21, 1921, and that by the terms submitted by said proposed purchasers it is claimed the Government and the board would have received a considerable sum of money immediately and that the sale of such ships would have been profitable to the Government and advantageous to the public; and

Whereas it is alleged that the sales division of said Shipping Board recommended that a sale of at least five of said vessels so sought to be reallocated be made to said parties who sought to purchase the same; and

Whereas said board has not acted upon said application to purchase, and it is claimed that said board intends to reallocate said ships upon a basis which will result in loss to the Shipping Board and to the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That said Shipping Board be directed to immediately inform the Senate of all matters hereinbefore set forth, and particularly to inform the Senate whether it intends to reallocate said ships, and whether in so doing the Government and the Shipping Board would sustain an annual loss; and also whether a bona fide offer for the purchase of said ships, or any of them, was submitted, the reason for its rejection, if said offer has been rejected, and also what the policy of the Shipping Board is with respect to the sale of ships when suitable offers are made by private corporations or individuals to purchase the same.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 17, 1921.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House:

In further reference to Senate resolution No. 416, requesting the Secretary of State "to obtain at once, through the consular or other representatives of the United States in foreign lands, accurate information as to the actual conditions and the needs and necessities of the women and children of various distressed nations, countries, or foreign dependencies and transmit the same to the Senate at the earliest possible moment," the undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate if the President approve thereof, additional information concerning this matter as contained in dispatches from the American minister at Belgrade and the American commissioner at Berlin, dated January 18 and January 26, respectively.

Respectfully submitted.

BAINBRIDGE COLBY.

Inclosures: Two as above.

(Dispatch No. 695.)

BELGRADE, January 18, 1921.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington.

SIR: Your circular telegram of January 7, 7 p. m., received through the embassy in Paris on the 9th instant, instructed me to forward by dispatch a statement regarding conditions in the country where I am stationed, regarding what legitimate calls might be made on charity, regarding the efficiency and economy of the administration in this country of funds being received from the United States, and regarding the steps being taken by the Government and local organizations to meet the need. On the 15th instant I received a further telegram from the embassy at Paris stating that the department now instructed me to telegraph immediately a summary of the relief situation and of the needs. On the 17th instant I accordingly telegraphed the department (telegram No. 5, of January 17, 3 p. m.) giving such a summary. I now avail of the courier to send to the department a somewhat fuller report on these subjects. I confine my reply to Serbia and Montenegro, as I understand the department's inquiry to refer to these portions of Jugoslavia which have especially suffered during the war and as American relief has practically been limited to them.

CONDITIONS IN SERBIA.

It is generally admitted that conditions in Serbia have greatly improved during the two years which have followed the armistice. As usually happens in a primitive agricultural country, two years of good crops have to a great extent set the country on its feet again. There is still shortage and want in certain remote districts, but this is owing to the still extremely defective means of transportation. There is no longer any need for general relief measures.

While this is undoubtedly so, the frightful destruction of human life and of national wealth occasioned by the war has left burdens which have by no means been provided for and which require greater resources to provide for them, except after a number of years, than Serbia possesses. These burdens are of many kinds, but the most important and urgent of them are (1) the care of the war orphans; (2) the repair and equipment of schools; and (3) the repair, equipment, and maintenance of hospitals and dispensaries.

CONDITIONS IN MONTENEGRO.

My information as to conditions in Montenegro is less detailed, but, judging from a number of reports, conditions there show the need for the same specific relief as in Serbia, and also a general shortage of food. Montenegro has never been self-supporting, and added to the usual shortage there is now a still greater one because of the poor crops of the last two years. The Jugo-Slav Government is, however, making efforts to supply this general food shortage and has already accomplished a good deal. Whether it will be able to supply Montenegro adequately is chiefly a question of administration and transportation, as ample supplies of foodstuffs exist in Jugoslavia.

WAR ORPHANS.

Official statistics of the Jugoslavia department of child welfare, which, although probably not very accurate, are the best obtainable, give the total number of war orphans in Serbia and Montenegro as 200,000, classified as follows:

Ninety-five thousand living with relatives.

Forty thousand living with families, the Government contributing to their support.

Ten thousand living in institutions either established by foreign relief missions or by Serbian private initiative; many of these institutions are now closing for want of funds.

Five thousand living in families who receive compensation for their support from the American Commission to Serbia of the Serbian Child Welfare Association of America.

Fifty thousand as yet wholly unprovided for, most of whom have been taken in by very poor peasants. These peasant families are generally too poor to support the children adequately. In most of them the children perform such tasks as they can for their living, thus being unable to attend a school, and live in extreme poverty and neglect.

I am, of course, unable to vouch for the accuracy of this classification, and some well-informed persons with whom I have talked consider that the estimate of 50,000 unprovided orphans is too high. Dr. R. R. Reeder, the director here of the Serbian Child Welfare Association, I understand, considers this classification to be fairly correct. The Jugo-Slav Government is now undertaking a more accurate census of the orphans, which will also give considerable detail regarding their condition. What in any case is certain is that there are many thousands of war orphans in extreme poverty and living in conditions very detrimental to their health and future usefulness.

SCHOOLS.

A very large number, probably practically all the schools of Serbia and Montenegro, suffered more or less during the war. A large number of the buildings were totally destroyed or seriously damaged and probably an equally large number were completely stripped of their furniture and equipment. During the last two years much has been done to repair and reequip these schools, but much still remains to be done. The preliminary survey recently made by the ministry of public instruction states that there are still 130 schools in Serbia entirely unequipped. This figure is probably too low and leaves out of account a considerable number of schools in Montenegro. The ministry of commerce and industry reports that there are 95 trade schools whose normal number of students is 3,805, whose work is wholly or partially stopped through lack of equipment. The ministry of agriculture reports that of the 14 agricultural schools in Serbia, several (number not given) are unable to resume work for want of equipment and repairs.

In this connection it should be remembered that even before the war schools in Serbia and Montenegro were far too few for the population and that the percentage of illiteracy was high.

HOSPITALS AND DISPENSARIES.

I have been unable to obtain figures as to the destruction of hospitals and dispensaries in Serbia and Montenegro during the war. Such destruction has, however, undoubtedly been great, and a large number have not yet been replaced in operating condition. A number of districts, containing many thousand inhabitants, are without a single hospital or dispensary. This situation, however, existed, though to a less extent, before the war, as Serbia was then also very short of hospitals and dispensaries. There is also a shortage of physicians, nurses, and medicines. Serbia had too few physicians before the war, and it is generally estimated that nearly one-half of them died or were killed during the war. Trained nurses were unknown in Serbia before the war, and even now there are practically no really trained Serbian nurses.

ADMINISTRATION OF FUNDS RECEIVED FROM THE UNITED STATES.

As stated in my telegram No. 5, my duties in Belgrade have made it impossible for me to see much of the actual administration and expenditure of the funds sent from the United States, the bulk of which are expended in central and southern Serbia and in Montenegro, where the needs are greatest. The American consuls at Belgrade and Zagreb, the only consuls in Jugoslavia, are similarly situated in this respect. Nevertheless, through conversations with members of charitable societies I have been able to follow their work to a considerable extent, and I have also had the advantage of numerous conversations with disinterested persons, both Americans and Serbs, concerning their activities. From these conversations I have gained the impression that present administration of the funds received from the United States is as a whole efficient and economical. The problem of conducting relief for orphans, schools, and hospitals on so large a scale and under such conditions as are found here is an extremely difficult one and one requiring experience, which was lacking at first, not only for foreigners but even for the Serbs themselves. Efforts have been made to determine the best methods for relief, and as a result of these and of the experience gained great improvements in efficiency have resulted.

As of probable interest in this connection, I may give here a brief statement regarding the activities of the various organizations working with funds received from the United States. These organizations are the following:

Serbian Child Welfare Association of America: This organization is now the largest private relief organization in Serbia. It began by establishing an orphanage, but has now given up the policy of placing orphans in institutions in favor of placing them in private families, who receive 50 dinars per child per month on condition that the children are sent to school. Children pensioned in families are registered through the regular Government child welfare committees, through which also the pensions are paid. The registration and payments are, however, supervised by the organization. The organization is also repairing and equipping schools wherever it is necessary, so that registered children can go to school. It is also establishing child-welfare centers for groups of from 300 to 500 children, which look after their health. Each center has two nurses—one for the dispensary or center and one for visiting—with two or three Serbian apprentices. Every four centers are grouped together into a unit, to each of which a physician and dentist are attached, who give one-fourth of their time to each center. In all its work the Child Welfare Association has adopted the principle of cooperating with the Government in such a way that eventually the association can gradually withdraw and leave its work wholly in Serbian control. The director of the association, Dr. R. R. Reeder, has created a committee, including representatives of the interested Government departments and leading Serbian health and social welfare organizations to advise him. Similar committees have been formed at all the centers to assist in their operation.

In addition the association is planning to reequip agricultural and trade schools and to found a training school for nurses.

American Women's Hospitals: Maintains a hospital of 40 beds and a children's hospital of 150 beds at Veles; another hospital of 50 beds at Prishtina, a further hospital of 40 beds at Prilep, and dispensaries at Prishtina, Podeavo, Gilane, and Ferisovic. Its director is Dr. Etta Gray.

Serbian Aid Fund: This society aids by small monthly grants some 2,400 children, including the children of officers, State officials, 400 children of the laboring class, and the children under 15 years of the priests who were killed during the war. The money is administered by the Serbian society, known as the Society of Serbian Sisters (Serpski Kola Sestra), which distributes the money through its local chapters or the local child-welfare committees of the Government. Its director is Mrs. Slavko Grouitch.

Serbian American Children's Orphanage: Maintains an orphanage for 150 children at Kamenitza, near Novi Sad. Its president is Mr. John W. Frothingham, and its director in Serbia is Mrs. Darinka Grouitch.

American Red Cross: Maintains an orphanage for 150 children at Podgoritza and an orphanage and trade school for 150 children at Danilograd, both in Montenegro. The representative of the Red Cross in Montenegro, Capt. Whiting, is cooperating with the child-welfare department of the Government in feeding 1,100 children in Montenegro, 5,000 in Herzegovina, and 7,000 in Dalmatia.

Methodist Episcopal Church, European relief: Is contributing about $500 a month to the support of the Anglo-Serb Hospital in Belgrade and has just purchased for £2,000 a building at Novi Sad for a trade school. The director for Europe is Bishop Edgar Blake, and the representative in Serbia is the Rev. Samuel W. Irwin.

The American Friends' Service Committee, Serbian section: Is maintaining a hospital of 40 beds at Petsch, has constructed about 110 small houses for refugees, and has given exhibitions in model farming. The representative in Serbia is Mr. Andrew R. Pearson. It is understood that this mission will soon retire.

The Serbian and American Hospital and Relief Association: The object of this society is said to be to assist the children of the district of Stepojevatz, to extend agricultural work there, and establish a hospital and carry on instruction along public-health lines. The president of the association is the Rev. C. S. Knight. Field directors are Mr. and Mrs. Paul Yeftich. The latter is in the United States, and the former is at Stepojevatz. I am informed that this association has as yet not begun any activities.

STEPS BEING TAKEN BY THE GOVERNMENT OR LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS.

As stated in my telegram, the Jugo-Slav Government is probably doing about as much as it can at present to meet the needs. It should be borne in mind that the Government is confronted with many great problems of State organization resulting from the union of Serbia with the Jugo-Slav Provinces of the former Austro-Hungarian monarchy and with Montenegro. At the same time great calls upon its resources are being made for many other than charitable or educational objects. Among these may be mentioned the railroads and roads which will have practically to be rebuilt. Moreover, all these problems and expenses are thrust upon the Government at a time when the country has only partly recovered from the physical and financial exhaustion of seven years of war.

The Government has created for the especial care of children the child welfare department, which is attached to the ministry of social reform. Very considerable grants of funds have been made to this department, which has committees and inspectors throughout Serbia. This department, as above stated, is, among other matters, already contributing to the support of 40,000 orphans. American workers with whom I have talked speak favorably of the zeal of many members of the child welfare department. The Government has also repaired and reequipped a large number of schools, hospitals, and dispensaries.

Regarding private local organizations, there are a number of such which have grown up all over the country. Among them may be mentioned the Serbian Red Cross, which, however, confines itself to military relief, and the Society of Serbian Sisters, above mentioned, which already existed before the war and which has now largely extended its work. Such private organizations are, however, comparatively new in Serbia and without much experience. They have gained considerable experience from associating with foreign missions, but they can not as yet be said to fill the same large place in charity work as similar societies do in less primitive countries.

Undoubtedly in time the Government would be able fully to care for all the needs of the country without foreign help, but these needs are so extensive that in its present situation the Government would not be able to care for them fully at present or for some time to come. Meanwhile, unless outside help is given, irreparable injury will result to thousands of children and sick persons whose needs are immediate and can not be postponed. The means at the Government's disposal are undoubtedly increasing, and it should accordingly also be able to increase its activity for relief progressively and in the near future considerably.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

H. PERCIVAL DODGE,
American Minister.

AMERICAN COMMISSION,
Berlin, January 26, 1921.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In compliance with the department's unnumbered circular telegraphic instructions of January 7, 1921, I have the honor to give below information regarding conditions in Germany, a brief report on the American organizations now operating in Germany, and particulars as to German efforts for alleviating distress.

Actual living conditions, as demonstrated by a comparison of income and expense, are shown by figures given in Annex "B," which have been prepared for me by one of the largest private relief organizations in Berlin. These figures I have also checked up with the monthly bulletin of statistics for Berlin, prepared by Dr. Silbergleit, which gives the cost of food supplies necessary for the sustaining of life—in other words, based on the usually accepted norm of 3,000 calories.

That the whole population of Germany is still suffering greatly from undernourishment due, principally, to the effect of the blockade as well as the present financial situation can not be questioned. This fact, however, is best proved by the following statistics on the death rate, indicating particularly the resisting power of the individual.

Up to October 1, 1920 (later statistics are not yet available), in 375 German towns with a population of 15,000 or more, totaling 27,700,108 inhabitants, the maximum number of deaths occurred in the month of February, totaling 47,738. Of these 15 per cent were children under one year of age, 9 per cent were tubercular cases, and 35 per cent due to various lung troubles. The births in this month amounted to 51,822, of which 1,988 were stillborn. The minimum number of deaths occurred in the month of September, totaling 25,903, of which 22 per cent were children under one year of age, 11 per cent tubercular cases, and 8 per cent from various lung diseases. The births in this month totaled 46,273, of which 1,562 were stillborn. This latter figure represents also the minimum number of births in any one month up to October 1. The maximum number of births occurred in the month of March, totaling 55,692, of which 1,985 were stillborn. The deaths in this month reached the figure of 46,885.

I must point out early in this report that all statistics are not only difficult to obtain, due to disorganization following the revolution, as well as shortage of funds for preparing compilations, but also lack certain comparative value until analyzed and revised. For example, the population of Germany decreased during the war from 67,000,000 to 60,000,000 (the loss of the districts of Alsace-Lorraine and Posen must be taken into consideration), the hardships of the war affected particularly the old people and the young children, all of which facts particularly change the interpretation of statistics. Again, tuberculosis mortality figures show a decrease over those of 1917 and 1918 (the high point), while actually the extent of the disease is increasing. According to experts, this is due to the fact that only deaths are recorded, and the weaker citizens died off during the most difficult years of the war. No system exists in Germany to-day for officially recording the number of those afflicted with the disease.

Undernourishment is playing a large part in the spread of disease, particularly tuberculosis and rickets among the smaller children. It is reported from Berlin that in 1920 one-third of all children entering the orphan asylums were tubercular, as against one-twelfth before the war. Other figures show a 67 per cent increase of deaths from tuberculosis in Prussia between 1913 and 1918. In Prussian cities alone it reached 72.6 per cent.

Another contributing condition to be considered is the congestion in the large cities and shortage of dwellings. Before the war it was figured that there was a yearly increase in the population of Germany of 800,000, thus necessitating the yearly construction of 200,000 dwellings. As in other countries during the war, little or no building was done in Germany, and in 1919 only 30,000 houses were built. In the city of Berlin alone there are 100,000 families without homes, 22,000 of which are urgent cases requiring immediate relief. Steps have been taken by the authorities to meet this situation, but during the year it has only been possible to build 10,000 additional dwellings, many of which are of only a temporary character. It must be realized that building costs are estimated as having increased fourteenfold. For instance, where before the war there were 18,000 brickyards in operation, there are now but 300. This is due largely to the high cost of coal as well as that of labor. While there is a general movement of people throughout the world to the large centers, Germany has particularly suffered in this respect through enormous emigration from the east and also from the west, where many German families have left Alsace-Lorraine and come to other parts of Germany. It can be safely said that this congested condition plays also a large part in the alarming spread of tuberculosis. I have seen several families crowded into small quarters where oftentimes parents and children are forced to sleep together in the same bed. Furthermore, cases have been reported to me of such shortage of beds that mothers have been forced to give birth to children in the same bed in which their other children were also lying. Before the war such conditions were almost unheard of in Germany.

I can safely say that the most serious condition exists among the children who are suffering not only from lack of proper clothing, but principally from a shortage of milk and proper foodstuffs. The coming generation is truly threatened. From figures prepared by the Quaker Mission, now feeding children throughout Germany, it is shown that the maximum milk ration distributed through official sources in Munich is as follows:

Liters per day:

Age:
0–2 years	1½
2–6 years and nursing and expectant mothers, on an average	⅛

The minimum ration in Elberfeld is as follows:

Liters per day:

Age:
0–2 years	½
2–6 years	¼
Nursing and expectant mothers	½

In this city the schedule calls for a distribution of 9,000 liters, of which only 7,500 liters are available.

In an average of 131 cities with a total population of 13,350,000, of which 440,000 were children up to 2 years of age and 565,000 children from 2 to 6 years of age, the following quantities of milk were distributed:

Liters per day:

Age:
0–2 years	1
2–4 years	½
4–6 years	¼
Nursing and expectant mothers	½

In 500 cities of 10,000 or more inhabitants, the following percentage of the scheduled milk ration was reached:

Seven cities, 80 per cent.
Seventy cities from 50 to 80 per cent.
Thirty-eight cities from 30 to 50 per cent.
Thirteen cities less than 30 per cent.

Of 193,692 sick people in the city of Berlin, 188,244 were allotted no milk at all. In explanation of this great shortage, it may be added that there are no doubt many cases included in these figures of unscrupulous people, who have claimed sickness in order to obtain a small supply of fresh milk. This lack of milk in Germany can be attributed not only to fewer milk cows but also to lower productivity of these cows. For example, figures show that in 1913, 2,700 liters per cow per year were produced as against 1,100 liters per cow per year in 1919. Shortage of fodder has contributed materially to this result. Furthermore hoof-and-mouth disease is raging throughout Germany at the present time, 99,272 head of cattle being reported as infected on December 30, 1920, of which 9,833 were recently reported as new cases.

The German Government is taking all possible steps to meet this milk shortage, but the lack of purchasing power of the mark prohibits the necessary importation of both condensed and fresh milk and fodder from abroad. However, from January 1, 1920, to November 1, 1920, the following quantities of milk were imported into Germany:

	Liters.
Fresh milk	12,251,749
Condensed, evaporated, and powdered milk (about)	97,000,000
Additional through philanthropic organizations (about)	16,000,000

These figures represent an average increase over the importation of condensed milks in 1913 of 361,000 liters of milk daily, of which figure 50,800 liters come from philanthropic sources.

Naturally, the basis of these conditions described above is that of economic and financial difficulties. With the decrease in the purchasing value of the mark, the purchase of raw materials for importation for German factories has become extremely difficult, if not in many cases impossible. The coal deliveries set under the Spa agreement of July have necessitated considerable reduction in manufacture and transportation. The great decrease in domestic demand due to high prices and the lack of markets, especially Russia, has greatly crippled manufacturing industries. All of this has contributed to an increase in unemployment, figures for which, including the total payments made by the German Government, were on December 15, 1920, as follows:

Men	290,911
Women	74,396
Total	365,307
Dependents	380,384
	Marks.
Total payments made from December 1–15, 1920	49,540,420

The maximum number out of employ of men and women during 1920 was:

January 15	men	347,783
August 1	women	109,017

and the minimum was:

January 1	men	209,930
May 15	women	59,983

In cities of 200,000 population or over, on December 15, the number of unemployed per 1,000 was as follows:

Greater Berlin	24.6
Neukoeln	39.0
Berlin	27.0
Leipzig	22.2
Hamburg	20.3
Koenigsberg	22.3
Dresden	17.5
Munich	16.2
Chemnitz	15.6

Only the first seven on the list are given, and it is interesting to note that in the coal regions of Dortmund, Essen, and Dusseldorf, the figures run, respectively, but 0.1, 0.4, and 2.8. It is from this district that most of the coal is being delivered to the Allies under the Spa agreement.

In quoting figures on unemployment it must be pointed out that to meet the situation the Government has taken on many more employees than are actually needed, many industries have done the same, or are working several short shifts in order to keep men employed and others are finding it cheaper to pay their men than attempt to manufacture at present cost prices. Even so, the figures for December 15, given above, indicated 0.06 per cent of the total population of Germany actually out of employment, and including their families and dependents, 1.24 per cent of the population are affected thereby.

I have had many people passing through Germany ask why it is that Germany's agriculture is not meeting the needs of the country more successfully. According to Prof. Warmbold, German agriculture before the war furnished (deducting the food produced by the aid of imported fertilizers and feeds) about 90 per cent of her vegetable foods, 67 per cent of her meats and fats, 50 per cent of her milk and dairy products, and 70 per cent of her poultry. In other words, about one-sixth of the population depended on foreign countries for food.

First, it must be remembered that under the peace treaty, Germany lost 25 per cent of her former grain crops, from 10 to 12 per cent of cattle raised, 14.9 per cent of the total farm lands as against but 7.5 per cent of her population. Although the blockade during the war brought about more intensive cultivation of agricultural lands, the impossibility of importing necessary fertilizing phosphates and nitrates caused the productive character of the lands to decrease. Figures show the following decline in agricultural productivity from 1913 to 1919:

Grains	million tons	30.7
Potatoes	do	50.0
Raw sugar	do	2.7
1919:
Grains	do	15.1
Potatoes	do	20.0
Raw sugar	tons	700,000

While it can rightfully be said that since the armistice there should have been sufficient opportunity to bring in the necessary fertilizing materials, it must again be remarked that the purchasing power of the German mark is so low that such importations are practically prohibited.

To the conditions described above a line on the general demoralization of the people should be added. First, one sees a decline in physical vigor due to the hardships and lack of nourishment during the war. It has been estimated that human efficiency has declined at least 30 per cent. Second, the youth of Germany has markedly deteriorated, due to lack of home discipline during the war. Petty thefts are rife, committed particularly by juvenile offenders. The chief of police of the city of Berlin recently made the statement to a member of my staff that unless a reported theft was over 200,000 marks it was impossible for his office to take up the matter, as they had so much more work than they could possibly accomplish. Third, the revolution removed the former head of the German machine, and the result has been that the machine has only been carrying on through its own inertia, without efficient central direction, and the former famous organization has gradually been crumbling and becoming ineffective. This is evidenced by the willingness on the part of officials of all classes to accept bribes, and by the thefts of baggage in railway trains, hotels, etc. To the German who took such pride in his former efficiency and honesty this has a most disheartening effect. Fourth, the desperate financial and economic situation, the uncertainty of the reparations to be demanded under the Versailles treaty, all of which result in a constant fluctuation of exchange with the consequent difficulty of making and maintaining contracts and purchasing raw materials in foreign countries. In explanation of this last point, I am attaching hereto (Annex "A") four examples of the burden of taxation to be borne by German citizens, and am giving the following brief statement of the financial situation of the country:

On December 1, 1920, the total debt of the Commonwealth was estimated at 233,000,000,000 marks. In this fiscal year the estimated income (37,700,000,000 marks) was calculated to cover the ordinary expenses. The extraordinary expenses (39,000,000,000 marks) was left uncovered. The income for the first seven months of the year falls short of the estimated income by 8,600,000,000 marks for the entire fiscal year. The shortage of 8,600,000,000 marks is already included in the 233,000,000,000 marks mentioned above. Therefore we must add to this amount the uncovered extraordinary expenses of 39,000,000,000 marks and the sum of 7,500,000,000 marks representing the deficit on the estimate from November 1 to March 31, or a total of 35,500,000,000 marks. The total debt therefore at the end of this fiscal year, exclusive of indemnity and expenses of troops of occupation will be approximately 279,500,000,000 marks.

On December 31 the total note circulation of commonwealth bank notes and loan bank notes amounted to 80,838,300,000 marks, as against on December 31, 1919, 49,279,600,000 marks and in June, 1914, 2,500,000,000 marks. Thus the amount of paper money in circulation during 1920 showed an increase of over 60 per cent. In addition to the above notes are 313,000,000 marks of Reichskasse notes and 200,000,000 marks notes issued by individual banks, such as the Bavarian, Saxon, and so forth. Therefore the total amount of paper money in existence—in circulation and held in the Reichsbank reserve—at the close of the year 1920 was approximately 105,000,000,000 marks. In December, 1920, the reserve of precious metals held by the Reichsbank equaled but 1,097,409,000 marks.

The most important of the American relief organizations operating in Germany is the American Friends' Service Committee, or better known as the Quaker Mission for Child Feeding, working in conjunction with the American Relief Administration European Child Feeding Fund. This committee is feeding to-day in Germany over 600,000 children daily and 30,000 nursing and expectant mothers. Of these children those between the ages of 6 and 15 years are selected from schools and those under 6 years of age from institutions and day nurseries. The means of selection for feeding is through a medical test, standardized as nearly as possible by a central committee of leading child specialists of Germany, meeting regularly for this purpose, this test being applied by the local city or school doctor. It consists roughly of measuring the height and weight of the child and determining the general condition of the fat layers on the body. The following four general class have been drawn up:

Class 1. Normal children.
Class 2. Slightly undernourished.
Class 3. Badly undernourished.
Class 4. Dangerously undernourished.

Only the children in classes 3 and 4 are fed, and in most districts sufficient food is provided to entirely cover the children in class 4 and in many districts class 3 as well. In some districts the need is completely covered. The period of feeding is limited to three months, at the end of which time the children are reexamined and reclassified. The feeding consists of one daily ration averaging 667 calories. This ration is given as a supplementary meal, and supposed to be one-third of the normal 2,000 calory ration for children. The Quaker work is now so organized as to cover all cities of 10,000 inhabitants and over and a few rural districts, such as the industrial districts of the Ruhr and Saxony. Otherwise small towns and agricultural districts are not included.

Besides the child-feeding work the Quakers are giving one meal a day of 800 calories to 30,000 nursing and expectant mothers. This feeding begins three months before confinement, and is continued as long during the nursing period as the doctor in attendance believes necessary.

I realize that this is but a brief sketch of an enormous task, and I can not speak too highly of the quiet, tactful, and efficient manner in which the representatives of the American Friend' Service Committee have carried on their work during the past year in Germany. I hear nothing but praise from officials of the German Government as well as from the various German societies cooperating or assisting the Quakers in their work, and I believe that there is no doubt but that this feeding of German children has had far-reaching effect in preventing a further spread of radicalism, particularly among the working classes and unemployed.

The next American effort of importance is that of the American Relief Administration Warehouses with headquarters in Hamburg and delivery stations in Berlin, Dresden, Frankfurt-on-Main, Munich, Stuttgart, and Leipzig. A station will also be opened shortly at Breslau. The details of this package distribution system are no doubt already known to the department, but it is of interest to give here a few general figures regarding the work accomplished by this organization since its beginning in January, 1920. Up to December 16, 1920, $1,679,850 worth of drafts had been sold for Germany. These drafts are divided among the four categories of packages, as follows:

$10, "A"	89,881
$50, "B"	13,130
$10, "C"	9,866
$50, "D"	1,020

In the month of December in Berlin alone the following number of packages were delivered:

"A"	1,693
"B"	161
"D"	6

It is interesting to note that while the German American Relief Association Warehouses now stand only second to Vienna in size, at first considerable difficulty was experienced in getting this scheme started in Germany. This was due particularly to the pride of the German people and a certain reluctance to ask for assistance from friends in America, as well as hesitation in making a general appeal in the United States for fear of possible rebuff. This hesitancy has now been successfully overcome and, besides the personal drafts, the warehouses here are receiving so-called "general-distribution" drafts as well. These drafts come from individual organizations in America, without specification of a particular beneficiary, distribution being left to the discretion of the American Relief Association representatives in Germany. In such cases the German Red Cross is generally asked to suggest beneficiaries, such as needy orphan asylums, etc. It is interesting furthermore to note that many drafts are purchased by casual travelers in Germany who have become so impressed with the general need that they wish to contribute in some way. The case was quoted of one gentleman in particular who had bought well over 100 food drafts in this way.

The American Red Cross, while maintaining an office in Berlin, is doing no relief work in Germany at the present time. The office here is purely one for transmission of mail and telegrams to the Red Cross units working farther to the east.

The American Young Men's Christian Association, while having a considerable staff in Germany, is devoting its efforts entirely to assisting the Russians confined in the prison camps of Germany and cooperating with other organizations in the general relief of prisoners being exchanged by the bolshevist and German Governments. No direct relief of the German civilian population is undertaken by this organization.

Another American activity that has shown considerable development recently is that of the feeding of university students. This work was originally organized by the British Quakers, who contributed most of the funds, but who are now being assisted by the American Quakers. At the present time 16,000 students in 31 universities and technical high schools (technische hoehschulen) throughout Germany are being helped to obtain one good meal daily. This help consists of giving to the messrooms of the universities raw food to the value of 1.50 marks per day per student, this food to increase the value of the meal already being given. The great need of these university students has not received the publicity that has been given to the condition of the children in Germany, but as many of these students are sons of the middle and professional classes, who are, perhaps, suffering most under present conditions, it goes without saying that they have but scant means with which to pursue their education. Many are existing on as little as 200 marks a month or less, out of which sum must come expenses for food, clothing, academic fees, etc.

The work now being conducted by the British and American Quakers is to be turned over some time in March to the World's Student Christian Federation, an organization formed in 1894, representing 42 countries and having headquarters in Switzerland. At a meeting of this federation in August, 1920, at which all countries were represented, it was voted to undertake the relief of students, and to raise a tentative budget of $1,000,000 for this purpose. The American representatives of the federation pledged themselves to $800,000, and, as I understand, have joined in the relief campaign now being conducted in the United States under the direction of Mr. Hoover. Through agreement, they are to make use of the Hoover stores and organizations in Europe and to take over any student feeding that is now being conducted by such organizations. Two hundred thousand dollars worth of these stores have been guaranteed for immediate use, it being understood, however, that where these stores are used the work will be under American supervision. The effort of the federation in Germany will be to make use of existing organizations as much as possible, and the first step has been to unite the two big German associations—the student unions and the German Christian student movement.

Other large German charitable organizations are the Caritas Verband, representing the Catholic effort, the Zentral Wohlfahrtsstelle der deutschen Juden, representing the Jewish effort, and the Deutscher Hilfsbund. These organizations are receiving contributions directly, supplies simply passing through the hands of the central committee as a matter of record and in order to obtain entry free of duty.

Mention should be made of the work of the Central Committee for the Relief of Distress in Germany and Austria, headed by Dr. Lieber. This organization, working to a large extent through the American relief section of the German Red Cross, had up to October 15, 1920, sent gift packages to Germany amounting to approximately 350,000,000 marks. At the present time the contributions from this committee are passing through the hands of the Central Committee for Foreign Relief, the organization which I shall speak of later.

Other American organizations are the American Welfare Association (Charity Bazaar Association of Milwaukee), which, with a fund of approximately $2,000,000, have been distributing milk, money, etc., throughout Germany. This association does not work in conjunction with other associations and has no particular office. Die Deutsch-Amerikanische Frauenhilfe (quarterly collection) had up to May 20 distributed about 480 cases of clothing and placed $21,000 at the disposal of the German Red Cross, through which organization they are working. I understand, however, that this arrangement with the Red Cross is not entirely satisfactory to the members of the Frauenhilfe. Other funds from America have come from the Methodist, Catholic, and Jewish associations, this relief being paid over directly to the corresponding religious organizations in Germany. From these sources gifts amounting to approximately 13,000,000 marks had been recorded in the central committee up to October 15, 1920.

A word should be added as to the part that the German Government has played not only in assisting these American philanthropic efforts, but also in attempting itself to meet the situation.

Perhaps the most satisfactory effort toward meeting the situation has been the organization of a semiofficial committee for foreign relief (Zentral Ausschuss fuer Auslands Hilfe). This body was formed in the beginning of 1920 for the purpose of coordinating foreign relief for Germany and collecting information from the various parts of Germany as to general conditions and need of relief. To this central committee belong members of most of the large charitable organizations in Germany, and there are representatives of the committee in every district throughout the country. From the Government the committee has obtained free import for all supplies passing through their hands and assurance of financial support providing current expenses are not covered by the slight charges added to the insurance and transport costs on the various goods received. Unfortunately, at the start the central committee came into conflict with the efforts of the German Red Cross, but matters have now been smoothed out, so that I consider the former the most efficient organization for the distribution of future relief supplies. A good example of their activity is shown by the recent gift of 700,000 yards of flannel cloth by the American Red Cross to the American Quakers for distribution in Germany. The Quaker organization, which works through the central committee and is also an ardent supporter of this organization, immediately placed the disposition of this flannel cloth in the hands of the central committee, and in the weekly meeting of this committee the reports of needs for clothing throughout Germany were gone over carefully and the flannel cloth distributed where the need was greatest.

By a recent agreement with the American Friends' Service Committee, the German Government contracts, beginning October 1, 1920, and lasting until June 1, 1921, to add to the child-feeding supplies flour and sugar necessary for the rationing of an average of 500,000 children. This represents approximately 45 per cent of the total feeding costs, as based on American prices. In addition to this, the German authorities pay for the unloading of the food supplies in Germany, the warehousing of these supplies, the freight charge across the interior of the country, insurance, expenses of local warehousing, transferring supplies from local warehouses to the individual kitchens, and the cooking and serving of all meals. This work, of course, is done under Quaker supervision. One-third of the cost of the first four items is paid by the national Government, one-third by the State governments, and one-third by the local city organizations. Twenty-five thousand Germans are employed in this work, of whom one-fourth are volunteers. The others are paid by the cities and local organizations. To help toward the payment of these charges, those children who can afford it pay from 25 to 40 pfennigs per meal to the various local German organizations. It is estimated that the cost per meal is approximately 35 pfennigs. No child, however, is refused food on account of inability to pay.

In the case of the American Relief Administration the German Government gives free entry of all food supplies, free transportation on all bulk shipments to the local American Relief Association delivery stations, and has modified postal regulations so as to accept the small type "A" and type "C" packages.

Among the various measures for relieving distress, perhaps the most important is the effort of the German Government to reduce the price of rationed foods. During the fiscal year 1919–20 7.75 billion marks were appropriated for this purpose, and 3,000,000,000 marks in 1920–21. This total of 10.75 billion marks is divided as follows:

[In billions.]	Marks.
Bread, flour	4.50
Meats	3.20
Fats	2.20
Local potatoes	.70
Other foodstuffs	.15
	10.75

In view of the bad harvest, it will now be necessary to make up the unexpected deficiency in bread flour with larger purchases from abroad and an additional appropriation of 7,000,000,000 marks is anticipated, thus making a total of 10,000,000,000 marks for the year 1920–21. Future developments in the exchange rates will naturally affect this expenditure.

The general laws for social betterment or assistance of the German population are as follows:

(1) Commonwealth law for the assistance of citizens: A law dating back to 1870, which provides for the care of the poor and destitute.

(2) Weekly aid: Introduced in 1919, providing assistance for nursing and expectant mothers with incomes under 4,000 marks per year. Under this law, for 10 or 12 weeks, each mother receives 1.50 marks per day, 75 pfennigs for nursing her child, and 50 marks for expenses of birth.

(3) Assistance to unemployed: A law introduced in 1918, shortly after the revolution, providing for payments to all people out of employ. The rates of payments vary in different localities.

(4) Assistance for the war maimed and war widows and orphans: A law introduced in 1920 providing for a definite monthly pension, a certain percentage of which is paid to the beneficiaries according to the merits of their case. Under this law also is a provision covering the care of health and the education of children. This law affects 1,500,000 cripples and 3,500,000 widows, orphans, etc., a total of 5,000,000.

(5) Care of cripples: A law introduced in 1920, providing no pension, but care and training for cripples of daily life. This law cares for those not provided for under No. (4).

(6) Social insurance—a law introduced in the nineties, but recently revised. This is a straight insurance system to which monthly payments are made. It covers three classes:

(a) Sickness insurance bureau, allowing pensions for a maximum of 26 weeks yearly.

(b) Invalid insurance, providing pensions for the permanently injured.

(c) Employees' insurance—a revision of the law of 1913, providing separate insurance for salaried officials.

(7) Colonization law of 1920—to assist in the building of dwellings. This assistance was designed for use particularly in the industrial districts, and to date has been put into effect only in the coal regions.

(8) Law for child protection—this law is under discussion at the present time, and contemplates measures assuring every child attention and instruction necessary for its development. This will, however, involve considerable expense, and for this reason there is much opposition thereto.

Aside from these general laws it may be added that the public throughout Germany has made a general attempt to meet the distressing situation of the children by collecting by general subscription a children's fund. This fund to-day stands at 20,000,000 marks. A particularly interesting development is one started by the workmen in several districts, in which two extra hours of work per week are advocated, devoting the funds thus obtained to philanthropic purposes, with the object of making workmen's philanthropic organizations self-supporting. This movement is now already in effect in the district of Waldenburg, Silesia.

In closing this report I should like to make several suggestions for possible relief in Germany. In the first place, I trust that the American Friends' Service Committee will receive sufficient funds to enable them to complete their schedule as outlined to June 1, 1921. If, however, funds could be provided enabling them to increase their feeding to cover 1,000,000 children, they would then be fully supplying the needs of classes 3 and 4. Further relief should then take the form of shoes and clothing.

In the city of Gratz, to take an example at random, of 1,842 school children, 50 per cent had but two shirts, 25 per cent had but one shirt, 7 per cent had no shirt, 25 per cent had but two pairs of stockings, 30 per cent had but one pair of stockings, 15 per cent had no pair of stockings, 30 per cent had neither coat nor warm jacket, 8 per cent had but wooden or cloth shoes, 1 per cent had no shoes whatever.

In the case of the American Relief Administration warehouses, I believe that the idea of general distribution drafts could be further increased to great advantage, for in this way the middle class, which is severely affected by present conditions, could be most successfully reached. I have had brought to my particular attention the cases of various musicians, who have profited by a fund of this sort raised by Kreisler in America.

As to further efforts, a member of one of the largest private relief organizations in Berlin informed me that at the present time above all cash funds were necessary. It seems that many private institutions have been forced to close their doors, and of the Caritas Verein, the great Catholic organization comprising all Catholic charitable undertakings, 800 institutions caring for 17,000 children are in immediate danger of bankruptcy. In this connection I made inquiries into the overhead costs of a large charitable institution, and found that where in 1913 administration expenses were 80,000 marks, during 1920 it was necessary to pay out 500,000 marks. Even with this tremendous increase many special statistical bureaus had to be given up as it was impossible to pay for the necessary clerks and secretaries. Where before the war a clerk received 250 marks monthly, he now receives from 1,000 marks to 1,100 marks. Stenographers' wages have increased from 200 marks to 1,000 marks monthly, and secretaries from 400 marks to 1,500 marks.

I have pointed out above the great shortage of milk, which, of course, carries particular hardship for the children and diminishes the successful chances of fighting sickness and disease. In passing, I also mentioned in connection with the congestion in cities the shortage of beds. This point was particularly brought out by the charitable organization referred to above. The minimum cost to-day for one complete bed is 700 marks, a sum quite beyond the reach of the great majority of the people.

While I realize that the demands for assistance from all parts of the world to-day are very great, I nevertheless desire to emphasize the particular importance of the part that Germany plays in the general European reconstruction problem and the consequent advisability of assisting these people. Normal tasks and normal ways must be resumed at the earliest possible moment in order that the economic "switchboard" of Europe, as Germany has been so aptly called, may again start functioning. With the switchboard in shape, it is fairly safe to say that the distress in the surrounding countries, caused largely by the upset of normal trade and commercial conditions, will be all the sooner alleviated.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

ELLIS LORING DRESEL,
American Commissioner.

ANNEX A.

EXAMPLE 1.

A private man owns on June 30, 1919, property worth 100,000,000 marks; hereof 25,000,000 marks are an increase during the war. The tributary dies in the year 1920 and bequeaths his property in equal parts to his two nephews. One of them has no property, while the other possesses 1,000,000 marks. Assessment will be as follows:

	Marks.
Property on June 30, 1919	100,000,000
1. Tax on property increase during the war	24,828,000
Remainder	75,172,000
2. Commonwealth sacrifice levy on property	47,779,550
	27,392,450
3. Tax on inheritance	1,332,622
4. Tax on legacy to be paid by the nephew who hitherto had no property	5,032,245
5. Tax on legacy to be paid by the nephew who owns property worth 1,000,000 marks	7,548,367
Total of tax on inheritance and legacy (3, 4, and 5)	13,913,234
Remainder of the property of 100,000,000 marks	13,479,216

EXAMPLE 2.

A private individual owns property worth 10,000,000 marks, whereof 4,000,000 marks are invested with an industrial company which could have declared a 20 per cent dividend for 1920 were it not subjected to a corporation tax. The remaining property capital bears 5 per cent. No increase of property. Without taxes this man would have a yearly income of 1,100,000 marks.

Taxes.	Marks.
Commonwealth sacrifice levy	5,417,750.00
Property remaining	4,582,250.00
Virtual income (income without taxes from remaining property):
Dividends	800,000.00
Interest on capital	29,112.50
	829,112.50
This income is diminished by—
Corporation tax	160,000.00
Tax on capital yield	64,000.00
Income tax	315,160.00
	539,160.00
The income remaining amounts to	289,952.50

As a consequence of the new taxes, the property is diminished from 10,000,000 marks to 4,582,250 marks, and the income from 1,100,000 marks to 289,952.50 marks.

EXAMPLE 3.

A private individual owns property worth 1,000,000 marks. No war profits. The invested capital bears 5 per cent interest. One-third of the Commonwealth sacrifice levy (rounded up to 82,250 marks) is paid and 6½ amortization for the remainder.

	Marks.
Commonwealth sacrifice levy	244,250.00
Hereof paid one-third	82,250.00
Debt remaining	162,000.00
Remaining amount of property	917,750.00
Income therefrom	45,887.50
From this income are to be deducted—
1. 6½ per cent of M. 162,000 annual amortization	10,530.00
2. Levy on capital yield	4,588.00
3. Income tax	7,272.00
	22,390.00
Income remaining	22,497.50

This man, who prior to the war had an income of about 45,000 gold marks, after deduction of taxes, now, if the depreciation of German currency is estimated at 10.1, after deduction of taxes, disposes of an income of only 2,250 gold marks, which is what an ordinary workman earned before the war.

EXAMPLE 4.

Assessment of companies.

[E. g., joint-stock company.]

	Marks.
Invested capital	200,000,000
Value of the whole property of the company	300,000,000
Net profit	50,000,000
Hereof 10,000,000 marks are placed in the reserve fund; 40,000,000 marks, or 20 per cent, remain.
The company has to share in the commonwealth sacrifice levy with 10 per cent of the property exceeding the invested capital. Accordingly the company pays:
Commonwealth sacrifice levy	10,000,000
Corporation tax, 10 per cent of net profit	5,000,000
Corporation tax, 10 per cent of dividend distributed	4,000,000

The total corporation tax amounts to 9,000,000 marks.

Apart from the above taxes there must be taken into account additional taxes on yield of property, i. e., ground and building taxes and license taxes, which are levied by the various States and communities and differ in amounts.

ANNEX B.

Income tax rates on the income of an unmarried workman.

Income (marks):	Tax rate (per cent).
15,000	14.6
16,000	15.2
17,000	15.7
18,000	16.2
19,000	16.7
20,000	17.2
21,000	17.6
22,000	18.1
23,000	18.5
24,000	19.0
25,000	19.5

Married workmen are accorded abatements inconsiderable in figure.

THE ACTUAL BUDGET OF FOUR DIFFERENT HOUSEHOLDS IN BERLIN.

(1) A man injured in war, who is now employed in a gas plant, supporting a sickly wife and three daughters of 11, 13, and 14 years. Living quarters consist of one small, dark room with kitchen, and with but three beds for the five people. Children have but two much-patched skirts apiece and no shoes, two wearing wooden clogs and one felt shoes:

Rent	30
Total (against receipts of 710 marks)	850
Receipts:

Receipts:
Charity	70.00
Invalidity pension	80.00
Earnings of son	160.00
Earnings of wife	150.00
	460.00

(4) A widow without family:

Expenses for one person:	Marks.
Food	550.00
Heat and light	30.00
Soap	18.00
Rent	32.50
Total (against receipts of 520 marks)	630.50

Receipts:
Salary	500.00
Orphan pension	20.00
	520.00

These figures given above are simply for the bare expenses of existence, taxes, car fare, shoes or clothing being out of the question, and in all four cases—and they are typical of many thousands of families—the earnings fall short of expenses, so that unless help comes from other sources some of the necessities have to be gone without.

Dr. Silbergleits's figures on food costs for Berlin, based on the calorie norm of 3,000, are as follows:

Per week.

	Man.	Man and wife.	Man, wife, and 7 to 12 year old child.
Ration	$15.43	$30.86	$48.48
Open market	46.06	75.23	82.88
Total December, 1920	61.49	106.09	131.36
In August, 1920 (lowest month)	57.20	97.64	116.32
In April, 1920 (highest month)	71.43	121.25	138.37

F. E. WARREN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES W. GOOD,
J. G. CANNON,
JOHN M. EVANS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the list of disagreements which the Secretary has just read covers 25 or 26 matters which were taken back to the House under the House rule. The House has agreed to every one of that lot, with the exception of five. Four of the five are simply little changes of language and do not change the effect or the amount. That leaves only one which they have disagreed to that carries any amount of money or is of any significance, and that one is with reference to repairs of the Coast Guard ship Onondaga. Since the House must be advised of our action, I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to Senate amendments numbered 40, 52, 53, and 62, which are simply changes of language, and that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 33, being the disagreement of the House on the repairs of the ship Onondaga.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the first motion should be on agreeing to the conference report so far as agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the report be agreed to.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I now renew my motion with reference to the amendment referred to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming, but the Chair thinks the action of the House should first be read.

Mr. WARREN. Very well; let it be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 14, 20, 25, 26, 28, 35, 37, 41, 42, 43, 45, 54, 55, 56, 79, 80, 81, 82, and 83 to the bill (H. R. 15962) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes," and agrees to the same.

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of said amendment, after "in," insert "House Documents Nos. 986 and 997 and."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 52, and agrees to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"So much as may be necessary of that part of the sum of $46,000,000 appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 for medical and hospital services of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance allotted to the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is made available for the erection of quarters for the medical staff at the various branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 53, and agrees to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of lines 1 to 7, inclusive, of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That the limitation specified in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 on expenditures for pay of chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the supply and accounting departments of the navy yards and naval stations and disbursing offices for the fiscal year 1921, under 'Maintenance, Supplies and Accounts,' is increased by $750,000."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 12 of said amendment strike out ", $312,811.27."

That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to understand the effect of the motion of the Senator from Wyoming. Is it the purpose of the Senator by the motion to bring the two Houses into accord? Will a further conference be necessary if the motion prevails?

Mr. WARREN. If my motion prevails no further conference will be necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON. There was an amendment referred to in the action of the House read relating to a fund appropriated last year of $46,000,000 in connection with the treatment of sick and disabled soldiers. I desire to understand the effect of that amendment. Was it a Senate amendment or a House provision or an amendment inserted in conference?

Mr. WARREN. There was a Senate amendment which provided that of that sum, $46,000,000, a certain amount could be used to build quarters for the physicians who are in the service of caring for those unfortunates. The comptroller has ruled that the language as carried would provide for the soldiers themselves, but that legislation is required in order to give quarters to the surgeons. The amendment was to take out the sum which the Senate said should not be exceeded in building each set of quarters; that is all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this bill carried a provision on page 43 for completing the Government free bathhouse at Hot Springs, Ark.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The sundry civil bill carried a similar provision, inserted as a Senate amendment, and an additional provision changing the name of the reservation to the Hot Springs National Park.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Am I correct in the assumption that the appropriation stays in the urgent deficiency bill, and the provision changing the name to the Hot Springs National Park remains in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. WARREN. The amount appropriated happens to be in one of the two bills. I have forgotten which one of the two, but it is in one bill and has been taken out of the other.

Mr. ROBINSON. Clearly the appropriation goes out of the sundry civil bill?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. That was the proper bill in which to carry it, although it makes no difference so far as the results are concerned which bill carries it. The sundry civil bill, in addition to the appropriation, also contained a provision in which I am interested.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator refers to the provision changing the name of the reservation?

Mr. ROBINSON. I refer to the provision changing its name.

Mr. WARREN. That stands in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. So that both the matters in which the Senator from Arkansas is interested have been favorably acted upon. One of the two—the one for building the bathhouse—was left in this deficiency bill so as to render it immediately available.

Mr. ROBINSON. But one of them is cared for in the urgent deficiency bill and the other in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. In view of the explanation of the Senator from Wyoming, I have no objection to the motion made by him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, which was read.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 53, 65, 83, 104, and 106.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the Senate amendments numbered 14, 17, 20, 25, 26, 27, 32, 40, 42, 43, 60, 61, 62, 64, 82, 94, 95, 101, 102, 109, 129, and 130.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I now move that the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 53, 65, 83, 104, and 106.

I will state to the Senate that two of these amendments involve items in regards to totals; one relates to an item of $50,000 for irrigation in Montana; another to an item of $50,000 pertaining to an irrigation project in Washington; and another to a claim of Stevens and Ferry Counties, in Washington, amounting to $115,000. At first it was my intention to ask that these items go back to conference, but I have been informed by the House managers that unless the conference report be agreed to to-day it is very doubtful if the Indian appropriation bill can be enrolled in time. These items were discussed for more than a day in conference; they were then taken back to the House, and there voted on. The vote against them was about two to one. So that I feel it will be useless to again take them back to conference. Therefore I ask that the Senate recede from the amendments, which will bring the two Houses together on all of the items. I may add that the items which have been left out may very well go over until the next session without any great harm being done.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs as to the item pertaining to the Chemawa Indian Training School at Salem, Oreg.

Mr. CURTIS. That amendment was agreed to by the House with an amendment, which has already been adopted, eliminating one of the items inserted by the Senate and retaining the other item.

Mr. McNARY. Did the item which has been eliminated embrace the construction of the boys' dormitory?

Mr. CURTIS. The dormitory item was the one that was eliminated, while the other item was retained; but the officials of the Department stated that they thought they could get along wihout the dormitory for another year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand the Senator, it is his judgment that the House would not recede from its disagreement to the two Senate amendments covering Washington items to which he has referred, and that if an agreement should not be reached upon the bill to-day the entire bill is likely to fail.

Mr. CURTIS. That is my information.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is that the Senator's opinion?

Mr. CURTIS. That is my opinion. I am satisfied from the contest made in conference that the conferees on the part of the House would not agree, especially in face of the vote of two to one against the items in the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. While I am very anxious to see those two items agreed to, I do not feel, of course, that I should retard the passage of the bill on that account under the circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that concludes the Indian appropriation bill.

CLASSIFICATION OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I submit the following motion, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

I move that the Committee on Appropriations, to which, on March 22, 1920, was referred Senate bill 4106, to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and the standardization of compensation therefor, and for other purposes, together with the report of the Congressional Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, be discharged from the further consideration of said bill and report, and that said bill and report be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I object. I understand that that is a proposition to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from the further consideration of the reclassification bill and papers in connection therewith which have been referred to that committee. I do not wish to work against the ambition or the good work of my friend from South Dakota. I hope that his committee, as well as other committees, may enter upon a work which has been neglected to some extent, first, because of the short session; second, because of the amount of work that has been imposed upon the different committees; and, third, because of the changes up and down in the matter of salaries, living expenses, and so forth.

It has become necessary for the Appropriations Committee, in connection with the matter of the bonus which has been before that committee, to declare what is its intention hereafter in regard to the bonus and additional payments to Government employees. I have been instructed by that committee to declare that after the present session we will not entertain further the proposition of granting bonuses in addition to the regular pay. That, of course, will necessitate a rearrangement, so far as may be necessary, of the salaries paid Government employees, and such rearrangement will, of course, require a great deal of attention from several directions.

All of the salaries paid the Government employees are known to the Committee on Appropriations, because it is their duty to recommend the appropriations for the various employees, with only small exceptions. That committee has to inform itself as to the salaries paid to thousands of men and women which are not stated in terms, because the persons affected do not occupy what are called statutory positions. Of course, there should be some coordination and some consideration as between the salaries of the two classes of employees.

The Appropriations Committee has stated that, unless other committees having it in charge shall present a bill, the Appropriations Committee expects to be obliged to take up the reclassification work and bring in at the next session some proposition covering this matter. We have already expended considerable work on it, and, since it makes no difference to any committee, with the exception perhaps of the Appropriations Committee, where the technical possession of the papers may be, for they are all printed and at the disposition of any committee which may require them, and inasmuch as some additional help has been asked for and received by the Committee on Appropriations, it is rather necessary, in order to avoid expense and for other reasons, that the matter should remain where it is for the present. In the meantime, the Appropriations Committee will welcome any and all bills drawn or suggestions, information, and help in working out the problem.

So I hope, Mr. President, that the motion of the Senator from South Dakota will not prevail, and that for the present the matter may rest where it now is, with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question, if I may. It is my understanding that there was placed in one of the appropriation bills an item to aid and assist the committee, or one of the organizations of the Government, in securing data with reference to this very matter. Is that so?

Mr. WARREN. That is true.

Mr. CURTIS. And a report is to be made to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WARREN. That is true.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I understand that there is no objection to the present consideration of this motion.

Mr. KING. I objected to its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. It is out of order now, anyhow.

Mr. WARREN. I could have made the objection.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Wyoming, who is the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, could have made the objection, but I understood that he waived the objection.

Mr. WARREN. I can waive nothing which would prevent other Senators from making the point of order.

Mr. STERLING. I know that the motion must go over until to-morrow unless there is consent to its present consideration, but I inferred that the Senator from Wyoming was willing that it might be considered now.

Mr. KING. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will lie over one day under Rule XXVI. The regular order is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 14063, the private pension bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair orient himself. There was just a call for the regular order.

GREAT FALLS WATER-POWER PROJECT.

Mr. MOSES. I present a favorable report from the Committee on Printing and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the vote by which Senate resolution 452 was adopted be reconsidered. It is to print as a public document the report of the Federal Water Power Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion to reconsider is agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. I ask that the amendment reported by the committee to the resolution may be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the report of the chairman of the Federal Water Power Commission, submitting plans and estimates of costs necessary to secure an increased and adequate water supply for the District of Columbia, laid before the Senate and referred to the Committee on Commerce on February 16, 1921, and the report on the investigation of the Great Falls water-power project and plans by Maj. M. C. Tyler, United States Army, submitted to the Senate by Senator NORRIS and referred to the Committee on Printing on February 15, 1921, be printed as a document, together with accompanying illustrations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

UINTAH RESERVATION, UTAH.

Mr. MOSES. From the Committee on Printing I make a favorable report, which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from New Hampshire, on behalf of the committee, reports an original Senate resolution (S. Res. 462), as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Secretary of the Interior on leasing of irrigable Indian land on the Uintah Reservation, Utah, be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF DAUGHTERS OF AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote whereby Senate resolution 456 was agreed to on February 18.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion to reconsider is agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. I offer the amendment to the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee reports to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the Report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the year ended March 1, 1920, transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution pursuant to law, be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

APPLICATIONS FOR LETTERS PATENT.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Patents I report back favorably House bill 15662, and ask that the Secretary may read the title of it, and then I desire to make a brief statement and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15662) to extend temporarily the time for filing applications for letters patent, for taking actions in the United States Patent Office with respect thereto, for the reviving and reinstatement of applications for letters patent, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, this is an emergency measure arising out of the war. During the war applications for patents of course were entirely interrupted between the various countries. No alien enemy could file an application for a patent in this country, nor could we file application for patents abroad. In many cases the applications were made to foreign countries with which we were at peace, and the ships on which the applications were being transported were destroyed.

The general effect of this bill, which has been passed by the House, is to extend the time within which applications for patents may be made in various countries. It is the outgrowth of a treaty made by some of the foreign nations with each other, in which they have agreed, provided different countries adopt reciprocal legislation, to extend the time within which applications may be made. The time is extended by the bill for a period of only six months, and the bill is conditioned upon the fact that other countries pass similar legislation.

The point of the entire bill is simply to extend the time within which applications for patents may be made. The report is a unanimous one from the Committee on Patents, a quorum being in attendance. I see that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] is here now, but he was unable to be present at the committee meeting. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] was there, and I am making this request on behalf of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, does this affect the provisions of the bill that is in conference now?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, no.

Mr. KIRBY. This is a different matter?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is an entirely different matter. As I say, it grows out of this treaty made by the foreign powers. In order for us to avail ourselves of their promise to extend the time within which Americans may make their applications in foreign countries, we must do it also for them. It is a reciprocity measure. Unless foreign countries pass similar legislation, this bill does not operate as to them.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether this is a Senate bill or a House bill?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is a House bill, unanimously reported by the House committee. I have here the hearings. It is unanimously supported by all the patent-law associations, the Patent Commissioner, the patent lawyers, and, in fact, every person who has to do with the patent situation in the country. If it is not passed before Congress adjourns untold losses will result to American citizens who were unable to complete the process of obtaining a foreign patent because the war interrupted the procedure between the different countries.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it a very, very wise measure. I was wondering, however, whether we were not just taking up unnecessary time, because if it is a Senate bill we would never get it through anyhow. If it is a House bill we may be able to complete the legislation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; it is a House bill.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I merely wanted to inquire whether the testimony did not disclose that this bill is more for the advantage of American inventors than for foreign inventors, because there are about four applications abroad by Americans for patents to one by foreigners in this country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; that was the testimony of the former Commissioner of Patents this morning before the committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am a member of the committee, but on account of other duties I have not been able to meet with the committee as I should. As I understand, this bill simply extends the time for filing those applications that were interrupted by the war, and that under the treaty would lapse if this extension of time were not granted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; but it also extends the time within which applications may be made, as I understand, although they have not been actually made. It is an endeavor to accord to our citizens principally, as the Senator from Pennsylvania says, the right to complete their applications which were interrupted by the war, where they have made applications for patents in foreign countries.

Mr. President, before I weary the Senate with making any further explanation, except the reading of the House report, or the Commissioner of Patents' testimony, if that be required—if not, I shall ask to have it printed in the RECORD—I want to know whether I have unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15662) to extend temporarily the time for filing applications for letters patent, for taking actions in the United States Patent Office with respect thereto, for the reviving and reinstatement of applications for letters patent, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk the Revised Statutes of the United States and ask the Secretary to read section 4887, which is the basis of this whole proceeding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 4887. No person shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent be declared invalid, by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented in a foreign country, unless the same has been introduced in public use in the United States for more than two years prior to the application. But every patent granted for an invention which has been previously patented in a foreign country shall be so limited as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent, or, if there be more than one, at the same time with the one having the shortest term, and in no case shall it be in force more than 17 years.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the pending bill extends the provisions of that section. The Senate passed a bill somewhat similar to this on June 19, 1918—S. 3524—but it did not get through the House.

I ask that the testimony of the Commissioner of Patents contained in the House report which I have sent to the desk, and also the House report itself, be printed in the RECORD in connection with what I have said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

Mr. NOLAN, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 15662):

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15662) to extend temporarily the time for filing application for letters patent, for taking actions in the United States Patent Office with respect thereto; for the reviving and reinstatement of applications for letters patent, and for other purposes, respectfully report that they have had the same under consideration and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill H. R. 15662 is a committee substitute for H. R. 13681, introduced April 19, 1920, at the request of the then Commissioner of Patents, Hon. James T. Newton.

Hearings were held on this measure, at which time a large number of people interested in the passage of this measure appeared before the committee. Among them the Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Whitehead; former Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Newton; Mr. Otto R. Barnett, Monadnock Block, Chicago, Ill.; Mr. William S. Pritchard, Mr. Thomas E. Robertson, chairman of the committee on laws and rules of the American Patent Law Association; Mr. John H. Brickenstein, Washington, D. C.; Mr. Wilson J. Vance, New York, representing the Azrec Yarn Spinning & Manufacturing Co.; Mr. Felix Stern, of Chicago, Ill.; Mr. William W. White, editor and publisher of the Patent and Trade Mark Review, New York City; Mr. W. A. Darby, New York City; and a number of other gentlemen, all in favor of the passage of the measure, but suggesting certain modifications. At the request of the Patents Committee, these gentlemen held a meeting and submitted certain amendments, which have been incorporated in the bill H. R. 15662 and reported to the House favorably.

Summed up, the following statement by Mr. Whitehead, then Commissioner of Patents, gives the substance of the bill as it relates to sections 1, 2, and 3:

"STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT F. WHITEHEAD, COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

"Mr. WHITEHEAD. The first three sections of the bill were drafted on the lines of sections 307 and 308 of the peace treaty to carry into effect the provisions under which patents which had lapsed or which could not be availed of during the war could be taken advantage of. Foreign countries have granted extensions, have made rules or regulations under which extensions were granted.

"My information is (not official) that in certain countries our citizens have been granted extensions, and in certain other countries they have not because we have made no provision for granting extensions to the citizens of those countries.

"Section 4887 of the Revised Statutes provides at the present time for what is known as the right of priority; that is, it provides that an application filed in this country within 12 months after the filing of an application in a foreign country shall have the same force and effect as though application had been filed in this country on the same day as the application was filed in the foreign country, provided it was filed within 12 months from that date. That 12 months is usually referred to as the period of priority, or, as is referred to in here, the right of priority.

"During the war it was impossible in many instances for applications to be filed within that period, and the first clause of this section provides that priority which had not expired on the 1st day of August, 1914—that is, where the 12 months was running at that time—or which had arisen since that date—that is, where the foreign application has been filed since that date—should be extended to six months from the passage of this act. That period of six months from the passage of the act was taken because article 308 provided for six months for the going into force of the treaty, which date is fixed by the treaty itself as being the date when the treaty had been ratified by Germany on the one hand and three of the principal allied and associated powers on the other. My understanding is that that date was the 10th of January, 1920; so your period of six months, according to that, has really run out.

"Certain of the European countries subsequently entered into a treaty in which they made arrangements along this same line, fixing the time as from the 30th of September, I think it is, in 1920, to make the six months expire the 30th of March, 1921. This treaty also provided that that right should be extended to favor citizens or subjects of countries which have extended, or which shall extend within that period of six months, substantial reciprocal privileges to citizens of those countries.

"So far as the citizens of this country are concerned, the important thing in this bill is to enable them to revive their lapsed patents, or to get these rights of priority in the foreign countries; and my understanding is that there are numbers of cases in which rights of American citizens have lapsed and which can be restored only by the passage of some reciprocal legislation.

"The question was raised by one or two people as to whether the first section of the bill would apply in cases where the patents had already been granted in this country—not in the case where the patent had been granted particularly and rights were pending, but where patents had been granted. I have proposed an amendment, or I will propose an amendment, to make it specifically apply to that case. The question was raised in view of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Cameron Septic Tank Co. against the people of Knoxville, in which there was discussion as to whether certain phases of private property would apply to patents already granted. So I see no objection to making that clear, and for the same reason they suggested that throughout the bill the word 'validated' be added after 'patents granted' in certain places, not to take care of any new patents which may be granted hereafter, but patents which have been granted and which are validated by the bill."

Sections 4 and 5 are supplementary in reference to the filing of applications.

Section 6 provides for the protection of those persons who served abroad during the war with either the civil or military branches of the Government and gives them the same rights of priority with respect to their inventions as if they had been made in the United States, and extends the time for this protection for six months from the passage of this act.

Section 7 protects the Government from any action by an alien enemy regarding the use of any patent or process used by the Government during the war.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, this can be made a long story if anybody wants to make it long. I think the Senate will understand the situation when the Secretary reads the bill, and I shall not attempt to make any speech about it. I am doing what I am doing at the urgent request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the chairman of the Senate Committee on Patents, who is detained at his home by illness. If, after the Secretary has read the bill, Senators want to ask any questions, I shall do my best to answer them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does any Senator desire the bill read?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the bill should be read, not because I want to hear it, but because I think it is an important matter. If the Senate is willing to pass it without its being read, I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does any Senator desire it read?

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have the bill read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the rights of priority provided by section 4887 of the Revised Statutes, for the filing of applications for patent for inventions and designs, which rights had not expired on the 1st day of August, 1914, or which rights have arisen since the 1st day of August, 1914, shall be, and the same are hereby, extended until the expiration of a period of six months from the passage of this act in favor of the citizens of the United States or citizens or subjects of all countries which have extended, or which now extend, or which within said period of six months shall extend substantially reciprocal privileges to citizens of the United States, and such extension shall apply to applications upon which patents have been granted, as well as to applications now pending or filed within the period herein: Provided, That such extension shall in no way furnish a basis of claim against the Government of the United States: Provided further, That such extension shall in no way affect the right of any citizen of the United States, who, before the passage of this act, was bona fide in possession of any rights in patents or applications for patent conflicting with rights in patents granted or validated by reason of such extension, to exercise such rights by itself or himself personally, or by such agents, or licensees, as derived their rights from it, or him, before the passage of this act, and such persons shall not be amenable to any action for infringement of any patent granted or validated by reason of such extension.

A patent shall not be refused on an application coming within the provisions of this act, nor shall a patent granted on such application be held invalid by reason of the invention having been patented or described in any printed publication or in public use or on sale in the United States prior to the filing of the application, unless such patent or publication or such public use or sale was prior to the filing of the foreign application upon which the right of priority is based.

SEC. 2. That the time now fixed by law for the payment of any fee or for the taking of any action with respect to an application for patent, which time had not expired on August 1, 1914, or which commenced after August 1, 1914, is hereby extended until the expiration of one year from the passage of this act, without the payment of extension fees or other penalty in favor of the citizens or subjects of countries which have extended, now extend, or shall extend during a period of one year from the passage of this act substantially reciprocal privileges to citizens of the United States, provided that no extension herein shall confer such privileges on the citizens or subjects of a foreign country for a longer term than the term during which such privileges are conferred by such foreign country on the citizens of the United States, but nothing in this act shall give any right to reopen interference proceedings where final hearing before the examiner of interferences has taken place.

SEC. 3. That no patent granted or validated by reason of the extensions provided for in sections 1 and 2 of this act shall abridge or otherwise affect the right of any citizen of the United States, or his agent or agents, or his successor in business, to continue any manufacture, use, or sale commenced before the passage of this act by such citizen, nor shall the continued manufacture, use, or sale by such citizen, or the use or sale of the devices resulting from such manufacture or use constitute an infringement.

SEC. 4. That all applications for patent filed since August 1, 1914, and prior to June 15, 1920, which were executed by an agent of the applicant, and in which a petition, specification, and oath, signed by the inventor, or his executor or administrator, had been filed or shall have been filed within a period of one year from the passage of this act, and the patents granted on such applications, shall have the same force and effect as if the papers signed by the inventor, or his executor or administrator, had been filed on the date on which the papers signed by the agent were filed.

SEC. 5. That all applications for patent filed since August 1, 1914, in which the oath was executed before or authenticated by a consular officer, or other representative qualified to administer oaths, of a Government acting in the interest of the Government of the United States, shall have the same force and effect as if said oath had been executed by the applicant before a consular officer of the United States.

SEC. 6. That where an invention was made by a person while serving abroad, during the war, with the forces of the United States, civil or military, the inventor thereof shall be entitled, in interference and other proceedings arising in connection with such invention, to the same rights of priority with respect of such invention as if the same had been made in the United States, and where an application became abandoned or forfeited, during the time the applicant was serving with the forces of the United States, by reason of his failure to take action or pay a fee within the time now required by law, such action may be taken, or the fee paid, within six months from the passage of this act.

SEC. 7. That no claim shall be made or action brought in respect of the use since August 1, 1914, up to the passage of this act, by the Government of the United States, or by any persons acting on behalf of, or under contract with, or with the assent of the Government of the United States or of Governments or their representatives associated with the United States, under any patent rights owned in whole or in part since August 1, 1914, by an alien enemy, nor in respect of the use of any process during such period, or the sale, offering for sale, or use, at any time, of any products, articles, or apparatus whatsoever manufactured during such period to which such patent rights applied.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall affect any act done by virtue of the special measures taken during the war under legislative, executive, or administrative authority of the United States in regard to the rights of an enemy, or ally of an enemy, as defined by the trading with the enemy act of October 6, 1917, in patents for inventions and designs.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER THE RIO GRANDE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce to report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 15769) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Rio Grande, between the cities of Del Rio, Tex., and Las Vacas, Mexico, and I submit a report (Rept. No. 814) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Del Rio and Las Vacas Bridge Co., a corporation organized and created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto over the Rio Grande between the cities of Del Rio, Tex., and Las Vacas, Mexico, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the consent of the proper authorities of the Republic of Mexico shall have been obtained before said bridge shall be built or commenced.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIRECTORS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 11307) to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill proposes to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes in relation to the qualification of directors of national banks. Under the present law not more than 25 per cent of the directors of national banks can live outside the State. The bill amends the statute so that they may live outside the State if living within 50 miles of the place where the bank is located. It has passed the House, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5146. Every director must, during his whole term of service, be a citizen of the United States, and at least three-fourths of the directors must have resided in the State, Territory, or District in which the association is located, or within 50 miles of the location of the office of the association, for at least one year immediately preceding their election, and must be residents of such State or within a 50-mile territory of the location of the association during their continuance in office. Every director must own in his own right at least 10 shares of the capital stock of the association of which he is a director, unless the capital of the bank shall not exceed $25,000, in which case he must own in his own right at least 5 shares of such capital stock. Any director who ceases to be the owner of the required number of shares of the stock, or who becomes in any other manner disqualified, shall thereby vacate his place."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF SHARON, PA.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10598) for the relief of the First National Bank of Sharon, Pa. It is a House bill, having passed the House.

The nature of the case is that a certificate of indebtedness of the United States amounting to $10,000 was destroyed, and the bill authorizes the Treasury Department to pay the certificate without presentation. The bill is drawn in the usual way, requiring that a bond shall be given to the United States in double the amount of the certificate, with sureties to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. Would not the Senator just as soon wait until the morning business is closed, and call up the bill then?

Mr. KNOX. If it provokes any discussion, I will withdraw it. It can be passed in less time than we can talk about it, if there is no objection to it.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem certificate of indebtedness of the United States of America, No. 3240, of the denomination of $10,000, of the issue dated April 10, 1918, and maturing July 9, 1918, with interest from April 10, 1918, to July 9, 1918, in favor of the First National Bank, Sharon, Pa., without presentation of said certificate, the certificate of indebtedness having been lost or destroyed: Provided, That the said First National Bank of Sharon, Pa., shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of said certificate of indebtedness of the United States of America in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost or destroyed certificate of indebtedness hereinbefore described.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOMINATIONS OF EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. FLETCHER. Some days ago, as Senators will recall, the President sent to the Senate a number of nominations for postmasters, among them the names of some former service men, and widows of former service men. A resolution of the Senate was passed calling on the Postmaster General to furnish a list of those nominations, and that list was furnished and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 5. The list of the former service men and widows of former service men appointed as postmasters appears on pages 2621, 2622, and 2623 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that, as in open executive session, those nominations be confirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

LOUISA FROW.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3129) for the relief of Louisa Frow.

Mr. SMOOT. I was hoping that we could take the calendar up after the morning business is closed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If the bill provokes any discussion I will withdraw it.

Mr. SMOOT. I object because if we take the calendar up, the bill will be reached in its regular order.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not know whether it will be reached or not. The Senate has just passed a bill for the relief of a bank for the loss of a certificate, and this measure provides for compensating the widow of a man who was killed by a seaplane of the Navy. It is a unanimous favorable report of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. There may be no objection to the bill at all when it comes up in its regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I object.

INTERNATIONAL NAVAL BUILDING PROGRAM.

Mr. BORAH. Is the morning business closed yet?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not yet.

Mr. BORAH. I give notice of a suspension of the rules under Rule XL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be considered given.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to hear it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] gives the following notice:

I hereby give notice that under Rule No. XL, I will move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule No. XVI, in order that I may propose to the act (H. R. 15975), making appropriations for the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, the following amendment:

"The President is authorized and requested to invite the Governments of Great Britain and Japan to send representatives to a conference, which shall be charged with the duty of promptly entering into an understanding or agreement by which the naval building program of each of said Governments, to wit, the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, shall be substantially reduced annually during the next five years to such an extent and upon such terms as may be agreed upon, which understanding or agreement is to be reported to the respective Governments for approval."

OFFICERS OF COAST GUARD CUTTER "TAMPA."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, there were four officers killed in line of duty on the Tampa in Bristol Channel, and at the time they died they were entitled to promotion, but promotion had not gotten to them.

There is on the calendar House joint resolution 215, authorizing the legal heirs of certain officers of the United States Coast Guard who lost their lives when the Coast Guard cutter Tampa was destroyed in Bristol Channel, September 26, 1918, to receive pay and allowances that would have accrued to said officers. The joint resolution appropriates a small amount, the difference in their wages, which amount will go to the widows of the men killed. It has been passed by the House, unanimously reported favorably by the Senate committee, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Will not the Senator let us take up the calendar, and then have the joint resolution acted on?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not often make a request of this kind, but this is a joint resolution relating to four men who died in line of duty in the Bristol Channel on an American ship. The session is about to expire and the joint resolution has not been passed. We have let a bank bill go through this morning and bills for the relief of individuals who are living. If any Senator wants to take the responsibility of saying that justice can not be done to the dead, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection to the joint resolution that I know of.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We could have passed it in less time than we have taken to talk about it.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the appropriate accounting officers are authorized to pay to the legal heirs of the following-named officers of the Coast Guard, late of the Coast Guard cutter Tampa, which was destroyed in Bristol Channel September 26, 1918, the pay and allowances which would have accrued to said officers to and including September 26, 1918, had said officers received and accepted the temporary commissions on the respective dates that they became eligible for advancement, as follows: First Lieutenant of Engineers John Thomas Carr to be a temporary captain of engineers from and including July 1, 1918; Second Lieut. John Farrell McGourty to be a captain from and including July 1, 1918; First Lieut. Roy Ackerman Bothwell to be a temporary captain from and including September 21, 1918; Second Lieut. James Marsden Earp to be a temporary first lieutenant from and including July 1, 1918, and to be a temporary captain from and including September 21, 1918.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent to take up the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with No. 659, where we left off.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Before unanimous consent is given, I want to ask if the bill the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] desires to call up will be included in the order?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it is beyond No. 659.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask the Senator from Utah why he does not ask unanimous consent to take up all the bills on the calendar?

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason is that these bills never would be reached if we did not begin at No. 659. As far as I am concerned, I hope that when the hour of 2 o'clock comes the Senator having the rivers and harbors bill in charge will agree to lay it aside and let us go through the calendar to-day, because it will be perfectly useless to pass any bills which are on the calendar at a later time than to-day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to say that, as far as I am personally concerned, I shall be perfectly willing to ask unanimous consent, when 2 o'clock comes, to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily, in order that we may go through the calendar and take up any of the bills we have passed over that are unobjected to.

Mr. SMOOT. All bills unobjected to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (H. R. 11377) for the relief of Warren V. Howard was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 382) declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be construed as if the war had ended and the present or existing emergency expired was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection, and the joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. STERLING. I do not know what Senator objected, but I hope there will be no objection. This is a House joint resolution, amended by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, and I hope it may be considered and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection; that is the trouble.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to address the Senator who made the objection and ask him to withdraw his objection.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I inquire of the Senator to what the joint resolution pertains?

Mr. STERLING. To all the war-time legislation, or emergency legislation, as it was called, with certain exceptions; and then it provides distinctly for the repeal of section 3 of the espionage act as amended.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Is it a lengthy measure?

Mr. STERLING. No; it is not lengthy.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May we not have it read?

Mr. STERLING. I should like to have it read.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the legislation is important.

Mr. STERLING. I want to suggest a verbal amendment to the joint resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, unanimous consent has not yet been given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. According to the rule, upon a single objection a measure goes over.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to object, but I understand the Lever Act is not included in this joint resolution?

Mr. STERLING. It is excepted from the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. I should want to have it included. At the same time I do not wish to prevent the passage of the joint resolution so far as the other laws are concerned. If unanimous consent is given, I shall attempt to have it included.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have asked that the joint resolution may be read, so that we can be informed as to just what is included in it.

Mr. STERLING. I assume that the Senator from Florida, who made the objection, will not insist upon it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I objected mainly for the reason that I supposed the consideration of the joint resolution would lead to some discussion, and for that reason we would not have time to consider it. I am willing to withdraw the objection, but I think we are going to spend all the forenoon on it.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair announces that he is going to enforce the five-minute rule if the Senate is going to take up such measures.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have hastily looked at the substitute for the House joint resolution, and it is a very important matter. I do not think we can consider it under the rule limiting debate to five minutes. I shall therefore object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A motion to proceed, notwithstanding the objection, would be in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The only reason why I do not make the motion is because there are a number of other measures which we can dispose of to-day. But this joint resolution ought to be disposed of in the next day or two. I do not think there is a more important question now pending than that of getting rid of the war legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is true, but we must be very careful not to be too hasty about the consideration of a joint resolution which is reported as a substitute for the one referred to the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. My request was that we take up the calendar under Rule VIII and consider those bills to which there was no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But a Senator can move to proceed to the consideration of a bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Not after it is objected to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was listening carefully to the Senator from Utah and would have objected if that had been included in his request. I was unwilling to have that limitation put on it.

Mr. SMOOT. I was very careful in putting it that way because I wanted to get through to-day with all the bills on the calendar to which there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the request again. Is there objection to proceeding to the consideration of the calendar, no bill to be considered to which there is an objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14063) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

I wish to say in reference to the bill that it embraces the bill which passed the Senate last May, went over to the House, but which could not be considered by the House because they have had no pension day there of late. Therefore I asked that the House bill, which was on the calendar, be rereferred to the Committee on Pensions, and I attached as an amendment thereto the bill which passed the Senate at the last session.

I will say, while the bill may appear to have a large number of names in it, between one-third and one-half of the names have been stricken out because the parties interested have either died or are included under the general bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the bill, as I understand, is one which is designed for the relief of members of the Regular Army and the Regular Navy. I have not been very conspicuous here as an advocate of pension legislation, but I think that legislation designed for the relief of soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and their widows is entitled to the same consideration at least which is given to pension bills for other classes of military and naval service.

At the last session of Congress several pension bills were passed by the Senate and went to the House. If my information is correct, the House has passed all those bills except the one which covered the class of military service which I have mentioned. This bill is designed to make effective the bill which we passed then, and which will die in the House if this bill is not passed.

I have personal knowledge of one of the items of this pension bill, which I know to be more than meritorious. It gives a small pension of $50 to the widow of a brigadier general who gave his life to the service of his country, and who died leaving practically nothing for her support. In view of the fact that the bill was passed last year by the Senate and failed in the House, I sincerely hope that the Senate will consent to take it up at this time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am in favor of the motion of the Senator from North Dakota and agree with the Senator from Colorado that the bill ought to be disposed of. I wish to ask the Chair, however, in the event the Senator's motion should prevail, after the Senate has acted upon the pension bill would the calendar, under Rule VIII, be the regular order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; before 2 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think, in view of the statement I made awhile ago with reference to the unfinished business, I ought to say that I made the statement with the understanding that we were to proceed with the calendar and consider bills not objected to. I could not agree, at this time at any rate, to ask unanimous consent at 2 o'clock to lay aside the unfinished business if bills are to be taken up on motion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota whether the bill that he proposes now to consider covers Senate Calendar No. 729, Calendar No. 730, and Calendar No. 328?

Mr. McCUMBER. Of the last calendar that is on the Senator's desk to-day.

Mr. KING. I understand the Senator from North Dakota now moves to proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 780, being H. R. 14063.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senator that the bill as now reported contains the items reported by the committee originally, shown by Senate Report No. 760, and there have been added to the bill H. R. 15900 (Rept. 780), and Senate bill 4985 (Rept. 759), and Senate bill 3747 (Rept. 375). It does not contain the others. I do not recall that the Senator mentioned any of the reports which cover the items in this bill.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, and I desire to be put right if I am in error, the items embraced within the bill for which he is now asking consideration were passed upon a former occasion by the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I do not know just what proportion, but a large proportion of them were passed at the last session.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that at the last session we had up Calendar No. 730.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; that is not in this bill.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what items are included within Calendar No. 730? Is that a different list?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no Calendar No. 730. That bill was recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from North Dakota will yield a moment, I understand that he will not press his motion if we can go on with the calendar and dispose of unobjected bills. I understand also that there are a number of Senators who have measures on the calendar that they wish disposed of, and I withdraw my objection to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota, because I do have the Calendar No. 730 before me in a very voluminous report, to what bill it refers?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Calendar No. 730 was disposed of several days ago. It was recommitted to the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. A portion of it is in this bill.

Mr. KING. Then, if I understand the Senator, the bill which we are about to consider if his motion prevails embraces items found within Calendar No. 730?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think that is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator allow me to submit a request for unanimous consent? In view of the statement just made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], I renew the request made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] some time ago.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a motion pending now to proceed to the consideration of a bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And under the rule the motion is not debatable, notwithstanding it has been debated for 10 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that. My object was to expedite the consideration of bills on the calendar and to reach the bill suggested by the Senator from North Dakota. I am satisfied we will reach that bill much more quickly by proceeding with the call of the calendar where we left off on the last occasion when the calendar was considered. Of course, the Senator has the floor, and I can not submit the request unless he yields for that purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. It will take no more time to dispose of the pension bill now. I do not think it would be reached before 2 o'clock under that arrangement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota to proceed to the consideration of House bill 14063.

On a division, the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14063) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not make that request. I think we ought to be advised as to the character of the pension sought. There are hundreds of items here.

Mr. ROBINSON. That settles it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. To read the bill will require practically the entire day and prevent the consideration of other bills on the calendar. Of course, if Senators desire to accomplish that purpose they can do it, but there are a large number of bills on the calendar that have never received any consideration. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. KING. What the Senator states, perhaps, may be true as to the length of time that would be consumed in reading the bill, but, Mr. President, we have passed during the last year a pension bill under which persons who have suffered no disability whatever receive $50 per month and their widows receive large sums.

Mr. McCUMBER. If there are any such cases they are not included in this bill.

Mr. KING. That law is so comprehensive that it seems to me that substantially all who should receive pensions could find relief under it.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Utah is mistaken. This bill covers those who served in the Regular Establishment, none of whom are receiving $50 a month under the law to which the Senator refers. This is not a bill that relates to the veterans of the Civil War, but it relates only to those of other wars and who served in the Regular Establishment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the law to which I have referred carried provisions for the relief of those who served in the Mexican War, and we also passed a bill providing for those who served in the Spanish-American War.

Mr. McCUMBER. None of those are included in this bill.

Mr. KING. Although they may have seen no service they are entitled to $30 per month pension. Now, let me inquire of the Senator, with all of those comprehensive measures which have been enacted, under which we are appropriating more than $200,000,000 annually, and I think the bill this year will carry, perhaps $230,000,000—the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] advises me it will carry $265,000,000—what persons or what classes of individuals should now receive attention and be paid pensions?

Mr. McCUMBER. Those who were not in the Civil War at all; those who were not in the Mexican War; those who derive no benefit whatever under the law to which the Senator has referred under which we granted to the veterans of the Civil War and their dependents certain sums. This bill covers only the Regular Establishment and the Spanish War veterans, but not those of the Civil War.

Mr. KING. May I not inquire of the Senator concerning the Spanish-American War pension bill which we passed if provision was not made that all persons who had been in that war and had served 90 days, notwithstanding they had never left the United States, perhaps, but had only been in an Army camp a few weeks, should be pensioned at $30 per month?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. That is my recollection of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. The pension bill passed at the last session was for the widows of soldiers of the Spanish-American War who had an income of less than $250 per annum.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that the Sells bill, as it was called, grants a pension to those who were in the Spanish-American War regardless of injuries.

Mr. McCUMBER. No. It grants a pension to those who were injured; but that pension ranges from $12 to $30 per month; and it does not cover those who were in the regular service.

Mr. KING. Now, may I inquire of the Senator——

Mr. McCUMBER. I may be mistaken. I am told that I am in error; but the pension, I think, runs from twelve to thirty dollars a month.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that that bill practically covered all who served in the Spanish-American War.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. KING. So we have made provision for those who were in the Spanish-American War, for those who were in the Mexican War, and for those who served in the Civil War. May I inquire of the Senator what other classes are there to be cared for by way of pensions?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Regular Establishment.

Mr. KING. That is, those who are now in the Army?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; those who have been members of the Army from 1865 but who were not in the Spanish-American War and who were not in the World War.

Mr. KING. Then, do I understand the Senator to mean that it is the policy of the Government, regardless of the fact that they have not participated in any war, to grant pensions to those who served in the Army between the close of the Civil War and the breaking out of the Spanish-American War, but who did not participate in either?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; if they were injured in the service.

Mr. KING. May I inquire what wars there were between the close of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War in which any injuries could have been suffered?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator asks me as to those who were not in any war, and I say that if they suffered any disability by reason of their service the bill covers them.

Mr. KING. Then, do I understand the Senator to announce that it is the policy of the Government to grant a pension to every person who has been in the Army, though such person may never have been in any military undertaking or expedition?

Mr. McCUMBER. It has always been the policy of the Government to do that.

Mr. KING. Persons who enlisted 20 or 30 years ago for a year and immediately after their service went back to private life and have been engaged in private activities from that time until the present are to be pensioned?

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator's statement imply that?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; if a person was injured in the service, he would be entitled to a pension.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator aver that all of the persons named in the pending bill of 112 pages come within the class that would be covered by the statement just made by the Senator?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. KING. Take, for instance, the first name which my eye falls upon in the bill, on page 29:

The name of Richard J. Weaver, dependent father of John T. Weaver, late of Company M, First Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

What service did John T. Weaver render that would entitle his father to a pension during the remainder of his life?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will turn to the report to obtain that information. The report is very voluminous, but I find in connection with the case referred to by the Senator the following statement:

H. R. 11787. Richard J. Weaver, Hillsboro, Ky., dependent father of John T. Weaver, who served in the Regular Establishment, Company M, First United States Infantry, from January 13, 1910, to February 9, 1911, when he died from pulmonary tuberculosis contracted in service and line of duty. He had prior service which was continuous almost from April 15, 1901, to December 30, 1909. (F. O. 985611.)

The claimant filed a claim for pension as soldier's dependent father April 27, 1912. The reviewer approved the claim for admission but the re-reviewer would not concur and it was rejected on the ground that claimant, soldier's father, was not dependent within the meaning of the law, as he was in possession of some property and was still able to earn an adequate support.

The evidence submitted with the claim showed that the soldier was never married and that his mother died in 1889, that claimant owned a farm worth about $600, being disqualified for work about two-thirds of the time, and that he was about 56 years of age (now 64), and that he had an invalid wife to provide for, who is now 67 years of age.

With this bill claimant files his sworn statement to the effect that his property is valued at about $350 and that he has an income of about $100 per annum. Lay witnesses verify his statement as to property and income and further testify that he has no children or other relatives who contribute to his support, and that he has no income except from what little he can earn on his small farm. A physician testifies that he is totally unable to perform any manual labor by reason of rheumatism and disease of heart.

A pension of $12 per month is recommended.

That is the report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, then, if I understand the Senator, we are committing the Government to this sort of a policy—that as to every person who has served in the Army, no matter how limited that service may have been, and though it may have been entirely in time of peace, if he dies his widow or dependents shall receive a pension if it may be averred that the soldier received injuries or incurred some disability while in the service which proximately contributed to his death.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the law now. We are not changing the law; we are not creating any new law. The only question in this case was whether the soldier came under the law. The Pension Bureau first found that the father was dependent, but on a rehearing it was decided the other way. Additional evidence was submitted to the Committee on Pensions of the House, upon which that committee acted, in which action the Senate committee concurred, to the effect that the father was dependent and that he should receive the $12 provided by law.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether pensions would be granted under existing law to persons who died after a few months of service in times of peace and whose death could not by any possibility be traced to their service?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; not in the Regular Establishment.

Mr. KING. Are there any other establishments under which in cases of the character to which I have just referred pensions would be granted?

Mr. McCUMBER. In the case of a veteran of the Civil War the widow would be entitled to a pension or the dependent child or mother and father would be entitled to a pension.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator, this bill is merely for the purpose of interpreting existing law more liberally in behalf of pension claims than the officials of the Government have interpreted the law.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the bill does not interpret the law at all. The bill, so far as it relates to this particular item, finds that the father is dependent and is entitled to a pension under the terms of the existing law. It is the finding of a fact rather than the construction of the law.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator, the officials of the Government have found differently from the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. They have found both ways; they have found with the committee and they have found contrary to the finding of the committee; but the conclusion of the committee was that the father was dependent, and the evidence which sustains the committee has just been read to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that it is a wise thing, after we have established tribunals for the purpose of hearing evidence and deciding controversies and have authorized them to reach conclusions, for the legislative branch of the Government in an ex parte way to overrule their decisions and to legislate for the purpose of overturning their decisions?

Mr. McCUMBER. It has been done, I will not say thousands of times, but probably hundreds of thousands of times. I do not think that even the finding of a bureau here should preclude a committee of the Senate from finding differently from the bureau. I think practically every day in our legislation we are overruling their decisions and their views in a great many matters, and I think the Senator has joined with the other Members of the Senate in overruling their conclusions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I confess that the decisions of bureaus and executive officials do not have very much sanctity, so far as I am concerned. Prima facie, the decisions of many of these bureaus are wrong, judging from the multitudinous efforts which have been made, and successfully made, to overturn them. Yet where we have set up a Pension Bureau, and the Pension Bureau, so far as I can determine, has acted wisely and with due consideration in the determination of the cases which have been brought before it, it seems to me that it is a rather unfortunate precedent to overturn them, and we find evidences of the results of that course in the constant importunities made to the House and to the Senate to pass private and special pension bills.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say to the Senator that it is only in cases where the committee finds that the bureau has acted unwisely that it overturns its decisions. Remember that the action of Congress does not affect a decision in one case, perhaps, out of one hundred thousand that is passed upon by the bureau.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is so seldom that Government bureaus act in the interest of economy and fail to respond to demands which are made for contributions from the Treasury of the United States, that when they do take that course I am inclined to follow them and to assume that there must be merit in their decision, because the Senator knows the disposition on the part of Government officials to grant, and grant still more, and to contribute still more from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Take the case that the Senator has just brought up. I read the testimony. From that testimony which I read, would the Senator draw the conclusion that the father was dependent? If he would, he must agree with the committee. If he would not, of course he would disagree with the committee. Now, it is assumed that the committee has acted fairly and justly in the matter.

Mr. KING. Of course, it depends upon the construction which is placed upon the word "dependent." I fancy that if the view of the Senator, as I understand it, should prevail, the majority of fathers and mothers would be found to be dependent because of the lack of any great resources and the fact that work is required on their part for sustenance, so that they are in a sense dependent.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have an idea that in most cases where the son is over 65 years of age, which would probably bring the father over 85 years of age, the father would be more or less dependent.

Mr. KING. Of course, this legislation will mean that within the next 25 years the Government of the United States will be compelled to pay not $1,000,000,000, but, in my opinion, the Government of the United States during the next 25 years will be compelled to pay from $20,000,000,000 to $30,000,000,000 in pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER. In how many years?

Mr. KING. In 20 or 25 years.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the figure is somewhat exaggerated. There is no question but that they will pay a large sum.

Mr. KING. With the demands that are being made and with the statements which are attributed to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance, the able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], it seems to me the statement I have made is in the interest of verbal exactitude rather than exaggeration. I think the total will, perhaps, exceed that stupendous sum, so that the cost of the war is just beginning instead of being nearly over.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am satisfied that during the next 25 years the American people will be taxed to the limit to pay the costs resulting from this war and the other appropriations and extravagances of Congress. There will not be much question about it. We will pay all we can.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator how many items there are in this bill and what is the amount that it will cost the Government per annum? I have examined the report, and it furnishes no information on the subject.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think there are in the neighborhood of 500 items, with an average of about $12 each, as nearly as we can estimate it offhand, without counting them.

Mr. KING. The average, I think, if the Senator will examine the report, will be found to be very greatly in excess of $12.

Mr. McCUMBER. Possibly $15.

Mr. KING. I find that most of them are $17, $20, and $25.

Mr. McCUMBER. Most of them, I think, are $12.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill. I have been opposed to a number of the pension bills which we have passed. It seems to me that we are pursuing a policy which will impose upon the American people burdens that will be almost intolerable. We talk about the burdens imposed upon Germany under her military system. Those burdens are light in comparison to the burdens which the American Congress is placing and will continue to place upon the shoulders of the men who toil in this Republic.

Mr. President, we are pursuing a course which within a few years will result in a pension list so large that no country in the world has ever dreamed of approximating it. We will have upon our pension rolls within the next five years not 1,000,000, but 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 of names, and the burdens resting upon the American people will not be $200,000,000 or $300,000,000, as they were last year and year before, but they will annually exceed $1,000,000,000, possibly $2,000,000,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think the bills that we pass in special legislation will amount on an average now to a difference of $200,000 a year. Some time ago I had occasion to make the estimate, and the amount was about $225,000 then; but the number that we are now putting through the two branches of Congress is much less than we put through at that time. What I mean by that is, that much is in addition to what is being paid without the special legislation.

Mr. KING. Under general appropriation bills we are appropriating substantially two hundred and fifty or two hundred and sixty million dollars, and that does not include any of the pensions that may have resulted and will result from the World War.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; there are some of the pensions of the World War within those figures.

Mr. KING. Very few.

Mr. McCUMBER. All those that were injured in any way were entitled to a pension prior to the time that we enacted the war risk insurance law.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that in 1917 the general pension bill—that was before the World War—carried substantially $220,000,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. KING. Since then we have increased the pensions I do not remember how many millions of dollars.

Mr. McCUMBER. Anyway, enough so that it now amounts to $265,000,000.

Mr. KING. And we added to that general bill what was called the Sells bill, providing for those who were in the Spanish-American War, so that those general pension acts carry appropriations aggregating about $265,000,000 annually. Then, in addition, appropriations are being made, and larger ones will be made in the future, to cover cases arising out of the World War. So I can only repeat to my friend, the Senator, that he is participating in legislation which will impose upon the American people within a very short time pensions, in my opinion, of approximately $750,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 per annum.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, we can get little comfort out of deaths; but the soldiers of the Civil War, for whom the vast amount of pensions is being paid out, can last but a very few years longer. I think now they are all getting along about 80 years of age, while the widows, of course, are somewhat younger; but a few years will remove entirely this vast sum of, say, two hundred and forty or two hundred and fifty million dollars that is being paid to the veterans of the Civil War and their dependents.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Dakota will permit me as to that, I should just like to add that the deaths which occur annually now are sufficient to remove from the pension rolls enough to take care of half a dozen such bills as the one which is now under consideration. Not only that, but the Senator from Utah speaks of the $265,000,000, and then to that he adds the so-called Sells bill, the Spanish-American War bill, this bill, and various other bills, as though the expenditures under them were added to the total of $265,000,000. They are not. The $265,000,000 includes everything. It is the gross amount.

Mr. KING. If I conveyed that impression, I did not so intend. When I stated the maximum amount of $265,000,000, I intended to state, and think I did state, that that embraced the pensions that came under the general legislation; and in the general legislation I included the Sells bill as well as the bill which we passed at the last session providing $50 per month for the veterans of the Civil War.

Mr. NEW. The $265,000,000 was the gross amount.

Mr. KING. But let me say to the Senator from Indiana that there appears to be no diminution. When President Garfield was a great factor in public life, just before he became President, he made the prophecy that the pension roll would never exceed, as I recall, $27,000,000 per annum. President Garfield was a great statesman, but he did not have in mind the voracious appetites of the American people for pensions. Twenty-seven million dollars! Why, we have swollen those figures until, as stated by the Senator, the appropriations under general legislation will carry $265,000,000, and then the appropriations directly and indirectly from the World War for the coming fiscal year I think will aggregate three or four hundred million dollars.

Mr. McCUMBER. The time of which the Senator speaks was the good old time when we used to think in pennies and make appropriations in hundreds of dollars. We are now thinking in hundreds of dollars and making appropriations in millions.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that some of us are interested in some important legislation upon the calendar, and probably no other opportunity will be afforded to consider it; and I trust these general discussions may be postponed until some other time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thank the Senator for his good and timely suggestion.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is a request pending to that effect, and it has been pending for some time. I submitted the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the Chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the bill.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota, who has this bill in charge, a question? This is one of the regular pension bills, I understand?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is.

Mr. HARRISON. Can the Senator tell the Senate what is the status now of the soldiers' bonus bill, which is pending in the Finance Committee? I noticed in the papers several days ago that the Senator from North Dakota gave a statement to the press saying, in substance, that he expected the Finance Committee to report out that bill before the 4th of March, and also that the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], gave out a similar statement. I saw, too, where a delegation of the representatives of the American Legion conferred with the Senator from Pennsylvania and, I think, with the Senator from North Dakota, and they left here under the impression, at least, that the bill would probably be reported to the Senate. I am wondering if the committee is going to report it, if they intend to press it, and if the Senator has any idea that between now and the 4th of March to get any action on that bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. I had hoped to report it two or three days ago, but I did not want to report it without presenting to the Senate something definite as to exactly what it would cost and over what years that cost would be spread, in order that the Senate might fully understand exactly what they were voting for, and also to cover the assertion often made that it will throw a billion or two immediately upon us for payment. I found from the testimony which was taken that it was so indefinite that it was almost impossible to present from the facts before us an exact statement of just what it means to the soldiers and sailors and what it means to the Treasury.

I immediately began my work with the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Treasury Department, and I am now making out my tables, and I hope to have them completed, with the assistance of the actuary of the Treasury Department, and to be able to present the facts fully and clearly to the Committee on Finance by to-morrow. Then I hope it will be reported into the Senate, and, if possible, passed at this session.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand from what the Senator says that the committee has not yet taken final action on this bill, but they have left it to the Senator from North Dakota to get up certain facts to report back to the Finance Commitee.

Mr. McCUMBER. To ascertain certain facts and report to the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Finance Committee has not yet taken definite action to report the bill out?

Mr. McCUMBER. They have not, and will not, of course, until I get the final figures. I can only give my conclusion as one, but from the talk I have had with other members, in all probability as soon as I can present the facts the bill will be reported out.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator thinks he will make his report to the Finance Committee to-morrow?

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope to be able to do it.

Mr. HARRISON. To-morrow will be the 25th.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am doing the very best I possibly can to get the figures. I have not lost a moment of time since the matter was turned over to me to get a statement.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure the Senator has been very diligent.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is more difficult than I anticipated.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator has more knowledge of this question than anyone else, and I am seeking real information, because there is no use giving the impression to the country that Congress is going to do something if it is impossible to accomplish it. The Senator thinks, then, from the conferences in the committee, that they will take favorable action on some bill touching the soldiers' bonus?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think so.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not think, however, whatever favorable action they may take, that it is possible to pass the bill during this session of Congress?

Mr. McCUMBER. I can not say that. I hope we will be able to do it.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand. I hope that, too. The Senator and myself are together on that.

Mr. McCUMBER. But it must be subject to some doubt, of course. However, we will have had our facts ready, and we will meet again within a month; and if it so be that we can not get it through both branches during this session, we will be able to take it up immediately at the beginning of the next session. I hope we can pass it at this session.

Mr. HARRISON. But under the peculiar circumstances existing now, Congress adjourning on the 4th of March, and all legislation dying with the expiration of this Congress, there only remaining now eight or nine days, it looks as though it would be impossible to pass any soldiers' bonus legislation at this time, does it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not impossible, of course, but it looks doubtful about getting it through at this session. However, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if it is reported out of the committee it will be reported out without any tax provision whatever, so as to make it an obligation which must be met in taxes in the future, and imposing upon the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House the obligation to make proper provision to take care of that, together with the other expenses of the Government.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senate Finance Committee should take that action and strike out the policy incorporated to raise money to pay the bonuses, that would change the bill in such a way that if the Senate should pass it then the bill would go to conference (unless the House, of course, concurred in what the Senate did) and that would delay the matter probably until after the 4th of March, and there would be no legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. But, inasmuch as we would not in all probability change the bonus feature, and inasmuch as we are to meet in a month, or a little over a month, to consider the subject of finances to meet the requirements of the Government in the future, I can see no reason why the House should not accept the amendment to defer the fixing of the method by which it is to be paid until we decide that in the final revenue act.

Mr. HARRISON. The House might take just the opposite view.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course they might.

Mr. HARRISON. They might think that they had given full consideration to that question, and had suggested a plan in the bill, and that the way to pass the bill was for the Senate to pass it as the House had passed it. We will take up presently a river and harbor bill. The House passed that bill, and the Senate Commerce Committee just took it as it was, and we will get it just as it passed the House.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will not the Senator let us finish the pending bill before 2 o'clock, when the unfinished business comes up? I ask that in all courtesy, and I hope the Senator will not take up the time with this other matter.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not trying to delay this bill; but the impression has gone to the country, from the chairman of the Finance Committee and from other members of the committee, that the soldiers' bonus bill will be passed during the present session of Congress. That bill has been before the Senate Finance Committee for months and months for action, and these men throughout the country should not be given a false hope and false impression of action by Congress, because we know, under the present parliamentary status, that if that bill is not reported almost immediately to the Senate and passed in the wording passed by the House, it will not become a law. I do not believe, under the present condition of things, and the deferring of this bill for action by the Finance Committee, that it is possible to pass it during this session of Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are a great many people who hope it can not be passed.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that. I merely want to get the right light on the situation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope it will not pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I suppose that at 2 o'clock the Senator from Washington will ask that the Senate proceed with the unfinished business. I have one more of these bills, but I think there is no use asking to have it taken up now, unless the Senator would yield until we should finish it. Therefore I will not move it at this time, but at the first opportunity I will do so.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar, under Rule VIII, beginning with No. 663, and consider only bills to which there is no objection, and at 2 o'clock I shall ask the Senator having the river and harbor bill in charge to temporarily lay it aside.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is practically 2 o'clock now. The request might come now. I did not, however, rise for that purpose. I wish to ask the Senator if the bill he has named is at the point where the call of the calendar was left off the last time it was called.

Mr. SMOOT. It is.

Mr. KENYON. What is the calendar number of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Calendar No. 663, that was to come up this morning following the one last considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The idea is to go ahead with the call of the calendar?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15935) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] if he will not lay aside the unfinished business for the purpose of considering the unanimous-consent agreement which I have already presented.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand the unanimous-consent agreement refers to unobjected bills?

Mr. SMOOT. It does.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senate can proceed in an expeditious way with the unobjected bills, and there is not what might be called unnecessary discussion with reference to them, I am perfectly willing to lay aside the unfinished business for a time and give an opportunity to take up unobjected bills on the calendar. I wish to state, however, that I hope after we go through to the end of the calendar we may go back to Calendar No. 637, a bill which has gone over two or three times and to which I think there will be no objection now.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I hope we can go through the calendar, and then begin at the beginning and go through it up to the point where we began to-day. This is the time to do it if we are going to do it at all. It would do no harm if we spent the balance of the afternoon in that purpose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is probably correct. I shall ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, with the understanding, however, that if any unnecessary discussion is had with reference to any particular bill I shall take the liberty of calling the unfinished business again to the attention of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is therefore in order. The Secretary will report the first business on the calendar.

RELIEF OF DISTRESS ABROAD.

Senate concurrent resolution 35 was announced as the next business on the calendar, and the Senate proceeded to consider it. The concurrent resolution had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Congress of the United States earnestly calls upon the people of the United States to contribute out of their substance to the humanitarian activities in behalf of the needy of the world.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee recommends striking out the preamble. Without objection, the preamble will be stricken out.

INTERNATIONAL DISARMAMENT.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 225) authorizing the President of the United States to advise the Governments of Great Britain and Japan that the Government of the United States is ready to take up with them the question of disarmament, etc., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution was reported with amendments, which will be stated in their order.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The first amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations is, on page 2, in line 8, before the word "disarmament," to insert the word "naval."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment of the committee is, on page 2, in line 9, to strike out the words "quickly coming to an understanding" and insert in lieu thereof the words "promptly entering into a treaty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is on page 2, in line 10, before the word "naval," to strike out the word "building" and insert after the word "naval" the word "building."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is, on page 2, in line 12, before the word "reduced," to insert the word "substantially."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is, in lines 13 and 14, where the committee proposes to strike out "50 per cent of the present estimates or figures," and to insert in lieu thereof "to such an extent and upon such terms as may be agreed upon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I think the joint resolution should be read as reported. I ask that it be so read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the joint resolution as requested.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are a number of Senators absent who have been sent for, and in order that they may all come at once or have a chance to do so, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gay	Kirby	Simmons
Ball	Gerry	Lodge	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Glass	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Gooding	Moses	Smoot
Brandegee	Gore	Myers	Spencer
Calder	Gronna	Nelson	Stanley

Fernald	Kellogg	Robinson	Willis
Fletcher	Kenyon	Sheppard	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Shields

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will read the joint resolution as proposed to be amended by the committee, as requested by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW].

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to advise the Governments of Great Britain and Japan, respectively, that this Government will at once take up directly with their Governments and without waiting upon the action of any other nation the question of naval disarmament, with a view of promptly entering into a treaty by which the naval building programs of each of said Governments, to wit, that of Great Britain, Japan, and the United States, shall be substantially reduced annually during the next five years to such an extent and upon such terms as may be agreed upon.

SEC. 2. That this proposition is suggested by the Congress of the United States to accomplish immediately a substantial reduction of the naval armaments of the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2 the Committee on Foreign Relations propose to strike out lines 16, 17, and 18, in the following words:

Second. That it is the sense of the Congress, in case such an understanding can be had, that it will conform its appropriations and building plans to such agreement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is still in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, has the entire joint resolution been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been read, and it is still as in the Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have read to the Senate the provision of the joint resolution with regard to the suspension of the naval program.

Mr. BORAH. That is not in this joint resolution at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. As I understand, then, the joint resolution deals only with the proposition of entering into a discussion for a reduction of armament?

Mr. BORAH. That is the sole subject of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, this is a joint resolution which has been reported with amendments from the Foreign Relations Committee. The provisions in regard to a specific limitation and requiring future appropriations to conform to any agreement which may be reached have been stricken out. If I am correctly informed, the amendments which have been reported by the committee have been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All of them have been agreed to. The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, some days before this joint resolution was offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] I submitted a resolution for the consideration of the Senate, in substance requesting the President of the United States to appoint a representative to sit with the commission appointed by the council of the League of Nations to devise a plan to be submitted to the several governments looking to a general reduction in armaments.

That contemplated a reduction in the land forces as well as in the naval forces of the various nations. The council of the League of Nations appointed an advisory commission upon naval, military, and air questions, consisting of a representative from each of the eight countries represented in the council of the league, one being an officer of the navy, one an officer of the army, and another an officer of the air forces of the various Governments. They were afterwards instructed to prepare for the consideration of the council a draft of a plan for a general reduction of armaments. In proceeding with that work they were embarrassed, of course, by reason of the fact that the United States was not represented upon the council.

Then an invitation came from the president of the council, through its direction, to the President of the United States, asking that representatives be sent from the United States to sit with the committee thus appointed to consider the plan for a general reduction of armaments. That invitation was declined by the President. The purpose of the resolution introduced by me was to draw out from the Senate, and possibly from the other House, an expression as to whether or not this Government ought to be represented in that connection.

Subsequently, Mr. President, a resolution was considered by one of the committees of the House—and, I believe, by the House itself—requesting the President to request a conference of the leading nations of the earth under the provisions of the act of 1916, looking to the draft of a plan for a general reduction in armaments.

So in addition to the plan proposed by the resolution of the Senator from Idaho for a conference between the three Governments named in the resolution, namely, the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, for a reduction in naval armaments alone, two other propositions are before the Congress, or one branch of the Congress, for consideration, namely, the plan of joining with the commission already appointed by the council of the League of Nations, and now operating, for the purpose of devising a plan for general reduction of armaments, and, second, the extension of an invitation to all of the nations, pursuant to the act of Congress of May, 1916.

Mr. President, I venture to express the view that the appropriate action, the wisest action, to take in the present situation of affairs is to adopt one of the other two plans proposed rather than that offered by the Senator from Idaho. There are two purposes to be subserved in this connection. The one, of course, is to promote the cause of peace, to reduce——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHIPPS in the chair). Under Rule VIII, the time of the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I exceedingly regret that no opportunity is afforded by the way this matter is presented for a real consideration by the Senate of the question that is before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that we are proceeding under Rule VIII, and that there can be no debate on the part of any Senator exceeding five minutes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator certain questions in regard to the matter he is now discussing, and I ask him to answer me in my own time. I ask the Senator if there is anything inconsistent in the adoption of both the resolution of the Senator from Idaho and the resolution of the Senator from Montana? Can he not offer his resolution either as a substitute for or as an amendment by way of addition to the resolution of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should think there would be nothing inconsistent in such action, and it is my purpose, Mr. President, to offer either or both of the resolutions to which I have referred as an amendment to the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho. The Senator from Idaho contemplates operating within a field very much narrower than that contemplated by my resolution or by the resolution which has had the consideration of the committee of the House, although perhaps it is possible to get more speedy action with reference to the subject covered by the resolution of the Senator from Idaho. However, what I desired to say was that the great peril to the peace of the world, in my estimation, arises not from naval armament but from military forces on land. Likewise, Mr. President, only a comparatively small fraction of the horrible burden resting upon the world to-day by reason of military armament arises from the Naval Establishment, the greater burden arising from the land forces. Accordingly, we would proceed but slightly in the direction which everybody has in mind if we simply attempted to secure a reduction in naval armament, and particularly in the building program.

Let me remark that the building program of the United States contemplates during the ensuing year the expenditure of something like $160,000,000. I am not advised just exactly the amount reported for building purposes by the Naval Affairs Committee, as I was unable to attend its session this morning, but if the building program should be cut in two the saving in expenditure to the Government of the United States would not be in excess of $100,000,000, while the total estimates for the Navy during the current year run to something like $679,000,000; in other words, so far as the United States is concerned, the saving, should we be successful in negotiating a treaty such as is proposed by the resolution of the Senator from Idaho, would not result in any case in excess of $100,000,000.

Mr. President, we shall accomplish at least that much saving by the reduction that is proposed in our Army. The reduction from 280,000 men to 175,000 men will accomplish a saving which is estimated at about $1,000 per man. So, while I shall be very glad to enter into any kind of arrangement that, without imperiling our national defense, at the same time will accomplish a saving of $100,000,000, it occurs to me that in a total of appropriations that will perhaps amount to $1,000,000,000 or thereabouts for the current year for the Army and Navy, a saving of $100,000,000 is a relatively small amount.

The great trouble with the world to-day is that it is endeavoring to carry a burden in the way of military establishments that is entirely beyond its capacity to carry. Accordingly I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nevada has expired.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have an amendment to offer. To the joint resolution I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to add the following:

Second. That the President be, and he hereby is, requested to express to the council of the League of Nations the earnest desire of the Government of the United States to cooperate with the commission so by the said council appointed and with the said council in the formulation of plans looking to a general reduction of armaments, for submission to the several Governments for their consideration and action, and that he be, and he hereby is, further requested promptly to designate with due authority such representative.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Montana has offered that amendment. I know that the Senator from Montana is entirely sincere in his desire to accomplish something in the way of disarmament, and the difference between us lies in the method by which to accomplish that result.

I am very clear in my own mind that this amendment attached to this particular resolution would destroy the effect of the resolution which I have had the honor to offer.

As an illustration, for instance, the representatives of France declared at the Geneva Conference that she was not in a position to consider the question of disarmament at this time if it involved the question of land disarmament, and that they would not even vote for the principle of disarmament under present conditions. If, therefore, we include universal disarmament, or disarmament by land as well as by sea, of course it sounds the death knell of the movement at this time by reason of the condition in Europe, which France says makes it absolutely impossible for her to consider the question. We can afford to lead, and in order to lead we must limit our present program to naval disarmament.

The resolution which I have offered had in view the sole question of seeing if we could not arrive at an understanding which would prevent naval competitive building from this time on, dealing with one phase of the subject. The only three nations now engaged in naval building of any moment whatever are the United States, Great Britain, and Japan. As said by Admiral Huse in New York night before last, in a speech which he made, the only three nations which have any navy whatever of any moment or consideration are the three nations which I have just named. There is no doubt but that these three powers are really girding themselves for a race of naval supremacy. It is perfectly apparent, it is perfectly plain, to those who have studied the situation, that that is the real condition of affairs at this time. Let us make haste and deal with this situation.

Mr. President, I simply desire to bring those three powers together for the purpose of effectuating an understanding and an agreement by which the naval race which is now being begun may be stopped. If universal disarmament could be had, as suggested by the Senator from Montana, it would be infinitely better; but it is perfectly apparent that at this time we can not make any progress in that respect. If the Senator from Montana would offer his resolution upon its own strength, disassociated from this resolution, of course it would receive tremendous support; but it occurs to me that if we can make progress in stopping naval competition we will have accomplished a vast amount along the line of disarmament and for the peace of the world.

If there is any conflict within the time of the Senator from Montana and myself in which the United States shall be engaged, the probabilities are that it will arise out of the naval competition which is now about to begin.

I want to deal with the situation as it really confronts us and deal with it in a practical way. We must have a beginning, and the beginning is to stop this naval race which is fraught with all kinds of danger.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Idaho has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this resolution is going to lead to discussion——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have the floor, and the Senator will please permit me to occupy it for just a moment.

I do not desire to speak further than to reply to the implied suggestion of my friend the Senator from Idaho that the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana is inconsistent with his proposal.

The Senator from Montana does not seek, by the amendment which he has offered, to change in any respect the proposal of the Senator from Idaho, as modified by the committee and by the Senate in Committee of the Whole. If the amendment of the Senator from Montana is agreed to, the proposal of the Senator from Idaho will stand unchanged. The adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana has this advantage: While it detracts in no respect from anything contained in the resolution of the Senator from Idaho, it permits this Government to go forward in an effort to secure general disarmament or reduction of armament, while the resolution of the Senator from Idaho is limited to an effort to procure an agreement to reduce naval armament on the part of Japan, Great Britain, and the United States.

It may be desirable in the interest of the United States that Great Britain, Japan, and the United States suspend the enlargement of their navies. It is also desirable, as every Senator will concede, that all the nations of the world combine, if they can be induced to do so, to reduce other forms of armament. I ask the Senator from Idaho how the adoption of the amendment as an additional provision can detract in any respect from the value of his proposal, if it has value? The authority in the resolution of the Senator from Idaho vested in this Government to propose partial naval disarmament to Japan and Great Britain is not changed in any particular. This Government, if the amendment of the Senator from Montana is agreed to, will still have that power, but it will have the additional and far more important power, considered from the standpoint of the interest of this Nation and of the world, to say to Germany and Austria and France and Italy and Russia and all the other Governments of this earth, "Notwithstanding the fact that we declined to enter into the League of Nations, we are willing to take the initiative in a program of general disarmament"; and if they refuse to enter upon that program the United States will not be prevented from carrying out the purposes of the resolution of the Senator from Idaho.

Ah, Mr. President, this resolution in the form that it comes to the Senate from the committee is a poor substitute, a subterfuge, in part, for the proposal which the Senate rejected some months ago, that this Government, in consonance with the other nations of the world, advance abreast in the march of progress and of civilization to the limitation of all armaments by common agreement among the nations. The Senator from Idaho more than any other Senator is responsible directly for the failure of the United States to proceed in agreement with other nations for disarmament.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I object to the further consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the joint resolution will be passed over.

TRANSPORTATION FOR DESTITUTE DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.

The bill (S. 4889) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish free transportation and subsistence from Europe to the United States for certain destitute discharged soldiers and their wives and children was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided further, That the authority conferred by this act shall cease and determine six months after the approval thereof.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to furnish transportation on United States Army transports from Europe to the United States, and subsistence en route, to any person who served in the Army of the United States and was honorably discharged therefrom in Europe, and who is now in Europe and is or becomes destitute, and to the wife and children of such person: Provided, That if such person, his wife or children, are not at a port of embarkation of United States Army transports the Secretary of War is further authorized to furnish transportation to such person, his wife or children, to such port of embarkation and subsistence en route: Provided further, That all such transportation and subsistence shall be furnished without cost to such person, his wife or children: Provided further, That the authority conferred by this act shall cease and determine six months after the approval thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I hope no objection will be made to this bill. We found a recommendation from the War Department, insisted upon by the Secretary and those in authority who knew, that there ought to be an appropriation made authorizing them to bring home certain members of the American Expeditionary Forces, or, rather, men who had been demobilized on the other side of the ocean. They are over there. The conditions are bad. They are unable to support themselves, and they are bringing the Army into disrepute. They are going into crime and vagabondage, and it is thought necessary on the part of our Government that we should bring these men home, and this bill simply authorizes the Secretary of War to do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KIRBY. I yield.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that the Government already has authority to bring back to our shores all soldiers who were there and within the Army.

Mr. KIRBY. There is no doubt about that proposition, but these men for some reason, perhaps because they preferred it, were demobilized on the other side of the ocean. Some of them married over there; some of them preferred to stay there. The conditions have grown so difficult, however, that they are not able to procure any employment. They are not able to sustain themselves. They have gone into crime; they are going into crime and into vagabondage, and they are bringing the Army of the United States into disrepute. Under those conditions the Military Affairs Committee considered the matter with all the facts before them, and by unanimous agreement they have recommended that this bill pass with this amendment, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. KING. After soldiers have been demobilized and have received the bounty of $60, if they prefer to be demobilized in France or any other part of the world, will the Senator explain what obligation rests upon the Government of the United States to bring them back to the United States?

Mr. KIRBY. It may be that there is no especial obligation; but we sent these men across the sea to represent this Government of ours in the greatest fighting army that ever has been transported. We allowed them to be demobilized over there. They have gotten into this unfortunate condition, and they are bringing the Army of the United States into disrepute and the United States, too, because of this condition. We can bring them home without a great deal of expense on these transports of ours, and I believe it ought to be done.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator know how many of them there are?

Mr. KIRBY. A good many. I have forgotten the exact number, but quite a number.

Mr. THOMAS. Enough to make quite a large vote if they are over here?

Mr. KIRBY. I do not urge the bill on that ground, but they ought to be brought home under the circumstances.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this is a unanimous report from the committee, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. KIRBY. I make this statement in view of the absence of the chairman of the committee. It is a unanimous report, and the condition is serious and deserves immediate attention, and I hope the bill will pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN CHICK.

The bill (H. R. 567) for the relief of John Chick was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this is a bill which has passed the Senate several times, and finally has come from the House. I am perfectly familiar with it, and I hope it may be allowed to pass.

Mr. THOMAS. I will look at the report. I should like to have it passed over for the present.

HEIRS OF AGNES INGELS, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 4692) for the relief of the heirs of Agnes Ingels, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator who made the objection will kindly withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will only read the concluding paragraph of the letter of the Secretary of War. He says:

The two accidents were immediately investigated by the board of officers, which found that the accidents were unavoidable and not due to neglect or carelessness on the part of the driver of the Dodge truck.

Mr. ROBINSON. Notwithstanding the statement in the letter, which is correctly quoted by the Senator from Utah, the Committee on Claims by unanimous vote thought, after careful consideration of the matter, that the accident was due solely to negligence, and gross negligence, on the part of agents of the Government; and, if I may do so, I will make a brief statement of the facts. I am thoroughly familiar with the facts.

This is the case as to which the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] stated on the floor recently that it was his intention, when the bill reached the Senate, to move to increase the amount authorized by the committee from $5,000 to $25,000 because of the facts in the case. The facts are these:

Mrs. Ingels was crossing a street in Hot Springs, Ark., when she was run down and killed by a motor truck operated by a private soldier. The motor truck had been inspected and pronounced utterly unfit for use. Notwithstanding this inspection and finding by the officers of the Government, the private was directed by the officer in charge of the motor-truck service to continue the use of the truck. The truck was passing down the street in Hot Springs and ran over another person. The private soldier operating the truck looked back to see the damage that had already been done, and swerved his car to the opposite side of the street, running over Mrs. Ingels and killing her.

The undisputed evidence is that the truck was in such a condition that it could not be stopped under a distance of 65 feet; that the condition of the truck was known to the officer in charge of the motor service; that the private soldier was operating it under protest, and under these circumstances the committee unanimously reported the bill. We reduced the amount, however, to $5,000. I hope that under the facts stated the bill may be permitted to pass.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all I know about the case is what the Secretary of War says, and I certainly could not allow the bill to pass on the statement of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Secretary of War found this fact, that the motor truck could not have been stopped because of the condition of the brakes; but the negligence consisted in the officer compelling the private soldier to use the truck after it had been condemned and pronounced unfit for use. There is no question about the facts in the case. The committee had the evidence of the officers and of the private before them in the form of affidavits.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I read every word of the letter of Secretary Baker, and there is not a word said about the brakes in his whole letter, nor that there was anything the matter with the truck. He said it had been examined thoroughly. He said in his letter:

The two accidents were immediately investigated by the board of officers, which found that the accidents were unavoidable and not due to neglect or carelessness on the part of the driver of the Dodge truck.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, notwithstanding the adverse report of the Secretary of War, the Committee on Claims went into the case fully and found the facts as I have stated them, and the evidence supporting this finding is printed in the report of the committee. The expression of opinion on the part of the Secretary of War that the accident was unavoidable was contradicted by all the facts in the case. If the truck had been in a state of reasonable repair, the accident would not have occurred. If the driver had not looked back to observe the injury done to the man who had already been run over, the accident would not have occurred. It was the grossest sort of negligence, from the facts presented to the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me, from the statement of the Senator from Utah, I judge the Secretary of War says that the driver was not negligent. I understand the Senator from Arkansas to put it on the ground of the absolute unreliability of the machine.

Mr. ROBINSON. That conclusion was based on the theory that being a private soldier, notwithstanding the fact that he protested, as the evidence in this case showed, against being compelled to use a truck that had no brakes, he was acting on the orders of his superior officer, and therefore he was not guilty of negligence. That is the theory of the War Department. There is no dispute about how the accident occurred. He first ran down a man, and then pulled to the wrong side of the street, the driver looking back the while to observe what injury had been done to the man already run over.

Mr. SMOOT. On this report, I shall have to object to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

JOHN CHICK.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when a previous bill for the relief of John Chick was called up, I interposed objection. At the request of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], I have examined the report, and I will make no further objection to the consideration of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 567) for the relief of John Chick, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, John Chick, late of Company K, Third Regiment United States Artillery, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 2d day of August, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act, and no pay nor bounty shall become due or payable by virtue thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMBASSY BUILDINGS IN LONDON.

The bill (S. 4916) to acquire land and buildings in London, England, for the use of the diplomatic representative of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That was taken care of in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, and I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4666) to amend section 13 of an act known as the Federal reserve act, approved December 23, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that this bill may be passed over without action either way, as the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], is at home. If he wishes to have it to go over, I do not desire to press it, and I hope to hear from him in a few minutes.

The bill (H. R. 1299) for the relief of George Le Clear was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ALFRED E. LEWIS.

The bill (H. R. 1300) for the relief of Alfred E. Lewis was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator will not object to this bill. I have a report here which I think will convince the Senator, if he reads it, that this bill should pass. It is a case where a young fellow was a drummer boy in New York, was too young to enlist, his father would not consent to his enlistment; he was not mustered in, but he went and took part in the battle of Malvern Hills, and was in five or six battles. He went all over Virginia and served for one year in the war, and all that is asked is that the service he did shall be counted as service. I think the facts in this case show it to be a very meritorious one. The bill has passed the House. My interest in it is due to the fact that he has a brother living in Virginia, and it is a very worthy case.

Mr. THOMAS. I will look at the report; but let the bill be passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1949) for the relief of George F. Reid was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WILSON CERTAIN.

The bill (H. R. 13319) for the relief of Wilson Certain was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to appeal to the Senator from Colorado to withdraw his objection to the consideration of this bill. Let me just say that I never like to appear here and apparently plead for a man who, technically, on the record may be considered a deserter. If the Senator will read the House report, he will see that the committee found that the charge of desertion was unfounded.

I know this man. He is an old soldier. He can not live very much longer. The one thing now with him is this stain upon his military record. He does not ask for any pension, or anything of that kind.

When he was a mere boy in the Army he was furloughed, and went home on account of sickness. He was sick for a long time, in fact, nearly the balance of the war. He started out and went to St. Louis and tried to have himself reinstated, and was there informed by a party in the Army in whom he had confidence that he should go back home and he would be discharged. I think it is unjust, it is cruel, to punish that man now in his old age. He was then a mere boy, could not read or write, did not understand the situation, and was sick and was furloughed. I appeal to the Senator, as he is leaving this body in a few days, much to the regret of all of us, to permit this justice to be done this old soldier.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in nine cases out of ten these bills reveal the fact that the beneficiary of the bill either deserted or was dishonorably discharged from the military service, and the applications for clearing the record, generally speaking, come after the sources of Government evidence have disappeared and gone to the grave. In nearly all of them the purpose is to secure pensions. The pension roll ought to be a roll of honor. It is, theoretically, however much we have departed from the theory.

I am satisfied that the common judgment of the ordinary man will accept without question the proposition that we have already carried too far the practice of awarding pensions to those who have given some service, or think they have given some service, to their Government, who afterwards apply for and receive pensions. But there is a line that ought to be drawn, even in this degenerate day, and that is between the man who gave some service and was honorably discharged and the man who gave service and then deserted or was dishonorably discharged, and who postponed his application for relief until his old age, and then comes before the committees and requests their consideration, upon grounds rather of sympathy than of justice.

Of course, there are exceptions. The case mentioned by the Senator from Iowa may be one of them. I will read the report, as he has requested it, and then determine. But let it be passed over for the present.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the House report says:

A study of the evidence furnished by this soldier leads the committee inevitably to the conclusion that the record of desertion appearing against the soldier is an error.

I do not think there will be another chance this session to take it up.

Mr. THOMAS. I will give the Senator my final answer before the calendar is laid aside.

ALBERT HAMILTON.

The bill (S. 4699) to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 2637) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope the Senator from Utah will not insist on his objection to Senate bill 4699. That bill affects only one retired officer of the Army. It simply provides that he shall be entitled to credit for the time he was detailed by the War Department to the Philippine government in his promotion. There is only one officer affected by it, and he is entitled to it under all the rules that should govern proper consideration of the merits of a case like this, and the War Department has favored it and reported on it, and the bill is amended in accordance with their directions as to how it should read. There is no one in the department opposing it that I have heard of, or anyone acquainted with the facts. The committee considered it very carefully.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether it applies to only one officer or not, but I do know that there ought to be a halt called somewhere to putting officers on the retired list and paying commutation and allowances for longevity, and if we do not stop somewhere I do not know where we are going to land.

Mr. FLETCHER. An officer who served in the Regular Army some thirty-odd years, and was detailed by the War Department to the Philippine government and served there, under the present law is entitled to no credit for that service. This bill simply provides that he shall have that credit. There is only one officer in the whole Army affected.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that it go over for the time being.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WILSON CERTAIN.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, after consultation with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], I will withdraw my objection to Calendar Nos. 673 and 675. I do so at the request of those Senators.

Mr. KENYON. I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of House bill 13319, Calendar No. 675.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13319) for the relief of Wilson Certain, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Wilson Certain, who was a private in Company A, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 27th day of June, 1865: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALFRED E. LEWIS.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask that Calendar No. 673 may be considered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1300) for the relief of Alfred E. Lewis, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Alfred E. Lewis, who was a drummer boy in Company I, One hundred and first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered in and mustered out as a member of said company and regiment on October 1, 1861, and honorably discharged therefrom September 7, 1862: Provided, That no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTH PLATTE IRRIGATION PROJECT.

The bill (S. 4859) for the relief of certain ex-service men whose rights to make entries on the North Platte irrigation project, Nebraska-Wyoming, were defeated by intervening claims, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the ex-service men qualified to make entry under the homestead laws, who were successful at the drawing held March 5, 1920, for farm units on the North Platte irrigation project, Fort Laramie unit, Nebraska-Wyoming, and to whom approved water-rental applications were duly issued, but who were prevented from making homestead entries for the lands covered by such applications because of the reinstatement of certain conflicting homestead entries, shall each have a preferred right of entry under the homestead laws at the next opening of lands under said project, for not less than 30 days before the date set for the opening of such lands to other entry: Provided,

That this act shall not be considered as entitling any person to make another homestead entry who shall have received the benefits of the homestead laws since being prevented, as aforesaid, from exercising the right acquired at the said drawing on March 5, 1920.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, by a law that gave returning soldiers 60 days' preference right to make entry on reclamation lands, and so forth, certain men made entry and paid their money for water rentals and other requirements, some of whom have completed their entries, and have been settled with; but two men are out the money and out the land, and this is simply to give an opportunity, when the next unit is opened, for them to take their places as provided by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOSSES ON IMPORTATION OF SUGAR.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 238) authorizing the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board to take over and dispose of 13,902 tons of sugar imported from the Argentine Republic, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is authorized to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.), a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, to take over the importation of 13,902 tons of sugar from the Argentine Republic procured by the Department of Justice and the Department of State from the agencies used by them for that purpose, and to distribute or dispose of any of the sugar so imported, and to liquidate and adjust the transaction in such manner as may be deemed by said board to be equitable and proper in the premises.

And for this purpose the President is authorized to vote or use the stock of the corporation held by him, or otherwise exercise or use his control over the said corporation and its directors, and to continue the said United States Sugar Equalization Board for such time as may be necessary to carry out the intention of this resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have some explanation in regard to this measure. It seems to be rather extraordinary.

Mr. SMOOT. I can tell the Senator in a few words what it means, although the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is not here to explain it. The Government entered into an agreement with these importers to import sugar into the United States to break the sugar market. For some reason, before the shipment arrived in the United States, the price declined so that the importers would lose money if they sold the sugar, and the Government of the United States is asked to protect them.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether the importers acted upon their own initiative and expended their own money or whether they were agents of the Government in the transaction?

Mr. SMOOT. They were asked by the Sugar Equalization Board to do this, so Mr. Figg, the assistant to the Attorney General, said. That is the real reason of it. The Department of Justice makes a favorable report upon the measure and acknowledges that it was through that department that they arranged for the importation of the sugar into the country for the purpose of breaking the price on the sugar market.

Mr. GRONNA. They were limited to a profit of only 1 cent a pound; in other words, they were really the agents of the Government.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota if the same firms were not at that time importing sugar from Argentina and elsewhere in order to supply their customers?

Mr. GRONNA. They were unable to get any sugar from Argentina. It was through the Government of the United States that they were able to have the sugar exported from Argentina, because there was an embargo placed upon the exportation of sugar from that country, and so the matter was taken up with the Department of Justice and with the Department of State. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry held public hearings on this particular question, and the Attorney General, Mr. Palmer, appeared before the committee, as did also members of the Sugar Equalization Board, and all of them agreed that the joint resolution ought to pass.

Mr. KING. I am not quite clear from the Senator's statement that the individuals did not initiate the movement themselves.

Mr. GRONNA. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. They found themselves unable to get further sugar from Argentina and utilized the Government as an instrumentality to secure the sugar?

Mr. GRONNA. No; that is not the case.

Mr. KING. And because of their losses they want the Government to recoup them?

Mr. GRONNA. The Attorney General stated that he, together with other officials, asked the corporation which deals in sugar to go to foreign countries and buy sugar in order that the price of sugar might be made to decline. They did so, and letters to that effect are published in the hearings, with photographic copies of what I call real contracts approved by the Department of State and by the Department of Justice, so that the men were in fact agents of the Government of the United States.

I realize that it would be bad practice to begin to allow claims where the Government of the United States itself was really not responsible for the loss. The committee hesitated in taking up the matter at all until hearings had been held and until Mr. Palmer had made his statement, but he said there is no question about the matter and recommended strongly that the Government of the United States should pay. I think the amount will be somewhere about $2,750,000, which was the loss to those people.

Mr. KING. Under the joint resolution will they obtain their 1 cent a pound profit on the sugar?

Mr. GRONNA. No; they are not asking for any profit at all, I will say to the Senator, but simply a reimbursement for the actual loss.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether or not in operations of the corporation there have been losses to the Government heretofore?

Mr. GRONNA. No; there have not; at least that was not brought out before the committee, and I do not believe there has been any other loss. This is the only instance where the Government is asked to pay a loss of this kind.

Mr. KING. In my opinion, the Government of the United States is not responsible for the loss. The officials of the Government had no authority to undertake the expenditure, and I hope the measure will be defeated. I shall not object to its consideration, but I shall vote against it.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire if the joint resolution has the recommendation of the department? Does the department recommend it?

Mr. GRONNA. The Department of State and the Department of Justice both recommend that the loss be paid.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATER POWER COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 4640) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to create a Federal power commission; to provide for the improvement of navigation; the development of water power; the use of the public lands in relation thereto; and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the bill was read in full, I think, the other day. There is one amendment I desire to offer to the committee amendment. In line 17, on page 2, after the word "restriction," I move to insert "except as to salary increases."

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are committee amendments not agreed to ahead of the one proposed by the Senator from Washington. The committee amendments will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce is on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words "An act entitled 'An act to create a Federal Power Commission; to provide for the improvement of navigation; the development of water power; the use of the public lands in relation thereto; and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes,'" and to insert in lieu thereof "The Federal water power act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce is on page 2, in line 7, after the word "authorized" to insert the words "within the limits of appropriations made therefor by Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment of the committee is on page 2, line 11, to strike out the words "and as may be from time to time appropriated for by Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is on page 2, after line 16, to insert the following:

And the restrictions on tranfers from one executive department or independent establishment to another imposed by the acts of Congress approved June 22, 1906, and October 6, 1917, shall not apply to such transfers so made; and the commission may have such printing and binding done and purchase such equipment, supplies, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and directories, as may from time to time be appropriated for by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Washington, but I should like to have the bill read in full as amended before we vote on it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish, first, to renew my offer of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 17, after the word "restrictions," the Senator from Washington moves to insert the words "except as to salary increases."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama requests that the bill as amended be read. The Secretary will read it.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the Federal water power act, approved June 10, 1920, is hereby amended by adding thereto an additional paragraph as follows:

"The commission, if it is unable to perform the duties imposed upon it by this act through and by means of employees of the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture as provided in the second paragraph of this section, is hereby authorized within the limits of appropriations made therefor by Congress to employ in the District of Columbia and elsewhere such additional expert, technical, clerical, and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of performing the duties imposed by this act. The detail of persons for such purpose from the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture, or the transfer from such departments of any persons engaged in duties which by this act are conferred upon the commission, is hereby authorized; and the restrictions, except as to salary increases, on transfers from one executive department or independent establishment to another imposed by the acts of Congress approved June 22, 1906, and October 6, 1917, shall not apply to such transfers so made; and the commission may have such printing and binding done and purchase such equipment, supplies, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and directories, as may from time to time be appropriated for by Congress."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the water-power law, and I do not wish to do anything that will impede the possibility of the development of water-power plants in the United States. I am not going to object to the pending bill, I will say to the Senator from Washington, but I wish to say a few words for the RECORD.

Mr. President, we waited for 15 years, under the idea of conservation, before we could pass a bill that would allow the people of the United States to dam the running rivers of the country and convert into electricity the water power which would thereby be created for the service of the people of the United States. The delay thus occasioned was the greatest crime ever perpetrated by any set of men in the United States and involved the greatest waste, and it was all done under the plea of conservation. At last we passed a bill, a very good bill—I did not agree to it in all its details, but in the main it was a good bill—for the purpose, under certain restrictions, of allowing the people of the United States to go ahead and develop the water power which was being wasted. We put one restriction in the legislation which always will protect the people of the United States, namely, the provision that no grant shall be made extending beyond 50 years. I now understand it is the policy of the Water Power Commission to survey and review the entire system of rivers in the United States before it grants a permit; that it is going into a general survey of every power possibility in the country before one citizen may have the opportunity to develop the water power that is in his neighborhood.

I am not going to object to this bill, for its passage may be necessary in order that the commission may employ clerks outside of those provided for in the original measure; but I wish to say that, so far as I am concerned, if the commission now intends to block the process of the development of the great water powers of the country by undertaking a survey that will require another 15 years to complete, I shall certainly resist appropriations along that line. I am perfectly willing to give the commission all the appropriations which it needs to afford a reasonable opportunity to perform its functions and to serve the people of the United States, but if it is to allow ambition to run away with it and is to reach out and cover the whole United States and cause further delay, I am certainly opposed to any such procedure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I simply wish to say to the Senator from Washington that I am not ready to have this bill considered to-day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Just a word, and then I think the Senator will not object to the consideration of the bill. I merely wish to say that I agree with everything the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has said. It does seem that whenever we vest in some organization of the Government the power to carry on some work it then tries to devise some way by which it can not do the thing we want done.

However, the situation with reference to this matter is just this: The usual provision in a bill creating a body of this kind authorizing them to employ personal service in the District of Columbia was left out of the water power bill. I proposed the provision in the committee, but the committee did not put it in. We have authorized the expenditure—and I hope the Senator from Utah will pay especial attention to this——

Mr. KING. I am listening for the authorization.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We authorized the expenditure of $100,000 under language that, I think, authorizes its use for any purpose which is necessary under the act, but the Comptroller of the Treasury held that the commission could not use a dollar of that $100,000 in the employment of clerks and necessary officers in the District of Columbia, and that all the commission can use are clerks detailed from the War Department, the Agricultural Department, and the Interior Department. Some clerks have been detailed from those departments, but those departments can not spare enough clerks to conduct the work of the commission. This proposed legislation is to meet that situation, and that alone. We put the limitation into the legislation in the way I have indicated, and this bill simply makes in order such appropriations as Congress thinks wise for that purpose hereafter; in other words, according to the comptroller's decision, there is no law under which we can appropriate for these clerks, and under our rule, if any Senator should see fit to resort to it, a point of order would lie against an item in an appropriation bill for this purpose. This is simply to make basic law under which the necessary appropriations can be made; and we have tried to be careful, so as to place in the hands of Congress hereafter such limitations as it may see fit to impose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course the operation of this amendment, if it shall become a law, will be that vacancies will be created in other departments by withdrawing from them for use by the power commission so-called technical or other personnel, and that will give opportunity for the other departments to put upon their rolls additional employees of the Government. So we shall be increasing by this proposed act of Congress the number of employees of the Government to the extent at least of the appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But the commission say that they can not do the work without some sort of help; that they can not get enough help from the departments. I want to relieve that phase of the situation, at any rate. I do not want to give the commission an excuse indefinitely to hold up permits. Now they say they can not pass on the permits because they have not the force. The result is that the law which we passed is being practically defeated. They say—and I do not see how we can get around it—that under the comptroller's decision the only force they can employ is that detailed from the other departments. The other departments have temporarily loaned employees, whom they are going to take back; they say they can not spare the employees. If we want the act which created the commission carried out, if we want the water power developed, if we want the permits granted, we must at least provide the force that is necessary to pass upon them. That is the sole purpose of the proposed amendment to the law. I think it ought to be passed. That is all I have to say.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington knows that this organization has ceased to function, so far as granting permits is concerned.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It has not yet even started.

Mr. KING. It is doing just like every other bureau or executive organization which we create. It reaches out and extends its authority and refuses to act until its personnel is swollen far beyond the dreams of Congress when the act creating it was passed.

This bureau refuses to grant permits where the technical evidence is before it—where, indeed, it needs no technical evidence. It wants to establish a so-called broad and comprehensive system and to apply to little streams a general comprehensive red-tape system which it seeks to spread over the entire United States. It is trying to see how it may not act rather than effectively acting and facilitating the development of the water power of the United States. I have had many complaints against the inactivity and the bureaucratic methods of this organization. It is standing there doing nothing except interposing obstacles to the development of water power within the United States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am afraid the Senator from Utah is right; and yet we have got to have some kind of agency of a human character and bureaucratic nature to carry the work on. We can not do it ourselves. Now, are we going to give them a good excuse for not doing these things by not providing them the necessary help? That is the only point in my mind.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from Washington ought to incorporate in the bill an amendment requiring the commission to act upon every application that is made within a specified period not exceeding six months. As it is now, they do not act and they never will act.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But we have got to give them the force.

Mr. KING. Oh, they have had a sufficient force; but they want to build up a great bureaucracy; they want to swell their personnel until they have scores and hundreds of employees.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to say as to the objection the Senator from Utah has made with reference to the transfer of employees from Government departments to the Water Power Commission, that that is already provided for in the law; they already have authority to do that; so that objection does not lie to the pending bill. They already have authority to reach out into the departments and secure such help as they need; but there are not in the departments trained, experienced, and expert men necessary to furnish the help that the commission really needs in their office, and therefore they are unable to proceed with their work. This bill simply enables them to employ other people whom they can not employ now under the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury without some authority by Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is there any limitation as to what they shall pay and as to the number of their employees, or may they employ as many as they please and pay them just what they please, so long as they do not exceed the aggregate appropriation made from year to year?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I answer that question?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We specifically provided in the last sundry civil bill for the employment of clerical assistance. The Senator could have made a point of order against that provision if he had seen fit, because there was no basic law under which it could be sustained; but under the bill now pending every man for whom we provide may be employed and his salary will be named in the act.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is sufficient protection, and I think it is very important to give the commission that authority so that no excuse may be afforded them for not proceeding with their work.

Mr. KING. Is there any power lodged in the commission to create a deficit and to employ additional men?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that even when we place a limit on an appropriation the departments proceed, regardless of the limitation, so that within a few months we are compelled to provide a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We ought to enforce the law against creating deficits.

Mr. KING. There is a penal statute against them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; and it ought to be enforced.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California will state his question of order.

Mr. PHELAN. I understand that under the rule debate may not be continued for more than five minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct; the rule limits debate on the part of any one Senator to five minutes.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I happen to have some knowledge of this matter. I think the distinguished Senator from Utah is wrong in his surmise as to the intention or desire of the Federal Power Commission to build up a bureaucracy, as he charges. It simply desires sufficient clerical help to do its necessary work here in the District of Columbia. It has not such help at present, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has explained, for, under a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, it has been unable to use any of the money heretofore appropriated for clerical help and assistants in the District of Columbia. The commission is sitting here with not much help of any kind, except a secretary and what little is detailed to them by odd lots here and there from various departments. I know it is very greatly hampered in its work. The Congress appropriated $100,000, and I think some provision ought to be made for putting it to the use for which it was intended.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington is correct in stating that the provision to which he refers has been adopted as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill. That removes any emergency for the present; that situation has been taken care of.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This bill simply authorizes the expenditure for the purpose named whenever there are appropriations in the future.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that is very objectionable, more particularly in view of the short time allowed for the consideration of the bill, and, therefore, I object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4933) to amend the interstate commerce act by adding thereto a new section, No. 20b, and to amend an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1917, by adding a new paragraph to section 10 thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I inquire what became of Calendar No. 681, being Senate bill 4640.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill went over on objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 740) for the relief of John W. Baggott was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know what that is about. It seems to be a very important measure. I ask to have it go over until the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] comes in. I will send for him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1920.

The bill (S. 4898) to amend the transportation act, 1920, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill is similar to the House bill on the subject recently passed by the Senate. Without objection, it will be indefinitely postponed.

LANDS IN OREGON.

The bill (S. 4511) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a right of way over certain Government lands to the State of Oregon for the Columbia River Highway was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant to the State of Oregon, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating the Columbia River Highway, a permanent right of way over and across portions of the lands of the United States acquired and held in connection with the improvement of the Dalles-Celilo section of the Columbia River: Provided, That the exact location and dimensions of the right of way shall be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the grant shall be subject to the express condition that the right of way shall be used solely and exclusively for the roadway purpose aforesaid, and any part thereof not so used shall revert to the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether or not there is a general statute which provides that upon the abandonment of a road such as it is proposed here to permit the State to construct the land shall revert to the Government?

Mr. McNARY. That is the purpose of the amendment proposed by the Secretary of the Interior, which is incorporated in the bill as a substitute for the one offered by the junior Senator from Oregon.

Mr. KING. I was not sure that that language was broad enough. It seems to imply that if a grant of a certain width, for instance, is made, and only a part of the grant is used, the residue would revert to the Government. But suppose that subsequently, 25 or 50 years from now, the State of Oregon should abandon the road entirely. What I am trying to get at is whether the title then would revert to the Government of the United States.

Mr. McNARY. As I understand, the title to the whole of the land, including the user, would revert to the Government.

Mr. KING. If the Senator has made some investigation, and is sure of that, I have no objection.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is expressly so provided in the bill.

Mr. KING. I am not sure of that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It says:

Provided further, That the grant shall be subject to the express condition that the right of way shall be used solely and exclusively for the roadway purpose aforesaid, and any part thereof not so used shall revert to the United States.

Mr. KING. I had not seen that proviso.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JURISDICTION OVER BOUNDARY WATERS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 233) giving consent of the Congress of the United States to the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Nebraska, or any two or more of said States, to agree upon the jurisdiction to be exercised by said States over boundary waters between any two or more of said States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the consent of the Congress is hereby given to the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Nebraska, or any two or more of them, by such agreement or compact as they may deem desirable or necessary, or as may be evidenced by legislative acts enacted by any two or more of said States, not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or any law thereof, to determine and settle the jurisdiction to be exercised by said States, respectively, over offenses arising out of the violation of the laws of any of said States upon any of the waters forming the boundary lines between any two or more of said States, or waters through which such boundary line extends, and that the consent of the Congress be, and the same is hereby, given to the concurrent jurisdiction agreed to by the States of Minnesota and South Dakota, as evidenced by the act of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota approved April 20, 1917, and the act of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota approved February 13, 1917.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 4864) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved October 24, 1914, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved October 24, 1914, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to said section the following proviso:

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] what disposition was made of House bill 8535? Did it pass?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That bill was passed. I will state to the Senator briefly just what the bill provides.

Mr. KING. No; I am not asking for that. I simply wish to invite the Senator's attention to the fact that I think there is an error on page 2, line 12. It reads, "That whenever such subdivision in made." It should be "is."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that word should be "is."

Mr. KING. I suggest that the Senator have that correction made, and that the action on the bill be reconsidered for that purpose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for a reconsideration of the vote whereby the bill was passed in order that word "in" may be changed to "is."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a typographical error.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will be authorized to correct it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest that perhaps it would take too much time to-day to consider that measure. I will inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if he desires a consideration of the measure to-day. [A pause.] I suggest that it go over. I desire to say, however, that I am in favor of some legislation upon that subject.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington why provision was not made in the Indian appropriation bill for this matter?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that the matter was not called to the attention of the Indian Affairs Committee until after the Indian appropriation bill was reported to the Senate, and the chairman of the committee felt that he ought not to try to put it in that bill then; but he was impressed with the merits of the measure and reported it favorably.

Mr. KING. Was the commitee unanimous in its action?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand so.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEC. 4. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said Indians or bands of Indians, under contracts negotiated and approved, as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amounts stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and no attorney shall have a right to represent the said Indians or any band thereof in any suit, cause, or action under the provisions of this act until his contract shall have been approved as herein provided. CORPORATIONS ORGANIZED IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 5416) to authorize corporations organized in the District of Columbia to change their names was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have a statement of the purpose of this bill.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, under the existing laws of the District of Columbia the court of appeals has held that there is no power given to corporations to change their names. This bill is intended to give corporations that power, the board of directors first having acted, and their action having been confirmed by a two-thirds vote of the stockholders of the corporation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator state the circumstances which make it necessary for a corporation to change its name? I can conceive of some conditions wherein a corporation ought not to be authorized, perhaps, to change its name.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I will simply say that this bill passed the Senate once under the number "S. 4000," and was sent to the House, and favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee of the House. It was not passed, however, because of want of time. It was not reached on the calendar.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is recommended by the commissioners.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; it is recommended by the commissioners.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the object of it? Why should a corporation be allowed to change its name without limitation? Take, for instance, a case like this: Suppose a corporation should, through mismanagement of its affairs, acquire a bad reputation; is it desirable, in the opinion of the Senator from South Dakota, that it should be permitted to escape the offense of its mismanagement, and the reputation it acquired, by changing its name? What benefit accrues to anyone by allowing it to do that?

Mr. STERLING. No benefit, Mr. President; nor do I think the mere change of name would permit any corporation to escape any liability it incurred. But I can conceive of a case wherein it would be very desirable for a corporation to be allowed to change its name, and I think that the law of nearly every State permits the change of name on the part of corporations. It may have inadvertently adopted a certain name without consideration of all the circumstances, or circumstances may arise thereafter under which it would be very desirable to have a change of name of a corporation. This has received consideration at the hands of committees of both Houses; it has passed the Senate once, and has been favorably reported by the House committee to the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that. It would not be on the calendar, in all probability, if it had not been favorably reported by the Senate committee. I do not know that the matter is of very great importance, but I think some additional reason ought to be given for the legislation. I do not think it is sufficient, in asking Congress to pass this legislation, to say that the bill has been approved by committees of Congress from time to time.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think the Senator will find that the laws of every State in the Union which provide for corporations have principally only one limitation upon the name which may be adopted, and that is that the name shall not be one which has been adopted by some other corporation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is that limitation in this bill?

Mr. KELLOGG. It is in the original act, as I understand it. But they are always allowed to change their names on filing amended articles. I know of no State law that does not permit that.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On page 1, line 4, after the word "Montana," to strike out the word "corporation" and insert in lieu thereof the word "organization"; on line 6, after the word "point," to strike out the words "to be approved by the Secretary of War, in townships 5, 6, 7, and 8 north, range 2 east," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "in section 6, township 4 north, range 3 east"; and on page 2, line 1, after the numerals "1906," to insert the words "as amended by act approved June 23, 1910," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the Government is hereby given to the Broadwater Irrigation District, a Montana organization, its successors or assigns, to construct across the Missouri River, at some point in section 6, township 4 north, range 3 east, Montana meridian, a dam for irrigation purposes, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by act approved June 23, 1910: Provided, That no dam constructed under the consent hereby granted shall be used to develop water power nor to generate electricity, but the use of the dam by the construction shall be limited to irrigation.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator will not object. Has he examined the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I have not had time yet to examine it, and I want to read the report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think it is very necessary that this should be enacted.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will allow it to be passed over temporarily, I will read the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. At the time that bill was introduced, I understand, the Secretary of the Treasury had already used the drafts of the Federal reserve banks of last year for retiring the certificates.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of it. I am informed by the department that that is the case.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the bill ought to be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

The bill (S. 4421) securing rights of way and easements over public land in connection with Federal irrigation projects was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where a right of way or easement of any kind over public land heretofore or hereafter withdrawn under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., p. 388), is required in connection with a Federal irrigation project the Secretary of the Interior may cause to be executed and recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds of the county in which the land is located, an instrument stating the purpose of the right of way or easement with a description of the same, in which event entry thereafter made for such land and the patent issued therefor shall be subject to the right of way or easement so described in such recorded instrument.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR CONTRACTS.

The bill (S. 4900) to amend section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, after the words "are in," to insert the words "justice and equity," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

"Add to section 5 the following proviso: 'Provided, That this section shall be liberally interpreted, and that all claimants who in response to any personal, written, or published request or demand from any of the Government agencies mentioned in said act in good faith expended money in producing or preparing to produce any of the ores or minerals named therein and have heretofore filed their claims within the time and in the manner prescribed by said act, shall be reimbursed such net losses as they may have been found to have incurred and are in justice and equity entitled to from the appropriation in said act, and that the unexpended portion of the appropriation carried in said act be continued available for the purposes named above until all claims in said act shall be finally settled or disposed of.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Montana, for the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], reported this bill from the Committee on Mines and Mining. I can not see why the words on line 8, "that this section shall be liberally interpreted," should be used? Why not strike out those words and simply say, "Provided, That all claimants," and so forth.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have not the slightest objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I have never seen those words used in any bill or any law. There is only one way to interpret the law, and that is to interpret it correctly. Therefore, Mr. President, I move that on line 8, page 1, the words "That this section shall be liberally interpreted, and" be stricken out and that the word "that" commence with a capital "T," so as to read:

Provided, That all claimants who, in response to any personal, written, or public request or demand from any of the Government agencies, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Montana the purpose of this bill. Shortly after the armistice Congress passed an act appropriating something like $8,000,000 for the relief of citizens of the United States who had been induced to go into the production of unusual or rare metals, and that was passed after a very full consideration of the whole subject. The original bill, I think, was very much broader than the one enacted. Of course a vast number of claims against the Government which, while morally of some importance, have no legal justification were filed, and a bill like this, I think, would tend to encourage and to promote the filing of vast numbers of claims against the Government, particularly by that class of claimants whose claims have been filed with and investigated by the board charged with the administration of the law to which I have referred. The fruit of every war, great or small, is an enormous number of claims against the Government, a comparatively small proportion of which upon investigation are found sufficiently serious to require the Government to pay them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I interrupt the Senator to say that the bill expressly provides that none except those who have already filed claims shall be entitled to the benefits of the act.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator know how extensive the claims are which have already been filed?

Mr. ROBINSON. I can state approximately, between seven and eight million dollars. The necessity for this legislation arises out of a construction placed upon the act of March 2, 1919, which has had the effect of barring nearly all claims. There are something like a total of 1,200 claims filed under the provisions of the original act. The language of the act germane to the construction I refer to is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to adjust, liquidate, and pay such net losses as have been suffered by any person, firm, or corporation by reason of producing or preparing to produce either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten, in compliance with the request or demand of the Department of the Interior, the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, the Shipping Board, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation—

And so forth.

The department has construed the words "request or demand" to mean that the request must be individually made or specifically made, so as to exclude all cases where any of these boards urged by published appeals to mineral claimants of the class benefited by the bill to engage in the production of the minerals named, and have limited it in the application made by the Interior Department to only those who were asked by an agent of the Bureau of Mines in the field to engage in production. The construction placed upon the act has been held by the committee in charge of the matter at the other end of the Capitol to be inconsistent with the original purpose of Congress, and this act merely writes into the law the meaning which I think Congress intended the act should have in the beginning.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. SMOOT. I now ask that we revert to Calendar No. 722.

The bill (H. R. 11841) to amend "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That first paragraph of section 2 of the act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the United States Public Health Service, approved February 15, 1893, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any vessel at any foreign port clearing or departing for any port or place in the United States or its possessions or other dependencies or any vessel at any port in the possessions or other dependencies of the United States clearing or departing for any port or place in the United States or its possessions or other dependencies, shall be required to obtain from the consul, vice consul, or other consular officer of the United States at the port of departure, or from the medical officer where such officer has been detailed by the President for that purpose, a bill of health in duplicate, in the form prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, setting forth the sanitary history and condition of said vessel, and that it has in all respects complied with the rules and regulations in such cases prescribed for securing the best sanitary condition of the said vessel, its cargo, passengers, and crew; and said consular or medical officer is required, before granting such duplicate bill of health, to be satisfied that the matters and things therein stated are true; and for his services in that behalf he shall be entitled to demand and receive such fees as shall by lawful regulation be allowed, to be accounted for as is required in other cases."

Mr. SMOOT. I find that the only change made in existing law is by adding the words in line 8 of the bill "or departing," and in line 9 "or its possessions or other dependencies." The balance of the bill is the law as it exists to-day, and there is no objection to those amendments to the law that I can see.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIVELES QUARRY, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 229) authorizing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of private parties to the Mariveles quarry within the limits of a United States military reservation in the Philippine Islands and to permit the working thereof by the persons entitled thereto, provided military necessities permit, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments:

On page 1, line 5, to strike out the words "the rights, claims, or equities" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "any equitable claims," and on page 2, line 5, after the word "consider," to strike out the words "the rights or" and to insert the word "such," so as to read:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to make or cause to be made such inquiry and investigation into any equitable claims of such private parties in and to the stone quarries at Mariveles, Province of Bataan, in the Philippine Islands, within the limits of the United States military reservation as set aside by the President of the United States in Executive order of June 7, 1904, as may have filed claims with the War Department or in other offices under its jurisdiction, and to permit the resumption of private operations therein by license or otherwise and to the extent that he may consider such claims of such parties entitle them to, with due regard to military necessities: Provided, however, That nothing herein authorized shall be deemed to remove the site of said quarry from the jurisdiction and control of the military authorities of the United States under and by virtue of the reservation made by the President as aforesaid.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF PENAL LAWS.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to recur to calendar No. 692, a bill (H. R. 12161) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909 (35 Stats. L., p. 1134). I asked that it go over until the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] should be present. He is now present, and I withdraw all objection thereto.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JENNIE GARRETT.

The bill (S. 1721) for the relief of Jennie Garrett was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah to withhold his objection just a moment until I make an explanation of the bill?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. The bill was introduced for the relief of Jennie Garrett. Her husband, Nathaniel Garrett, lived near my home in Brooklyn. He was ordered out with the Fourteenth New York Regiment for service on the Mexican border on June 3, 1916. He went to the border with the regiment. Before he could be mustered in, in fact, before the regiment could be mustered in a week or two later, he met with an accident while in the service of the regiment and while in the service of his country, and died as a result of that accident. His wife applied for a pension, but the Pension Bureau refused a pension on the ground that the man had not actually been mustered into the service. A week later he would have been mustered in.

The bill does not give the widow a pensionable status, and that is not the purpose of the bill, unless she can prove all the facts surrounding his service. It simply places him in the position he would have occupied had he lived a week longer, and had been mustered into his regiment. It seems to be a meritorious case, and I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. KING. I think the bill perhaps ought to go to the Committee on Pensions, and for the present I shall insist on my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RICHARD PARKE.

The bill (S. 2340) to amend the military record of Richard Parke was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection until I make an explanation of the matter?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. Richard Parke had two enlistments in the United States during the Civil War. During the first enlistment, as a boy of 17, he went home on a furlough, and while in New York City he deserted. Meeting some other boys, he entered another regiment, then being formed in New York City. He went back with the second regiment and served two years in the war, performed valiant service, and came out of the war with an honorable discharge. Some years ago when applying for a pension he discovered that his record had been marked, showing him to be a deserter, as I have explained.

He is now a man 78 years of age. He is without widow or dependent family, and even if the bill should pass, at the very most he could obtain a pension only for the remaining days of his life, probably a year or two. He had two years of honorable service, and now resides in Brooklyn with his family. The old man dislikes to pass away without having his record cleared. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. Why was not the bill referred to the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. CALDER. Because it belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs, which is the only committee that can recommend legislation affecting his record. I say positively that is so. If some Senator is present who is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, he will vouch for that statement. The Committee on Pensions have no authority to recommend a pension for anyone whose record is not clear, and the only place he can go under those circumstances is to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], whether the statement made by the Senator from New York would entitle this applicant to the relief demanded under the rules which have been heretofore governing the Pensions Committee?

Mr. McCUMBER. I was engaged on another matter when the Senator from New York was speaking and did not hear his statement.

Mr. KING. My inquiry is in reference to the statement of the Senator from New York. He is presenting an application for a pension, or to clear a soldier's record.

Mr. McCUMBER. All I can say is that the rule of the Committee on Pensions has been not to grant a pension until after the right has been established, by the soldier pensionable, under the law which reestablishes his right, but the Committee on Pensions does not clear the records of soldiers.

Mr. KING. I was aware of that fact. What I inquired of the Senator was, assuming the fact to be as stated by the Senator from New York, with reference to the propriety of the Committee on Military Affairs handling the matter?

Mr. CALDER. The Committee on Pensions would not grant the pension if the man's record disclosed a mark against him as a deserter.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; we expect him then to go to the Committee on Military Affairs to get his record cleared up.

Mr. CALDER. I am sure the bill was in the right committee. I will say to the Senator from Utah that it is a very meritorious case. The man had two years of honorable service and an honorable discharge from his last service. He is now 78 years old and living with his family in New York, and there is no one pensionable to succeed to the pension when he passes on. The case is really a meritorious case.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator give assurance to the Senate that some young widow or woman will not marry him so he can leave a widow?

Mr. CALDER. If she does, under the law she can not obtain the pension, because she is forbidden under the law to obtain a pension under those circumstances.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Richard Parke, late of Company A, First Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 22d day of August, 1862: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Richard Parke."

MILITARY ARTICLES FOR NATIONAL MUSEUM.

The bill (S. 4827) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish to the National Museum certain articles of the arms, matériel, equipment, or clothing heretofore issued or produced for the United States Army, and to dispose of colors, standards, and guidons of demobilized organizations of the United States Army, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, in lines 11, 12, and 13, to strike out "any that were donated to such organizations may be returned to the donor or donors upon request by him or them," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to furnish to the National Museum, or exhibition, upon request therefor by the administrative head thereof, such articles of arms, matériel, equipment, or clothing as have been issued from time to time to the United States Army, or which have been or may hereafter be produced for the United States Army, and which are objects of general interest or of foreign or curious research, provided that such articles are surplus or can be spared.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to dispose of all colors, standards, and guidons of demobilized organizations of the United States Army in the following manner: Any which were used during their service by such organizations and which were brought into the service of the United States from the National Guard of any State may be returned to that State upon request therefor from the governor thereof; and all others may be sent, upon request of the governor thereof, to whatever State the Secretary of War may determine to have furnished the majority of men to any such organization at the time of its formation: Provided, however, That where it is impossible to determine what State furnished a majority of the men of an organization at the time of its formation, or where any organization was so cosmopolitan in its original make-up that it is impossible to identify it with any particular State, the colors of such organization will be turned in to the Quartermaster General for such national use as the Secretary of War may direct: Provided further, That the title to all such colors, standards, and guidons shall remain in the United States: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall require assurance that proper provision has been or will be made for their care and preservation before returning or sending the same as herein authorized.

SEC. 3. That in all cases in which the Secretary of War has heretofore furnished to the National Museum any property of the kinds described in section 1 hereof, or has disposed of any colors, standards, or guidons of demobilized organizations of the United States Army in the manner provided by section 2 hereof, his acts and doings in the premises are hereby ratified and confirmed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT TO STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS.

The bill (S. 2252) making an appropriation to pay the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred and paid at the request of the President in protecting the harbors and fortifying the coast during the Civil War, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the governor of the State of Massachusetts, or his duly authorized agent, the sum of $233,885.82 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by such State for interest and premium paid for coin in payment of such interest on bonds issued for money borrowed and expended at the request of the President of the United States during the Civil War in protecting the harbors and fortifying the coast. The accounting officers of the Treasury having found that said expenditures were so incurred and paid by the State; and which the Court of Claims in its report to Congress under the act approved July 16, 1916, as set forth in Document No. 369, House of Representatives, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, also found had been so incurred and paid.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] why there has been such a delay in the presentation of the claim?

Mr. LODGE. It is one of a class of claims which I think has been paid to every State except Massachusetts. The State at the request of the National Government advanced large sums of money to the Federal Government for the purpose of coast defense. They issued gold bonds to do it, and the State paid the principal and interest and premiums in gold. The advances of the State for the defense of the country during the Civil War have been paid gradually over a long period, but they have not been paid for the gold premium, which is only proper, and the interest.

This class of claims was supported by a decision of the Supreme Court. Part of the claims of the State of Massachusetts have been paid. This is the last one. It has been twice reported from the Committee on Claims favorably and unanimously, and also has been decided in favor of the State by the Court of Claims, which made no award, because they said legislation was needed, as there was no law for repayment. I think it is a claim that is justly due the State.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether, as I understood his statement, Congress heretofore has made appropriations for the payment of some claims?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; and paid them all, so far as I know.

Mr. KING. Why did not the State of Massachusetts present all its claims at one time? Litigation in piecemeal is forbidden in controversies between private individuals, and it seems to me States ought not to follow a policy which the law really forbids by the statute of limitations from being interposed between private individuals.

Mr. LODGE. The claim has been presented, and it has been delayed, as many claims are. I have noticed some honest claims that have been delayed in the Senate at times, and unavoidably so. Sometimes a State has not pressed them, but, as I said, claims of just this character have been paid to other States and, under the decision of the Supreme Court, were paid to the State of New York. I think it is a perfectly just claim, so far as that goes. I do not think there is a claim of a State that ought to be set aside, certainly not on account of delay.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why is not this such a claim as should be referred to the Court of Claims?

Mr. LODGE. It has been so referred. I just stated that it had been.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the Senator states that the Court of Claims made no adjudication.

Mr. LODGE. They made an adjudication, but what happened was this: The claim was sent there for a finding of fact. They found the facts and said:

> We have been cited to no law of Congress promising to repay Massachusetts any part of the money so expended by her, from which it follows that, however generous and patriotic this action on the part of the State may have been, she has no legal status in this court for the repayment of the same.

There have been acts of Congress paying all of this class of claims.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is what leads me to say that it seems to me Congress should first decide whether it should obligate itself to the State of Massachusetts for money advanced under these circumstances, and then let the Court of Claims pass upon the question.

Mr. LODGE. It is perfectly certain that the State can not get the money without an act of Congress. I have here the decision of the Supreme Court in the New York case, as set forth in the report of the committee. The committee said in their report:

> It seems to your committee that this case is precisely parallel to that of the State of New York which was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States (160 U. S., p. 598). This decision allowed interest incurred and paid by such State in obtaining the money for which reimbursement was allowed under the act of July 27, 1861 (12 Stat., p. 276), and joint resolution of March 8, 1862 (12 Stat., p. 615). That this is the view of the Treasury Department is shown by a letter of the comptroller transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury under date of February 4, 1911, referring to this claim, from which the following is an extract:
> "I see no reason why the interest necessarily incurred and paid by the State on the bonds issued for the coast defense should not be allowed as a part of the costs incurred by the State in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court in the New York case (160 U. S., 598) which allowed the interest incurred and paid by the said State in obtaining the money for which reimbursement was allowed under the act of July 27, 1861 (12 Stat., 276), and joint resolution of March 8, 1862 (12 Stat., 615).
> "As the money expended for coast defense was secured from bonds issued after the act of the Massachusetts Legislature which provided for payment in gold or silver coin of the interest and principal of all bonds hereafter issued, there was a legal contract between the State and the holders of said bonds when issued for the payment of principal and interest in coin. The additional cost of said coin was therefore a part of the costs incurred by the State in the matter of the coast defense."

I shall not read any more. On that is based the decision of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I shall vote against it. I confess that I can not see the liability of the Government, nor can I understand why there has been this delay. Apparently Congress made appropriations many years ago to satisfy the claims of the Northern States for expenditures made during the Civil War. Evidently Congress then felt that the amount appropriated to Massachusetts was sufficient and was a complete satisfaction of her claim. We are now presented with a claim years afterwards amounting to more than $200,000, which, as I understand the explanation of the Senator from Massachusetts, is for premiums paid upon bonds and for interest.

Mr. LODGE. And which, as I said, have been paid in other cases. Similar claims for other States have been paid within the last two years. The Federal Government only paid the principal claim of Massachusetts within the last 10 years.

Mr. KING. I am not in a position to make any explanation, because the matter is wholly new to me, but I confess, in view of the fact that similar claims have been presented to Congress by the State of Massachusetts and appropriations have been made for their payment that it is rather a dangerous precedent to establish, if this is the first time it has been done, to make further appropriations; it is appropriating in a piecemeal fashion, and we never know when we shall get through with claims of a similar character.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what danger the harbor of Massachusetts was supposed to be threatened with that caused this expenditure? What did it amount to at the time?

Mr. LODGE. The expenditure was incurred on account of coast defenses which were called for by the Federal Government and built by the State along the coast at the Government's request. The port of Massachusetts is considered to be rather an important port. There were a number of ports on the coast of Massachusetts which were thought worth defending. At all events, I can not argue that, but the Federal Government, through the President, asked for the work, and the State did it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. When was it asked for?

Mr. LODGE. It was asked for in 1863.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was it feared that some of the extreme southerners might come up there after Ben Butler?

Mr. LODGE. Senate Report No. 1188, Sixty-second Congress, third session, states in reference to the matter:

> Military operations in 1863 made it necessary to strengthen Boston Harbor and also to fortify the coast. President Lincoln and Secretary Seward had both recommended these improvements as a military necessity.

The work being recommended by President Lincoln and the then Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, the State borrowed the money on her own credit, borrowed it in gold—and Massachusetts was one of the very few States that did pay the interest on their debts in gold all through the Civil War—and carried out the patriotic motive of the defense of the coast. I do not mean to say that Nebraska was in danger, but it was thought that the coast of Massachusetts was in danger.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The same idea prevailed there during the Spanish-American War when the poor little Spanish armada started across, I understand.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; there was some alarm all along the coast; it was not confined exclusively to Massachusetts.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But I wondered what there really was during the Civil War that even bore the semblance of a danger, so far as Boston Harbor was concerned.

Mr. LODGE. I can only refer the Senator from Nebraska to the correspondence between President Lincoln and the State of Massachusetts, which I have not here. The Federal Government thought the expenditure desirable.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Massachusetts has represented the State in the Senate for many years.

Mr. LODGE. I can assure the Senator from Nebraska that Massachusetts was not expending several millions of money to defend the coast as an investment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I realize that.

Mr. LODGE. Or in order to make money.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator stated that the principal sum was returned to them a number of years ago?

Mr. LODGE. It was as to all the States. The coast States all had similar claims, and they have all been paid except this one. All of those whose obligations were in gold have been paid, including the premiums on their bonds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Massachusetts has been very ably represented in the Senate, and I wondered why this claim had not been presented and acted upon earlier.

Mr. LODGE. Some of the other State claims have been paid within the last few years. If the Senator from Nebraska wants to know the cause of the delay, I will say that it is because the Government of the United States resists in every possible way the payment of a private claim or a State claim against the Government, no matter how just it may be.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a proper and a wise thing for the Government to do, otherwise we should not have much left in the Treasury with general acquiescence in all claims.

Mr. LODGE. That may be so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me that under the circumstances this is a very old claim to come up now.

Mr. LODGE. It is a very old claim, but I will say to the Senator that some of these claims, including the claim of New York, I think, has been paid only within a comparatively few years. There have been many claims paid to the States for expenditures incurred by them for this purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the governor of the State of Massachusetts, or his duly authorized agent, $233,885.82, being the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by such State for interest and premium paid for coin in payment of such interest on bonds issued for money borrowed and expended at the request of the President of the United States during the Civil War in protecting the harbors and fortifying the coast, the accounting officers of the Treasury having found that the expenditures were so incurred and paid by the State; and which the Court of Claims in its report to Congress under the act approved July 16, 1916, as set forth in Document No. 369, House of Representatives, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, also found had been so incurred and paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLARENCE L. REAMES.

The bill (S. 3487) for the relief of Clarence L. Reames, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I make a statement in reference to that bill?

Mr. KING. I withhold my objection in order to hear the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, Mr. Clarence L. Reames was district attorney at Portland, Oreg., having been appointed during the first part of President Wilson's first term. While he was serving as district attorney in Portland he made such an excellent record as a prosecuting officer that the Attorney General ordered him to San Francisco in April, 1916, to prosecute a large number of men who had been looting the public domain. Mr. Reames attended the court in San Francisco for the purpose of preparing for the trials; he tried the cases against those men, and secured convictions in nearly all of them. Later he was again sent to San Francisco to prosecute other cases against men who were fraudulently acquiring title to public lands. He succeeded in those cases. Later he was sent by the Attorney General to Seattle to prosecute a number of cases which had attracted nation-wide attention and which were discussed very largely in the press throughout the West at that time. He succeeded in bringing about the conviction of those who were guilty. During that period he was absent from his home, which he maintained in Portland; but he conducted the district attorney's office in Portland without costing the Government an additional cent. His only pay, aside from his salary as district attorney, was $4 per day. If there is a hotel in San Francisco or one in Seattle where a man can live for $4 a day I have never been able to find it.

The Attorney General of the United States has recommended the payment of this claim, and I think it ought to be paid. As a matter of fact, Mr. Reames is entitled to more, and the claim which he presented was larger, but the Attorney General finally compromised and suggested to him that $2,000 should be allowed.

Mr. SMOOT. The same thing happens in the case of other district attorneys who are ordered away from home, and if this bill passes we will have a flood of bills of a similar character.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Senator if he can tell me of a single district attorney who has been sent away from his home for a period of six months to prosecute important cases who has not been paid?

Mr. SMOOT. They have been paid whatever the per diem may be.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Four dollars a day.

Mr. SMOOT. There are many of them who are thus ordered away from home.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I hope the bill will be passed. If there are any other claims of a similar nature which may come in I will stand to have them paid; they ought to be paid where a district attorney renders duty outside of his district. Possibly Mr. Reames might have refused to go, but he was ordered to go because of the efficient service he had rendered. Later, because of his capacity, because of his ability successfully to prosecute, he was appointed assistant attorney general at Seattle to prosecute a great many men.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just one word: I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I feel constrained to and shall vote against it. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that under this precedent we will be called upon hereafter to reimburse a great many district attorneys who have accepted appointments under salaries which have been fixed by law.

I wish at this time to express my disapproval of the policy of the Department of Justice—and it has been the policy for many years—of selecting so many special assistant district attorneys. The regular district attorneys should care for the work within their own districts; but other men are imported from other districts to aid those who have been selected and who are entirely competent to discharge the duties that devolve upon them. I regard this as a very bad precedent, and, in my opinion, we will be flooded by a large number of claims of similar character.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $2,000 to pay Clarence L. Reames for extra and special services performed by him while United States district attorney at Portland, Oreg., in the prosecution of certain cases in the northern district of California and in the western district of Washington, pursuant to the request of the Attorney General, during the years 1916 and 1917.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KRISTINA FURJAK.

The bill (S. 4991) for the relief of Kristina Furjak was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Kristina Furjak $495, being the amount deposited with the Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island for safe-keeping pending determination of her right to enter the United States, said sum having disappeared from the safe and all efforts made to determine the responsibility for the loss having proved unsuccessful.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM E. LEWIS.

The bill (S. 4992) for the relief of William E. Lewis was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I should like to say a word to the Senator from Utah about the bill, for I am sure the Senator does not understand it. The bill came to us from the Department of Labor. The circumstances are as follows: The claimant had been detained by the immigration authorities and had been required by them to deposit a thousand-dollar bond. He deposited Liberty bonds of that value. A Government employee stole the bonds, and when the claimant was released the bonds which he had deposited could not be returned to him. The Department of Labor came to the committee, recited the facts, and admitted that the bonds were taken by an agent of the Government. In view of the circumstances the committee unanimously reported the bill, feeling that common honesty dictated that the man's loss should be made good.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator what steps the Government takes to protect itself from the dishonesty of its employees? It seems to me it ought to require a bond of those who become custodians of funds which are taken from immigrants.

Mr. SPENCER. I should think so.

Mr. KING. Can the Senator advise us whether the Government takes any steps for its own protection?

Mr. SPENCER. I should think so; but, of course, when the Government requires a man to make a deposit and he makes the deposit, which may represent all that he has in the world, and then when the charge against him is dismissed, and he applies for the return of his money, the Government says, "We are very sorry, but we can not return you the money," it is a case where there is a clear legal liability on the part of the Government. I quite agree with the Senator that the Government might well bond every one of its officials, but in this case that was not done, and the man whose money was lost was a poor man.

Mr. KING. Can the Senator advise us what steps the Government took to locate the criminal and to have him punished or to receive financial redress?

Mr. SPENCER. The man who took the money was arrested and was indicted, but the last I heard of the case he had not been tried. He was, I repeat, under indictment, and undoubtedly will go to the penitentiary for the theft. There were two cases of similar character, and the same man was guilty in both instances.

Mr. KING. Can the Senator advise us whether or not the Department of Labor requires those who are custodians of funds of this character to give a bond?

Mr. SPENCER. They did not do so in this case. The employee who took the money was not under bond.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that the claim ought to be paid by the Government; and yet this is a very loose way of doing business. If the law does not compel the Department of Labor to bond its employees who are charged with fiduciary duties of this character, a statute should be enacted to require it. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not rise to object to the bill, but I will suggest to the Senator that the bill ought to provide that the man be reimbursed by giving him a Liberty bond of a thousand dollars. We could buy such a bond for about $900; but if the man is paid cash he will be a hundred dollars better off, because of the fact that the Government of the United States took his bond and lost it, than he would be if a Liberty bond of like denomination were returned to him.

Mr. SPENCER. I see the Senator's point; there would be an advantage to the man whose bond was lost. I have no objection to having the bill amended so as to provide for the return to him of a bond similar to that which was lost.

Mr. SMOOT. Everybody would like to have his bonds stolen if he could get par for them.

Mr. SPENCER. The man is entitled to nothing more than the return of a bond of similar par value.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What was the date of the incident?

Mr. SMOOT. The incident occurred in January, 1920, at which time the bonds were even a little lower than they are to-day.

Mr. SPENCER. It is very simple to suggest a word that will make the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Secretary proceed with the next bill? Then we can recur to this one when the Senator has prepared his amendment.

Mr. SPENCER subsequently said: Mr. President, I have prepared an amendment to Senate bill 4992 which perhaps will meet the objection which was made. I send it to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4992) for the relief of William E. Lewis, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William E. Lewis, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,106.25, representing loss of Liberty bonds, fourth issue, having a face value of $1,000, plus accrued interest of $106.25, said bonds having been stolen by an employee of the Immigration Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the word "directed," on line 4, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert:

Out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to purchase a Liberty bond of the fourth issue of the face value of $1,000 and to deliver the same, together with $106.25 interest thereon, to William E. Lewis, in place of a bond of similar value belonging to said William E. Lewis, and which was stolen by an employee of the Immigration Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was wondering whether there would be any objection on the part of the Senate to my moving at this time to take up the fortifications appropriation bill and pass it to-night?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the Senator will allow the calendar to be completed.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is any objection, I shall not insist on it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I say that not because I have any interest in any of the rest of the bills, but because I think this may be the last chance to consider the calendar, and I think every Senator ought to have a chance to have his bills considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I recognize that. I do not think it would take 15 minutes to dispose of the fortifications bill, however.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

SAMUEL H. DOLBEAR.

The bill (S. 4694) for the relief of Samuel H. Dolbear was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to issue a warrant for $2,845.37 to Samuel H. Dolbear, payable from the appropriation made by section 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919 (40 Stat. L., p. 1274), and in settlement of the award for the above amount made to said Dolbear by the Secretary of the Interior May 18, 1920.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like some explanation about that bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have looked for the report, but there does not seem to have been any report made; but, according to the very terms of the bill, this is in accordance with an award made to this man under a certain act of Congress.

Mr. KING. I caught just a few words of the bill. My attention was distracted by a conversation with another Senator. May I inquire of the Senator if this is not a bill to pay for alleged damages because of the increase in prices after the contract was let?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not say. It simply says:

Payable from the appropriation made by section 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919, * * * and in settlement of the award for the above amount made to said Dolbear by the Secretary of the Interior May 18, 1920.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, that bill had very careful consideration by the Committee on Mines and Mining, and I am able to give the Senator the information which he seeks with respect to the matter. It aroused the inquiry of every member of the committee; but the facts are substantially these:

This man Mr. Dolbear made a claim under the act referred to for losses sustained in mining operations conducted, as he claimed and established before the commission, upon the request of the Bureau of Mines or other officers of the Government. A certain amount was awarded to him, for which a warrant was issued. He asked for a rehearing of the cause, insisting that he was entitled to an amount greater than that awarded to him by the amount claimed here in the bill reported by the committee. The commission heard his claim with respect to that matter, and he satisfied them that they were wrong in rejecting that portion of his claim upon the original hearing, and they amended their order by making the award in this amount. The Comptroller of the Treasury, however, construed the act to operate so as to prevent him from making more than the one payment on the claim; and this act is intended to give Mr. Dolbear the benefit of the award that was made to him by the commission upon a rehearing of his claim.

Mr. KING. Under what act is the claim made?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is the act which was under consideration here a while ago in connection with the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. ROBINSON).

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if a favorable report was made upon this matter by the department? No report was made when the bill was sent to the Senate, or, at least, it is not in my file.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My recollection is that a report came from the Secretary of the Interior reciting the facts as I have given them to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. There ought to be a report with the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PASQUALE DOLCE.

The bill (H. R. 7573) authorizing payment of compensation to Pasquale Dolce for personal injuries, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to Pasquale Dolce the sum of $1,716 as full compensation for injuries received on May 19, 1919, at Buffalo, N. Y., when he was struck by a truck operated by the United States Army.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to see what the Secretary of War says about this matter. He says he believes this man is entitled to reasonable damages for this injury, together with reimbursement for all expenses incurred by him. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The bill (H. R. 15935) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That bill has been temporarily laid aside.

SITE FOR POST-OFFICE BUILDING, SPRING VALLEY, ILL.

The bill (H. R. 2328) relating to the title to land to be acquired as a site for a post-office building at Spring Valley, Ill., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, in the aquisition, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of a suitable site for a post office at Spring Valley, Ill., pursuant to authority granted by the public building act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., 62d Cong., 3d sess., p. 877), to accept title to land, reserving or excepting all ores or minerals on or in such lands, with the rights of mining the same.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is that a proper restriction in the case of a piece of land on which a post-office building is to be constructed?

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, it appears from the information the committee received that all conveyances of real estate in that locality reserve the mining rights in the underlying ores and minerals, and of course the department can not accept the land with such a restriction without specific authority from Congress. This is a bill of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any objection to the consideration of the bill. I simply thought the restriction was a very unusual one and that if we are going to build a post-office on the ground the Government should not reserve the mineral in the ground to itself, but I have no objection.

Mr. FERNALD. I understand that all the conveyances in that locality have the same restrictions.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CENSUS OF PERSONS IN ARMY AND NAVY.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 251) to authorize payment to members of the Army and Navy who were employed as enumerators during the Fourteenth Decennial Census to take the census of persons in the Army and Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears that in making an enumeration of persons in the Army and Navy for the Fourteenth Decennial Census, in the judgment of the Director of the Census it was impracticable to do otherwise than, with the official sanction of the Army and Navy, employ officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy as enumerators, and that such officers and enlisted men were duly employed to make the enumeration and were promised compensation at the rate of 3 cents for each person enumerated; and

Whereas the vouchers for such compensation have been disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department on the ground that payment thereof was unwarranted; and

Whereas it further appears that in the judgment of the Director of the Census the census of the military and naval forces was taken more accurately by reason of the assurance of compensation to such enumerators than if it had been taken under orders of the War Department: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the appointment of such enumerators be, and the same is hereby, validated and that the moneys appropriated for the Fourteenth Decennial Census are hereby made available for the payment of their services as such enumerators.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall be glad to hear the explanation of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] of this joint resolution. I suggest to him the question of whether he approves of the precedent of double pay; and if we pay these persons who are with the Government, may we not be called upon to pay various other individuals?

The Senator knows that very frequently in the Army officers, as well as privates, do considerable work. Officers engaged in work upon rivers and harbors will want additional pay for the services which they perform as experts, as technicians, and as engineers, in addition to the salaries which they receive from the Government of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I will say, with regard to this measure, that when the census enumeration was about to begin, the matter of enumerating the persons in the Military and Naval Establishments was taken up, and it was found desirable to employ soldiers and sailors for that purpose. After consideration by those in charge on both sides—those in the Army and those in charge of the enumeration—it was felt that they would get a much better enumeration if they were allowed to employ these people and pay them a reasonable amount per name, just as they do in the case of the regular enumerators.

The legal authorities of the Government were consulted informally and decided that it could be done. However, when the vouchers were presented the Comptroller of the Treasury held that the vouchers could not be paid.

It has been recommended by the Director of the Census, and by others interested, that this amount—which does not require an additional appropriation, and which is comparatively small, involving, I believe, about $5,000 in all—be paid to these men. They are paid at the rate of 3 cents per name for making this enumeration, and the census of these establishments has been very accurately taken over a large area of ground; and as these men are very poorly paid for that class of work, it was deemed only fair that they should have this small additional compensation. It amounts to very little in any case, and in the aggregate it only amounts to $5,000.

I hope no objection will be raised, and that the joint resolution may be allowed to pass.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of the joint resolution, but I do want to invite the attention of the Senate to what I conceive to be a very bad precedent.

We have discovered repeatedly within the past few months that employees of the Government are not satisfied with the compensation received under stipulated law and seek employment in other branches of the Government and get double salaries. A short time ago we were discussing the nitrate bill, and it appeared there that salaries were to be paid to officers of the Government for work which they did in connection with the construction and operation of the nitrate plant—a policy which is absolutely vicious—and we are now giving our stamp of approval to a policy which says that employees of the Government may be employed in other branches and receive double compensation. If the compensation which they have in their original employment is inadequate, let us give them an adequate compensation; but to pay double compensation seems to me to be a very bad precedent.

I would object to this bill if it were for only 1 cent just as quickly as I would if it were for $5,000, because of the principle and because of the bad precedent which the bill would establish.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah object?

Mr. KING. No. If the Senate desires to pass it, I shall vote no, as I have been compelled to vote upon a number of bills.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator from West Virginia if there is a favorable report upon the bill from the department? There is no report with my file of bills on the calendar.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The committee did not make a report. I have in my hand, however, a report which was made by the House committee. In order to save printing, I did not have a printed report made.

Mr. SMOOT. This is a Senate joint resolution, not a House joint resolution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The same joint resolution was introduced in the House. They reported a House joint resolution similar to this.

Mr. SMOOT. Has that joint resolution passed the House?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think not. A report accompanied it.

Mr. SMOOT. What does that report show as to the Census Bureau or the department approving the bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Here is a letter from the Director of the Census to the Secretary of Commerce, dated November 18, 1920, in which he said:

When arrangements were being made to take the census of persons in the military and naval service it was absolutely necessary to employ officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy as enumerators, and compensation at the rate of 3 cents for each person enumerated was promised. This arrangement was made after informally consulting some of the legal officials of the department. Upon receipt of the vouchers, however, it developed that it was necessary for the disbursing clerk to refer the matter to the Comptroller of the Treasury for a decision as to whether payment could be legally made. The comptroller, in a decision under date of July 19, 1920, decided that payment of the vouchers in question was not authorized.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator need not read any further.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This compensation was promised these men before they undertook the work, and presumably with authority, and it is to carry out that promise that this authority is now asked. They found it was not authorized by law. It takes no additional money from the Treasury.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 12396) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea," approved March 4, 1915, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10311) to further amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LOUISA FROW.

The bill (S. 3129) for the relief of Louisa Frow was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on line 8, to strike out "$10,000" and to insert "$1,200," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Louisa Frow, widow of John Frow, who was killed as the result of an accident caused by a United States Navy seaplane, the sum of $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRIFFITH E. JOHNSON.

The bill (S. 4637) for the relief of Griffith E. Johnson was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, before the bill is disposed of, I should like to make a little explanation of it.

It covers an item of expense for stenographic work, a report made by Mr. Johnson at the request of the Secretary of War of hearings before the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee. The Secretary of War employed him, expecting to pay him from funds under the control of the Secretary of War, but when he approved the bill the Comptroller of the Treasury refused to pay it upon the ground that it was not a legal claim against that particular appropriation. This left Mr. Johnson high and dry, without compensation for the service which he had rendered at the request of an officer of the Government. His only avenue of relief is through an appropriation made by Congress. The committee felt that it was a very just and meritorious claim, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. As I remember this claim, the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate paid Mr. Johnson for all the work done by him authorized in the resolution giving the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds authority to employ a stenographer. This claim is simply for putting in a carbon copy and furnishing it to the Secretary of War. We paid him for a number of carbon copies besides. The committee thought that the amount that was paid to Mr. Johnson was ample, and it is for that reason, Mr. President, that I ask that this go over now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PHILIP S. EVEREST.

The bill (S. 2838) for the relief of Philip S. Everest was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300, and that the same be paid to Philip S. Everest, superintendent and special disbursing agent Bad River (Wis.) Indian Reservation, in full compensation on account of money expended by him for the benefit of an Indian allottee upon said reservation whose allotment had been erroneously located by said agent through misinformation given to him as to the location of a reservation corner.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERRY E. BORCHERS.

The bill (H. R. 646) for the relief of Perry E. Borchers because of losses suffered, due to destruction of property and termination of contract for services because of smallpox, while in the employ of the Navy Department in Cuba, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Perry E. Borchers, of Tadmor, Ohio, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $346.45, the amount of loss sustained due to the destruction of his personal property while in quarantine and to the loss of his position through termination, by the Navy Department, of his contract for services as superintendent of construction at the United States naval station, Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Mr. KING. I would like to inquire upon what theory the Government of the United States ought to pay a man because he lost his job.

Mr. SPENCER. He is getting nothing because he lost his job. This man was employed for a year, went down to his station in Cuba, was attacked by smallpox, was kept in the hospital for a number of weeks, and was then discharged. He made a claim for his salary, but it was not allowed. The Government took all his belongings, his personal property, his clothes, and, to avoid the danger of contagion, burned them up. This is for the value of his personal property and clothes which were consumed.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator explain the purpose for which he was sent to Cuba, and by whom?

Mr. SPENCER. He was sent there in connection with a construction matter. He was superintendent of construction of the United States naval station. I doubt if there is any legal liability, but the Government burned up everything this man had for fear of contagion, and the committee thought that, so far as his personal belongings were concerned, it was perfectly fair that he should be reimbursed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JOSEPH C. AKIN.

The bill (H. R. 1035) for the relief of the widow of Joseph C. Akin was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Joseph C. Akin, of Dolores,

Montezuma County, Colo., widow of Joseph C. Akin, who, while in the discharge of his duty as a deputy United States marshal, was killed by a band of renegade Ute Indians while he was attempting to arrest one Tse-Ne-Gat, a Ute Indian charged with murder, on the 21st day of February, 1915, the sum of $1,195, on account of the murder of her said husband while in the regular discharge of his duties in the service of the Government of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HERMAN W. SCHALLERT.

The bill (H. R. 6414) for the relief of Herman W. Schallert, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $642.90 to Herman W. Schallert to reimburse him for stamps stolen from the post office at Chaseburg, Wis., on April 23, 1915, while said Schallert was the postmaster of said place.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOONER "WILLIAM H. SUMNER."

The bill (H. R. 8647) for the relief of the owners of the American schooner William H. Sumner was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William C. Reid, managing owner, and other owners of the American schooner William H. Sumner, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,354.57, to reimburse said owners of the American schooner William H. Sumner for damages suffered by their vessel as a result of a collision with the U. S. S. North Dakota off of Cape Henry, Va., on November 21, 1914.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether this claim has been before the Court of Claims?

Mr. SPENCER. I think not. We acted on it in view of this sentence from the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy reported to the committee:

That the responsibility for the collision and the resulting damages to the William H. Sumner rested with the U. S. S. North Dakota, and the claim of the owners of the Sumner in the sum of $2,354.57 is reasonable and just, and should be paid.

Acting on that report of the Secretary of the Navy, we recommended that the claim be paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. E. V. DICKSON.

The bill (H. R. 9840) for the relief of Capt. E. V. Dickson was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Capt. E. V. Dickson, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment United States Infantry, the sum of $474.80, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse the said Capt. E. V. Dickson for the sum of $474.80, United States currency, which was stolen from the said Capt. E. V. Dickson, without fault or neglect on his part, while he was captain, One hundred thirty-second United States Infantry, and acting disbursing officer at St. Maurice, France, and which said sum the said E. V. Dickson has since paid into the Treasury of the United States in discharge of his liability as such disbursing officer.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESERVE AND NATIONAL GUARD OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 4894) to provide longevity pay for reserve officers and National Guard officers serving under orders of the War Department was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FORT BELKNAP RESERVATION LANDS, MONT.

The bill (H. R. 13225), providing for the allotment of lands within the Fort Belknap Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert:

That within one year from the date of approval of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint a commission of three persons, two of whom shall be members of the Gros Ventre and Assiniboine Tribes of Indians and one member an employee of the Interior Department, who shall cause to be prepared, in such manner as they may deem advisable, a complete and final roll, to contain the names of all Indians ascertained to have rights on the Fort Belknap Reservation, Mont. Immediately upon the approval of the said roll which shall be the conclusive and final evidence of the right of any Indian of the reservation to an allotment of land, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to allot pro rata, under rules and regulations and in such areas and classes of lands as may be prescribed by him, among such enrolled Indians all the unreserved and otherwise undisposed-of lands on the Fort Belknap Reservation, which trust patents shall be issued in the names of the said allottees: Provided further, That any names found to be on the said roll fraudulently may be stricken therefrom by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, at any time within one year from the approval thereof, after giving all persons interested a full opportunity to be heard; and the fraudulent allotment shall be canceled and the lands thereof be subject to disposal under the provisions of this act: And provided further, That the land allotted hereunder shall be subject to any tribal leases existing at the date of approval of the said allotments.

Notwithstanding the death of any person duly enrolled as herein provided, allotment shall be made in his or her name as though living, the land embraced in such allotment to pass by descent to the legal heirs of the decedent and be subject to disposition as in the case of lands of other allottees passing upon their death.

SEC. 2. That upon the issuance of the trust patents provided for herein the Indians thus allotted are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States and entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens, and the allottees shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State in which they may reside.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to reserve from allotment lands valuable for the development of water power and such reasonable areas as may be needed for Indian agency, school, religious, cemetery, and administrative purposes, to remain reserved as long as needed, and as long as agency, school, and religious institutions are maintained thereon for the benefit of said Indians. Should any such lands be abandoned said lands so abandoned shall revert to the tribe and become available for allotment or other disposition, and the said Secretary is hereby directed to reserve for park purposes an area not to exceed 640 acres, embracing Mission Canyon in the Little Rockies, and an area not to exceed 160 acres within which is the Snake Butte Spring, and an area not to exceed 40 acres at the head of Big Warm Creek as a site for a sanatorium for the benefit of said tribes of Indians: Provided, That a patent in fee simple for not exceeding 10 acres may be issued to the duly authorized missionary board or other proper authority of any religious organization heretofore engaged in mission or school work on said reservation for such lands thereon (not included in any town site provided for herein) as have heretofore been set apart to such organization and are now used for mission or school purposes, or which any such organization has heretofore made application to have set apart for such purposes: Provided, however, That patent having been heretofore issued for 320 acres to St. Paul's Catholic Mission, it shall not be entitled to receive more than 2½ acres additional under this act.

SEC. 4. That prior to the allotments being made as authorized herein the Secretary of the Interior shall cause an examination to be made by experts of the Geological Survey of all lands of the reservation for the purpose of determining the mineral character thereof; but the surface of any such lands found to be mineral shall be subject to allotment as herein provided, but such mineral shall remain tribal property: Provided, That such coal as may be required for use in connection with the construction and maintenance of the irrigation projects may be reserved for that purpose: Provided further, That lands valuable for timber shall remain tribal property, and any member of the tribes having rights in the said reservation may cut and take away from such lands such timber as he may require for fuel, fencing, or for building.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to reserve and set aside for town-site purposes not more than 80 acres at the present settlement of Lodge Pole, and not to exceed 80 acres at such other locations as he may deem necessary, and to lay out, survey, and plat said tracts into blocks, lots, streets, alleys, parks, and school sites: Provided, That the area reserved for parks and school sites shall not exceed 10 acres in any one town site; and patents shall be issued for such lands to the municipality legally charged with the care and custody of the lands hereby set aside for such purposes. That such town sites shall be appraised and disposed of as provided in section 2381 of the United State Revised Statutes: Provided further, That any person who, at the date when the appraisers commence their work upon the land, shall be an actual resident upon any one such lot and the owner of substantial and permanent improvements thereon, and who shall maintain his or her residence and improvements on such lot to the date of his or her application to enter, shall be entitled to enter, at any time prior to the day fixed for the public sale and at the appraised value thereof, such lot and any two additional lots of which he or she may also be in possession and upon which he or she may have substantial and permanent improvements: And provided further, That before making entry of any such lot or lots the applicant shall make proof, to the satisfaction of the register and receiver of the land district in which the land lies, of such residence, possession, and ownership of improvements, under such regulations as to time, notice, manner, and character of proofs as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That in making their appraisal of the lots so surveyed, it shall be the duty of the appraisers to ascertain the names of the residents upon and occupants of any such lots, the character and extent of the improvements thereon, and the name of the reputed owner thereof, and to report their findings in connection with their report of appraisal, which report of findings shall be taken as prima facie evidence of the facts therein set out. All such lots not so entered prior to the day fixed for the public sale shall be offered at public auction, in their regular order, with the other unimproved and unoccupied lots. That no lot shall be sold for less than $10: And provided further, That said lots, when surveyed, shall approximate 50 by 150 feet in size.

SEC. 6. That the construction of projects for the irrigation of the irrigable lands shall be undertaken as the needs of the Indians shall require, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, and there is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000 for preliminary investigations and surveys to determine the needs of the Indians and for the commencement of such work as may be advisable at this time: Provided, That the cost of all such projects on this reservation, including the Milk River irrigation project, shall be assessed against the lands irrigable under the respective projects in the proportion that each acre of irrigable lands bears to the whole area of irrigable lands under each project, and such assessments shall be reimbursed to the United States and to the tribal fund in such proportion as contributions shall have been made therefrom in not less than 20 annual payments under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, who may fix such operation and maintenance charges which shall be paid as he may direct: Provided further, That the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 277), requiring reimbursement of the cost of the Milk River project from Indian funds, and any other acts or parts thereof in conflict with this proviso is hereby repealed. Unless otherwise paid, these latter charges may be paid from or made a charge upon his individual share of the tribal fund when said fund is available for distribution; and if any allottee shall receive patent in fee to his allotment before the amount so charged against his land has been paid, such unpaid amount shall become and be a lien upon his allotment, of which a record shall be kept in the office of the superintendent of the reservation at the agency; and should any Indian sell any part of his allotment, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the amount of such unpaid charges against the land so sold shall remain a first lien thereon, and may be enforced by the Secretary of the Interior by foreclosure as a mortgage. All expenditures for irrigation work on the Fort Belknap Reservation, Mont., heretofore or hereafter made are hereby declared to be reimbursable under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe and shall constitute a lien against the land benefited, regardless of ownership, and including all lands which have heretofore been sold or patented. All patents or other instruments of conveyance hereafter issued for lands under any irrigation project on the said Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, whether to individual Indians or to purchasers of Indian land, shall recite a lien for repayment of the irrigation charges, if any, remaining unpaid at the time of issuance of such patent or other instrument of conveyance, and such lien may be enforced or, upon payment of the delinquent charges, may be released by the Secretary of the Interior. In the case of lands under any project purchased in the bona fide belief on the part of the purchaser that by his purchase he acquired a right to have water from the project for the irrigation of the land purchased by him in the same manner as the Indian owner, the Secretary may, after notice to the Indians interested, determine the value of the land at the time of the purchase from the Indian, and give to the purchaser or his assigns credit on the charge for construction against the land to the amount of the difference between the price paid and the value as so determined, and shall withhold for the benefit of the tribe from the Indian or Indians of whom the purchase was made an equal amount from any funds which may be due or distributable to them hereunder. Delivery of water to such land may be refused, within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, until all dues are paid: Provided, That no right to water or to the use of any irrigation ditch or other structure on said reservation shall vest until the owner of the land to be irrigated shall comply with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and he is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be deemed reasonable and proper for making effective the foregoing provisions: Provided, however, That in no case shall any allottee be required to pay either construction, operation, or maintenance charges for such irrigation privileges, or any of them, until water has been actually delivered to his allotment.

Nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive any of said Indians of the Fort Belknap Reservation of the use of water appropriated and used by them for domestic purposes or for the necessary irrigation of their lands, or lands claimed and occupied or used by them, or any ditches, dams, flumes, or reservoirs constructed and used by them in the appropriation and use of said water. No Indian shall acquire any priority of right to any of the waters of said reservation as against any other Indian by priority of appropriation to an extent greater than the water necessary to the irrigation of 40 acres.

Every person entitled to allotment on the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation shall before patent is issued designate as a homestead 40 acres of irrigable land or 320 acres of nonirrigable land, already allotted or to be allotted hereunder, which homestead shall remain inalienable during the lifetime of the allottee or the minority of his or her heirs. Designations for minors shall be made by their natural guardians, and in the event that any Indian shall fail to make such designation the Secretary of the Interior shall select for him a homestead, and all patents for such homestead shall recite that they are such.

Any and all minerals, including oil, gas, and lands valuable for the development of water power, granted or to be allotted hereunder, are set aside as tribal property, and such land may be leased or mining permits granted upon the request of the tribal council under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, but no lease shall be made for a longer period than 10 years, but the lessees shall have the right to renewal thereof for a further period of 10 years upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, however, That until the same shall be leased any Indian being the head of a family and having rights on the said reservation may take coal from any of the lands within the same for his own domestic use: And provided further, That at the expiration of 50 years from the date of approval of this act the coal, oil, gas, or other mineral deposits upon or beneath the surface of said allotted or granted lands shall become the property of the individual allottee or his heirs, but the right is reserved to Congress to extend the period within which such reserved tribal rights shall expire.

SEC. 7. That sections 16 and 36 of each township, except such lands in lieu of which thereof as the State has heretofore received indemnity under existing laws, are hereby granted to the State of Montana for school purposes: Provided, however, That for any lands thereof lost to the State by allotment, withdrawal, or otherwise under the provisions of this act, the State may through its proper officers select as indemnity other unoccupied unreserved nonmineral and nonirrigable lands within such reservation, not exceeding two sections in any one township: Provided further, That all such selections by the State must be completed within one year after the approval of this act, and be made with the view to preventing any final conflict between the claims of the State and the allotments and withdrawals provided for herein: And provided further, That the United States shall pay to the Indians of the reservation the sum of $5 an acre for the lands thus granted to the State: And provided further, That all the children, being descendants of Indians entitled to rights on said reservation, shall be permitted to attend the public schools of said State on the same condition as the children of white citizens of said State.

SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $170,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for the lands granted to the State of Montana; and there is hereby appropriated the further sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be required, to be immediately available, to be used in paying the expenses of making the roll, classifications, and allotments hereunder, and such further allotment surveys as are necessary, and in defraying the expenses of the survey, appraisement, and sales of the town sites provided for, the said $50,000 to be reimbursable from the proceeds of the town-site sales or from other tribal funds available or that may become available for such purpose.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is one amendment, Mr. President, on page 20, in the committee amendment, further to safeguard the rights of the Indians, that I wish to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 20, line 24, strike out the word "such," after the word "except," and after the word "which," in the same line, strike out the words "thereof as," and insert, in line 24, after the word "township":

Being nonirrigable and not occupied nor heretofore selected for allotment by any Indian.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendment, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. WALSH of Montana conferees on the part of the Senate.

CEDAR ROAD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 5023) to provide for the closing of Cedar Road between Quincy Street and Shepherd Street NW., in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners are hereby authorized to close Cedar Road between Quincy Street and Shepherd Street NW., in the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPERIMENT VINEYARDS IN CALIFORNIA.

The bill (H. R. 13402) for the purchase of land occupied by experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the Senator withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. I will.

Mr. PHELAN. I understand the matter came up yesterday during my absence in the form of an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill. The matter has been before the Senate during the last two sessions of Congress. It comes from the Agricultural Department and nowhere else. It seems that there are two pieces of land whose purchase is contemplated and not provided for. This is a mere recommendation that they be purchased, so that the Secretary of Agriculture can negotiate. There are no less than 600 varieties of grapes and, according to report I have before me, this is the most valuable vineyard property in the world. In this connection the committee report states as follows:

These experiment vineyards now contain approximately 700 varieties of grape stocks collected from all the vine-growing regions of the world. They constitute the largest and most valuable collection of grape varieties now known to exist. Their value for experimental and scientific purposes can not readily be estimated.

By reason of the adoption and enforcement of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution, the owners of these lands are going out of the business of producing wine grapes and are subdividing their properties and selling them in small tracts. Unless these experiment vineyards are purchased by the United States, the work of 15 years of experimentation by the Department of Agriculture and these valuable collections of grape varieties from all over the world will become a total loss.

The committee is of the opinion that it would be false economy to fail to make the necessary appropriation to acquire these properties, and that, with their acquisition, the work of the department during the past 15 years will be preserved for the benefit of the grape growers of the country and the department will be enabled to carry on experiments for the purpose of developing new uses of wine grapes and discovering new products into which wine grapes can be manufactured, thus probably saving a great industry now threatened with destruction.

Thus it will be seen that if the provision is not made the United States will lose a very valuable experiment station which can not be reproduced, as this represents the work of the Department of Agriculture for 15 years. The bill provides simply that the Secretary of Agriculture shall negotiate for the purchase of the two pieces of land, one in Fresno County and the other in Napa County, 20 acres in each piece, as I remember, for $15,000 each. The department is emphatic in the belief that the 600 varieties of grapes collected over a period of 15 years are an invaluable possession to the Government, and that the property will be lost unless such provision is made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Would it not be unconstitutional for the Government to go into the vineyard business?

Mr. PHELAN. That is one reason why vineyard property is very valuable now to the producers of the country. Not being allowed to use the vines for the purpose of producing grapes from which to make wine, the department by these experimental stations shows how the vicious wine grape may be turned into the innocent and wholesome raisin grape, the currant grape, or table grape. Without the assistance of these experimental vineyards a great injustice will be done. I submit that the United States owes something to the vineyard interests of the country, having destroyed the wine-making business.

Mr. SMOOT. Would not the grape growers of California like to have it destroyed again in the same way that the Government destroyed it with prohibition? I think that grapes are now bringing about three times what they did before prohibition was in force.

Mr. PHELAN. I should be glad to believe that that condition will continue.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the Senator think it will continue?

Mr. PHELAN. I do not know what the new administration will do with respect to the enforcement of the law as to the domestic use of grapes in the manufacture of wine on the premises. That is really the reason, as the Senator knows, why high prices prevail, because there are not enough deputies to go into each residence and arrest the housewife for making good potable wine.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator knows that grapes are taken by everybody who wants to make wine, and that wine is made in perhaps 60 per cent of the homes in California, and not only in California but in most of the Western States. Therefore grapes have advanced in price at least three times what they were before prohibition was in force. I thought that was a very splendid way for the grape grower to be destroyed, when he was enabled to receive higher prices than he ever did before. I thought it brought prosperity to California, a fact which I was delighted to learn.

Mr. PHELAN. I am sorry that the prosperity is predicated upon such a basis. It may not last long.

Mr. SMOOT. Several years ago, when I was listening to the Senator from California plead for the grape growers of California and state that if prohibition was put into force every one of them would be ruined financially, it really touched my heart, and I thought perhaps that would be the result. But when I was in California last August and September I learned from my grape-growing friends there that they were never so prosperous in all their raising of grapes as they have been since prohibition went into effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me that $750 an acre for land is a pretty high price. Does the department recommend this, may I ask the Senator? I see the report that is made here, but I do not observe any recommendation from the department.

Mr. PHELAN. The department has recommended it in letters. I have one here, dated February 18—as late as that—signed by Mr. Corbett, the horticulturist in charge, who warns against the dangers of phylloxera unless the experimental work is maintained.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator to say that this is only an authorization. It is not for the purchase, I understand.

Mr. PHELAN. Let me read the bill. It is very brief. It provides—

That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase and acquire the lands occupied by the department's experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., now maintained under contracts with the owners of said lands: Provided, That the land purchased for the Fresno vineyard shall not exceed 20 acres, at a cost not to exceed $12,000, and for the Oakville vineyard not to exceed 20 acres, at a cost not to exceed $15,000.

The bill has been passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if we authorize the purchase we will have to pay for it. We can not get out of that situation.

Mr. PHELAN. It does not require any appropriation this year.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, if we do not purchase the land, but we will have to appropriate the money for it if we purchase the land, and we might as well know that now.

Mr. PHELAN. I can assure the Senator that it is a departmental measure, and that they desire exceedingly that the transaction be consummated.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object. I think it perfectly useless, though.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase and acquire the lands occupied by the department's experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., now maintained under contracts with the owners of said lands: Provided, That the land purchased for the Fresno vineyard shall not exceed 20 acres at a cost not to exceed $12,000 and for the Oakville vineyard not to exceed 20 acres at a cost not to exceed $15,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 15943) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PAYMENTS DUE RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have not been here all the afternoon and I should like to know what was done with Calendar No. 693, the bill (S. 4898) to amend the transportation act, 1920. It is a bill similar to the House bill that passed the Senate the other day. It ought to be taken from the calendar and indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action was taken and the bill has been indefinitely postponed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Very well.

ELIJAH C. PUTMAN.

The bill (S. 663) fixing the term of service of Elijah C. Putman during the Civil War was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it had better go over.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the Senators to withhold their objection a moment until I can make an explanation. I am satisfied that it is a meritorious bill, although I am not the author of the bill. It was referred to me as a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I obtained a favorable report from the committee and reported it to the Senate.

There is a statute of the United States which provides that any soldier of the Civil War, on the Union side, of course, who served 90 days shall have the privilege of making a homestead entry and making proof without registering and complying with some of the other requirements. It is intended as a reward for veterans of the Civil War.

The beneficiary of the bill, Elijah C. Putman, is still living. The records of the War Department show that he enlisted in the Army during the Civil War and served about 85 days.

Mr. SMOOT. Eighty-one days.

Mr. MYERS. His enlisted service appears to be 9 days short, and he was then discharged because his regiment was disbanded, but the evidence shows that he was mustered in quite a number of days before he was formally enrolled, and that he was really with his regiment, mustered in, and serving considerably more than 90 days. The records of the War Department show that while his formal enlistment simply lacks nine days of the time, he was really with the troops and in service.

This is simply to fix his status and give him the privilege of making a homestead entry upon the same terms as if his enlistment record had actually shown 90 days. He was mustered in and served 90 days, and there is no doubt about that. The War Department records show that and the papers with the committee show it. I think the objection should be withdrawn under the circumstances.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall have to object. There are thousands and tens of thousands of similar cases that occurred right at the close of the war. The men were not in any fighting. They did not pass through any real Army service. I will say to the Senator from Montana that no one can charge me with being niggardly in any way in taking care of the old soldiers.

Mr. MYERS. Oh, no; I think not.

Mr. SMOOT. But I can not go this far. I must object.

Mr. MYERS. But in this particular case the soldier was discharged before the end of the war. His regiment disbanded before the close of hostilities. Does the Senator say there are thousands of cases where soldiers were mustered in and served and were not enlisted as much as 90 days and yet actually served more than 90 days? I think this is a very exceptional case. Does the Senator still insist on his objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. I must insist.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 13044) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to appeal to the Senator not to object to the present consideration of the bill. It is the only bill that I have on the entire calendar, and it contains many of the names that were in bills which passed the Senate last May. It is the only one of the pension bills that we will have this session. The House Members are very eager to get it back. There are many old men and women who helped to save the country from 1861 to 1865 who are praying for the passage of the bill. Many others will come up at the next session upon which the Senator can express his objection by particularizing against pension bills in general. I hope the Senator will be in the Senate many years yet to exercise that function, but I also hope that he will not object to this particular bill, the last one we have, so that we may get it through and settle these cases that have been before the committee so long. I do not wish to wait here another day until we get through with the next appropriation bill and then move to take it up, because there is plenty of time this evening to finish it. I appeal to the Senator to allow us to go ahead and get the bill through and thus let me give my attention to other matters now before the Finance Committee.

Mr. KING. I have been so generous with the Senator to-day in permitting him to pass a very obnoxious pension bill that he ought not to press my generosity too much, but I will ask the Senator what the bill is and how much it carries and how many items are provided for in the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. There are possibly 9,500 altogether, but the Senator must remember that we have not passed a pension bill this session at all and scarcely none at the last session. The bill relates solely to those of the Civil War. The bill which we passed this forenoon related to the other wars.

The cases are, for the most part, like the one I will state. I will give one, almost the first case that is on the list, but I do not know that it is the first one. Here was a man who served in the Army for about three years. Then he had a furlough. As he failed to get back within three days after his furlough, he was marked on the records as a deserter. He enlisted again and served six months, or more than six months, in his second enlistment. Of course, he did not get an honorable discharge in his first enlistment. Under a law which we afterwards passed, that six months' service after desertion would cure the desertion charge. The Pension Office seemed to hold that under that law he must have an honorable discharge from his previous service, which is not the law as we construe it. We believe that where he has an honorable discharge from the second enlistment, it cured the two or three days that he was away when he did not get back to the Army service.

We have many cases similar to that. Here is another case, the very first one that comes in the bill:

It was ascertained, however, that the soldier had been married some time prior thereto—in 1878, I think it was, he was married—and that he had never obtained a legal divorce. His first wife obtained a divorce shortly afterwards; but the ruling of the Pension Bureau was that inasmuch as he did not live in Indiana, I think, where the common-law marriages were recognized, this time would have to be counted out, and that his marriage did not begin until after 1905, when he moved back. Consequently those 22 years of married life before the husband died were not to be counted at all, and the widow was to be considered as not having married him until after 1905, and hence could not receive a pension. There are very many cases of that kind that we attempt to cure by special legislation. So I hope the Senator will allow the bill to be considered and passed.

Mr. KING. Most of these cases, I apprehend, as I understand the Senator, are to remove the charge of desertion from individuals and to put them on the pension roll so that they may draw pensions?

Mr. McCUMBER. This was not a case of real desertion. There were a great many soldiers who deserted and then reenlisted in order to get a bounty, often under other names. We have persistently and consistently refused to grant them any relief. These, however, are cases where there was no desertion really intended, but the soldiers did not look as carefully into that matter as they should have done. It did not make much difference to them at that time what their record was, provided they got an honorable discharge finally when they reenlisted. There are many such cases where it was not necessary to go back to get the charge of desertion removed. I state this as representing two classes of cases that are covered by these private pension bills.

Mr. KING. And this is the last such bill for the session?

Mr. McCUMBER. This is the last such bill for the session.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota has stated that there is only a deficit of two billions of dollars for the new administration to start out with, and I see no reason why we should not create a little further deficit.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13944) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, at the top of page 2, to strike out:

The name of Richard R. Hill, late private unassigned, United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 3, to strike out:
